The proposed instruction assumed that there was evidence tending to prove that the plaintiffs owned and operated the car, whereas there was no evidence of that kind. Moreover, the proposed instruction omitted the element of negligence in operation of the car. Where instructions offered are such that they cannot properly be given without modification, that of itself constitutes a sufficient ground for refusing them. Garlick v. Bowers, 66 Cal. 122, 4 Pac. 1138; Smith v. Richmond, 19 Cal. 477, 485.

The court did not err in refusing the seventh instruction requested by appellant. The subject-matter of that instruction was correctly covered by another instruction given. The exceptions to the rulings of the court on matters of evidence need not be discussed. They refer only to two items, each of which is of minor importance.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SPITZER. (Cr. 867.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 4, 1922. Rehearing Denied June 2, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 3, 1922.)

1. Bigamy $\Leftrightarrow$ 1—No conviction where first marriage alleged was void because of previous valid existing marriage.

If the first marriage alleged in an information charging bigamy be shown to have been void because of a previous valid existing marriage, defendant cannot be convicted.

2. Marriage $\Leftrightarrow$ 50(1)—Uncertified license and certificate of marriage performed by alderman in another state held insufficient to prove marriage.

A photographic copy of a record from the health department of New York City purporting to be a marriage license to which was attached a certificate of marriage by an alderman in that city, though received without objection and uncontradicted, was insufficient to establish the marriage, where the license and certificate were not certified, and there was no evidence as to the genuineness of the alderman's signature or of his authority to perform the ceremony.

3. Marriage $\Leftrightarrow$ 50(1)—Testimony as to solemnization by New York City alderman is of no weight in absence of proof of his authority under New York law.

In the absence of proof under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1900-1902, that under the laws of New York an alderman, who is not vested under Civ. Code, § 70, with authority to solemnize a marriage, has such authority in that state, testimony as to the performance of a marriage ceremony by such an official in New York City is of no weight in establishing such solemnization, as required by section 55; the laws of New York being deemed the same as those of California in the absence of proof to the contrary.

4. Marriage $\Leftrightarrow$ 40(4) — The presumption of lawful marriage from general repute and parties' department is overcome where it is shown that marriage was solemnized by officer not vested with such authority.

Assuming that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 30, it will be presumed from general repute and the fact that a man and woman deport themselves as husband and wife that they have entered into a lawful contract of marriage, under Civ. Code, §§ 55 and 70, such presumption is overcome where the evidence conclusively shows that the marriage was solemnized by a city alderman, who, under section 70, is not vested with authority to act in such capacity.

5. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 1141(2)—Appellant must affirmatively show error relied on for reversal.

Appellant must affirmatively show the error on which he asserts his claim for reversal.

6. Bigamy $\Leftrightarrow$ 8—Decree annulling previous marriage for reasons not stated held inadmissible in absence of complaint.

In a prosecution for bigamy, a decree annulling the first marriage alleged on the wife's complaint, the allegations of which the court found were true, without further explanations disclosing whether the marriage was void from the beginning for any reasons specified in Civ. Code, §§ 59-61, or merely voidable under section 82, was inadmissible on the question of defendant's guilt or innocence of the crime charged, where the complaint was not offered or introduced in evidence, though the decree declared the marriage void; such declaration relating to the date of the decree only.

7. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 1171(3)—Argument questioning genuineness of uncertified license and marriage certificate held not prejudicial to defendant in prosecution for bigamy, even if unjustified.

In a prosecution for bigamy, the district attorney's argument questioning the genuineness of an uncertified photographic copy of a marriage license and certificate of defendant's marriage to one whom he claimed was his lawful wife when the first marriage alleged in the information was contracted, and referring to the possibility of preparing a document for the purpose of having it photographed and used as evidence, held not prejudicial to defendant even if the observation were not justified by the character of such document; the latter being of no value as evidence.

8. Criminal law ⚡806(3)—Instruction omitting requirement as to reasonable doubt held not erroneous in view of instructions given.

In a prosecution for bigamy, where the court fully instructed the jury to acquit if they found that defendant was married to one not named in the information when the first marriage therein alleged was contracted, and if they had a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, and fully instructed them as to the meaning of reasonable doubt and the application thereof to the evidence, an instruction to convict if they found defendant was not married to such person, but was married to the person named in the indictment when he contracted the alleged bigamous marriage, was not erroneous as omitting to tell the jury that they should give defendant the benefit of any reasonable doubt; it being unnecessary to repeat the meaning, effect, and application of such term in each instruction, all of which could be considered together.

On Petition for Rehearing.

9. Criminal law ⚡1186(4) — Conviction of bigamy not set aside for failure of proof of second marriage where no objection was made to proof offered and defense was based on another fact.

In a prosecution for bigamy, where defendant made no objection to proof of the alleged bigamous marriage, but offered to stipulate as to that fact, and based his defense on the fact that at the time of such marriage he was the lawful husband of one not named in the information to whom he was married prior to the first marriage alleged, the conviction will not be set aside where such prior marriage, which, had it been established, would have constituted a technical defense, was not proven; there being no miscarriage of justice as required by Const. art. 6, § 4½.

10. Criminal law ⚡1139 — Appellant cannot complain of court's failure to refer to foreign statutes for failure to prove provisions of which reversal was denied.

One convicted of bigamy cannot complain that his appeal was denied on the technical ground that he failed to establish the fact of a lawful marriage in another state prior to the first marriage alleged in the information, or of the court's failure to refer to the statutes of such state, which were readily obtainable and could have been easily produced had he deemed it necessary; the appellate court having no power to seek from outside sources evidence omitted from the record.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

Emil Spitzer was convicted of bigamy, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Marmaduke, John L. Richardson, and T. E. Parke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment pronounced upon his conviction of the crime of bigamy.

The offense, as alleged in the information, was that he did knowingly and unlawfully marry one Marie Marjorie Sims, at which time he was the lawful husband of Edith C. Spitzer.

His chief defense is that he was never lawfully married to Edith C. Spitzer, as alleged in the information; the reason therefor being that at the time of the admitted marriage ceremony had with her he was the lawful husband of one Mary Truell Spitzer, to whom he had been married in the state of New York on July 26, 1905.

[1] It seems to be the law that, if the first marriage alleged in an information charging the crime of bigamy be shown to have been void because of a previous valid existing marriage, the defendant cannot be convicted thereunder. Commonwealth v. McGrath, 140 Mass. 297, 6 N. E. 515; State v. Sherwood, 68 Vt. 414, 35 Atl. 352; People v. Mock Yick Gar, 14 Cal. App. 334, 111 Pac. 1039. As said in Lane v. State, 82 Miss. 555, 34 South. 353:

"The rule is thoroughly settled that one indicted for bigamy must be acquitted on that indictment if he can show that the first marriage alleged in the indictment is void by reason of the existence of a prior lawful marriage, still existing."

We are therefore confronted with the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the marriage of defendant to Mary Truell in the state of New York, which fact, if established, would, under the authorities cited, have entitled defendant to an acquittal of the offense charged in the information, and the court so instructed the jury.

[2] To establish this fact defendant offered, and there was received in evidence without objection, a photographic copy of a record from the department of health of the city of New York which purported to be that of a marriage license issued to Emil Spitzer and Mary Truell, to which was attached a marriage certificate showing that he and Mary Truell were married in that state by Max S. Grifenhagen, alderman, on July 26, 1905. In addition to this, the testimony of Mary Truell Spitzer and that of Herman Truell, by deposition, was likewise without objection received in evidence, together with the testimony of defendant himself, all of which was to the effect that Emil Spitzer and Mary Truell were married in New York on the date mentioned, on which occasion the marriage ceremony was performed by Max S. Grifenhagen, alderman. While received without objection on the part of the people and uncontradicted, the evidence is insufficient to establish the marriage. The documentary evidence, consisting of the purported copy of the marriage license and certificate, is not certified; neither is there any evidence whatsoever as to the genuineness of the signature of Grifenhagen attached thereto, nor of his authority to perform the marriage ceremony, without which it possessed no evidentiary value. As said by the Supreme Court in discussing a like question:

"A marriage certificate does not prove itself. Proof of the signature of the person by whom it purports to have been signed and of his authority to perform the marriage ceremony is necessary." "It must be shown that the person who solemnized the marriage was one having authority so to do (26 Cyc. 358), and a paper purporting to be a marriage certificate signed by one purporting to be authorized by the laws to solemnize the marriage is not competent evidence of the marriage unless accompanied by proof that the person making the certificate was in fact authorized to solemnize such marriage." See People v. Le Doux, 155 Cal. 548, 102 Pac. 523, and cases therein cited.

[3] While the testimony of defendant himself and that by deposition of Mary Truell and Herman Truell is that the marriage ceremony was performed by Grifenhagen as alderman, there is no evidence whatever that he, by virtue of his official position as alderman, was authorized to solemnize a marriage any more than could a policeman of the city of New York. It may be true that as such official he was, under the laws of New York, vested with authority so to do, but in the absence of proof to the contrary—and there is none—the laws of New York are deemed the same as the laws of California. O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 153 Cal. 502, 95 Pac. 873, 96 Pac. 323; Fox v. Mick, 20 Cal. App. 599, 129 Pac. 972. Section 55, Civil Code, provides that "consent alone will not constitute marriage; it must be followed by a solemnization authorized by this Code"; and section 70, Civil Code, which designates the officials vested with authority to solemnize a marriage, does not include one occupying the position of alderman, and hence, since he possessed no authority to act in such capacity, the marriage so solemnized must be deemed a nullity. If it be true that under the laws of the state of New York an alderman is vested with authority to officiate at a marriage, then defendant should have established such fact by proof of the existence of such law in the manner provided by sections 1900, 1901, and 1902, Code of Civil Procedure. The testimony was entitled to no weight in support of the claim that defendant was married to Mary Truell.

[4] In her deposition Mary Truell testified that after the solemnization of the marriage between defendant and herself by Grifenhagen, an alderman, they for three years lived and cohabited together and held themselves out to the public as husband and wife. While not argued, this fact, since it is declared by subdivision 30 of section 1963, Code of Civil Procedure, that "a man and woman deporting themselves as husband and wife" are presumed to "have entered into a lawful contract of marriage," constitutes some evidence tending to show that she and defendant had been legally married as claimed. It was upon this theory, namely, that a marriage might be shown by general repute alone, that the language of the court cited by appellant from People v. Mock Yick Gar, 14 Cal. App. 334, 111 Pac. 1039, was used. The presumption, however, is a disputable one. Hence, assuming that under subdivision 30 of section 1963 it will be presumed from general repute and the fact that a man and woman deport themselves as husband and wife that they have entered into a lawful contract of marriage pursuant to the provisions of sections 55 and 70 of the Civil Code, such presumption in the instant case is overcome by the fact that the evidence conclusively shows that the solemnization of the marriage between defendant and Mary Truell and under and pursuant to which they lived together as husband and wife was solemnized by an alderman, who, under the provisions of the law applicable to the case, is not a person or officer vested with authority to act in such capacity.

[5, 6] The information charging defendant with the offense was filed on January 28, 1921. It appears that on October 5, 1921, but prior to defendant's trial, a decree of annulment of the marriage between defendant and Edith C. Spitzer had been rendered in an action therefor brought by the latter. This was offered in evidence by defendant, and an objection thereto sustained. This ruling is assigned as prejudicial error. The decree, giving the title of the case, recites:

"This cause came on to be heard * * * upon the amended complaint and answer thereto, in which said amended complaint plaintiff sought to have the marriage between plaintiff and defendant annulled, and, evidence having been introduced in support of said amended complaint, the court now makes its findings of fact and decision as follows: That the allegations contained in said amended complaint are true, and that a judgment annulling said marriage between plaintiff and defendant should be granted."

Whereupon the court declared the marriage between Edith C. Spitzer and defendant null and void. Since the amended complaint, the allegations of which the court found to be true, was not offered or introduced in evidence, it cannot be said upon what ground the decree of annulment was granted. The decree does not disclose that the marriage by defendant with Edith was void for any reason specified in sections 59, 60, or 61 of the Civil Code, which declare the marriage of the persons therein designated void from the beginning; indeed, for aught that appears to the contrary, the marriage to Edith was merely voidable at her instance under the provisions of section 82 of the Civil Code, wherein are set forth six causes upon the establishment of any one of which an aggrieved party may avoid the marriage. It devolves upon an appellant who asks for a reversal of a judgment to affirmatively show the error upon which he asserts such claim. While the decree, for reasons not disclosed, declares the marriage void, such declaration has relation to the date of such decree only. It does not purport to be a judicial determination that the marriage was void from its beginning or at the time when defendant is alleged to have committed the offense, and hence evidence of such decree could not affect the question of his guilt or innocence of the crime with which he was charged.

[7] Complaint is made on account of the alleged misconduct of the district attorney when in his argument he referred to the documentary evidence, consisting of the uncertified photographic copy of the license and certificate, and wherein he questioned its genuineness, and referred to the fact that it was possible to prepare a document for the purpose of having it photographed and used as evidence. We cannot say the observation was not justified by the character of the document so introduced. Moreover, since, as stated, it was of no value as evidence, anything said by the district attorney calculated to discredit or destroy its force was futile, and hence it could in no event have been prejudicial to defendant.

[8] Error is also predicated upon an instruction of the court to the effect that, if the jury found that defendant was not married to Mary Truell Spitzer, but was married to Edith C. Spitzer, and that while so married to the latter he married Marjorie G. Spitzer, then they must find the defendant guilty of bigamy as charged in the information. The objection to the instruction is that it omitted telling the jury therein they should give defendant the benefit of any reasonable doubt arising upon the evidence. It elsewhere appears in the instructions that the court fully instructed the jury to the effect that defendant was entitled to be acquitted if they found that he was, as claimed, married to Mary Truell, and that, if upon the evidence they had a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, then it was their duty to acquit defendant. They were fully instructed as to the meaning of a reasonable doubt and as to the application thereof to the evidence in considering their verdict. Instructions should be considered together as a whole, and it was not necessary to repeat in each instruction given the meaning, effect, and application of the term "reasonable doubt."

There is no merit in the errors of law complained of, and, for the reasons given, the evidence was insufficient to establish the existence of a marriage between defendant and Mary Truell.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: CONREY, P. J.

I concur in the judgment: JAMES, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Aided by other counsel, defendant's attorney has filed a petition herein for a rehearing. Among the grounds urged in support of his contention that the case should be further considered, and the only one we deem necessary to notice, is that of a variance by reason of which the second marriage alleged in the information, and the contracting of which constitutes the offense, was not established, which point, it is conceded, was not presented or argued at the hearing of the appeal.

The information charged that Emil Spitzer, on or about January 1, 1921, did knowingly marry one Marie Marjorie Sims, at which time he was the lawful husband of Edith C. Spitzer. In proof of the marriage to Marie Marjorie Sims, a witness was called who testified that her name was Marjorie Sims; that she knew the defendant, Emil Spitzer, and thereupon she was shown a certified copy of a marriage certificate wherein the name of the groom, as stated therein, was Emanuel Spetzer, and that of the bride was Marjorie Goldie Sims, and wherein it was certified by Henry M. Miller, as justice of the peace of Burbank township, that Emanuel Spetzer and Marjorie Goldie Sims were joined in marriage by him in accordance with the laws of California on January 1, 1921. The witness testified that she was the Marjorie Goldie Sims referred to in the certificate, and upon being asked, "You went to the county clerk's office, did you, to obtain the original marriage license of which this is a certified copy?" replied, "I did." Whereupon counsel for defendant said: "We will stipulate to all that, Mr. Van Cott, if you desire." She further testified that after obtaining the marriage license she was, in the presence of two witnesses, married to defendant by Justice Miller at the city of Glendale, Cal., and thereafter she and defendant lived together as husband and wife. Not only was there no objection to any part of this testimony, but counsel for defendant, in opening his case, stated to the jury that his defense would be based upon the fact that at the time defendant went through the marriage with Marjorie Sims he was then in fact the lawful husband of one Mary Truell Spitzer, to whom, in the city of New York, he was married in 1904, and who was at all times the lawful wife of defendant, and therefore, since at the time of the marriage to Marjorie Sims he had a lawful wife, he could not be guilty of marrying the former. Not only was this defense the theory upon which the case was tried, but, as shown by the testimony and proceedings from which we have quoted, the second marriage alleged in the information was conceded. As to the identity of Marie Marjorie Sims and Emil Spitzer, mentioned in the information, with Marjorie Goldie Sims and Emanuel Spetzer, who were married, there appears to be no question.

[9] Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution provides that—

"No judgment shall be set aside * * * for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

It is apparent from an examination of the evidence that no miscarriage of justice resulted from the trial, and while, as held in the main opinion, the New York marriage to Mary Truell, had it been established, would have constituted a technical defense, nevertheless, since it was not proven, defendant must upon this record be deemed guilty as charged.

[10] Counsel for defendant bitterly complain that the appeal of their client for a reversal is denied upon the technical ground that he failed, in accordance with well-recognized rules of evidence, to establish the fact of the New York marriage, and the failure of this court to refer to the New York statutes, readily obtained and which he says were "within a block of the trial court room," and which, had he deemed necessary, he could have easily produced, is severely criticized. This court, as we understand it, has no power on appeal to seek from outside sources evidence omitted from the record. Moreover, since defendant invokes the technical defense that, instead of two wives only, he had three, his complaint that he is the victim of what his counsel is pleased to term a technical rule of law, comes with ill grace.

PEOPLE v. SPAGNOLI. (Cr. 624.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 19, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1922.)

1. Criminal law §395—Trial court need not inquire into means by which competent evidence is produced by prosecution.

The prosecution may introduce, where otherwise competent appliances used by defendant in the unlawful manufacture of intoxicating liquor, although claimed by him to have been seized contrary to statute, since the court need not inquire into the means by which competent evidence is produced.

2. Criminal law §1134(10)—Denial of defendant's motion to return property seized by prosecution not reviewed on appeal.

Denial of defendant's motion for return of property claimed illegally taken from him will not be reviewed on appeal from conviction, though such property was used as evidence on the trial.

3. Criminal law §1173(2)—Refusal to instruct as to defendant's purpose not error, in absence of evidence that liquor was manufactured for use other than as beverage.

Where there was no evidence that liquor was manufactured for use other than as a beverage, it was not error to refuse a charge that it must be found defendant manufactured for beverage purposes before he could be found guilty.

4. Intoxicating liquors §222—Indictment for unlawful manufacture of intoxicating liquor, need not negative purposes of manufacture excepted as lawful.

Where an ordinance prohibits the manufacture of liquor except for certain enumerated purposes, and the exceptions are no part of the definition of the offense, they need not be negated in the information; it being sufficient to follow the general language of the ordinance.

5. Intoxicating liquors §13, 132—Counties may adopt ordinance prohibiting liquor traffic.

It is competent for county supervisors to adopt ordinances prohibiting traffic in intoxicating liquors.

6. Criminal law §329—Burden upon defendant to establish defense peculiarly within his knowledge, notwithstanding burden is upon people to establish guilt.

In a prosecution for unlawful manufacture of intoxicating liquors, burden of proof is upon accused, desiring to excuse the manufacture, to show he had a permit from United States Revenue Department, since this defense of matters peculiarly within defendant's knowledge and the burden of its proof is an exception to the general rule that burden is upon prosecution to establish guilt.

7. Intoxicating liquors §239(2)—Instruction held proper information, charging unlawful manufacture of wine and "Jackass brandy," notwithstanding evidence showed only manufacture of crude brandy.

Where the information charged the unlawful manufacture of "wine and Jackass brandy," the court, over defendant's objection that because Jackass brandy was not a liquor known to law the information charged but the one offense of manufacturing wine properly instructed that proof of manufacture of "any one of the intoxicating liquors described" would support a conviction, as the evidence afforded an inference that the wine was by a continuous process converted into a crude liquor sometimes referred to as "Jackass brandy," and this manufacture, although involving two kinds of liquor, one of which may have been inaccurately described, was a single offense not necessitating two separate verdicts, as required by Pen. Code, § 954, where separate offenses are charged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Giacomo Spagnoli was convicted of manufacturing intoxicating liquors under Tuolumne County Ordinance No. 107, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Curtin, of Sonora, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. The defendant was convicted of the violation of a county ordinance, commonly known as the "Little Volstead Act," and he appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. The charging part of the information is as follows:

"The said named defendant did on or about the 8th day of August, 1921, at and in the said county of Tuolumne, state of California, then and there willfully and unlawfully and in violation of Ordinance No. 107 of the county of Tuolumne, being an ordinance prohibiting the sale, manufacture or unlawful possession or transportation of intoxicating liquors and providing penalties for violation thereof, passed by the board of supervisors of Tuolumne county on the 15th day of March, 1921, manufacture certain intoxicating liquor, to wit, wine and Jackass brandy then and there containing one-half of 1 per cent. or more of alcohol by volume, which was then and there fit for use for beverage purposes."

Section 1 of said ordinance provides:

"When used in this ordinance the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor' shall be construed to include alcohol, brandy, whisky, rum, gin, beer, ale, porter and wine, and in addition thereto any spirituous, vinous, malt, or fermented liquor, liquids and compounds, whether medicated, proprietary, patented or not and by whatever name called, containing one-half of one per centum or more of alcohol by volume which are fit for use for beverage purposes."

In section 2 we find this provision:

"No person shall manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish or possess any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in this ordinance, and all the provisions of this ordinance shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented."

[1, 2] A large part of the brief of appellant is devoted to a learned discussion of the action of the trial court in denying his motion to order the return to him of the appliances for the manufacture of liquor and the liquor itself, which were taken from his possession under a search warrant, and in permitting these objects to be introduced in evidence. It is claimed with substantial reason that the proceedings which resulted in the seizure of the property were not in accordance with the requirements of the statute, and a formidable array of authorities is presented to the effect that what is thus obtained should not be received in evidence. We are, however, spared the duty of following the argument, since the question has been unequivocally decided against appellant's contention by the Supreme Court of this state in People v. Mayen (Cal. Sup.) 205 Pac. 435. Therein it was squarely held that where competent evidence is produced at a trial the court will not stop to inquire from what source it came or the means by which it was obtained, and that the action of the trial court in denying an application of the defendant for the return of papers or other property claimed to have been illegally taken from him and later used as evidence over his objection will not be reviewed on appeal from a judgment of conviction of a criminal charge.

[3] The next objection of appellant is that the court erred in refusing to give the following proposed instruction:

"The manufacture of intoxicating liquor is not unlawful as the law provides for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for medicinal and sacramental purposes, and it therefore must be made in order to be sold for either of said purposes. The manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes is unlawful, and it is for you to determine from the evidence in this case whether any intoxicating liquor was manufactured by defendant, and you must find from the evidence and believe beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendant manufactured intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes before a verdict of guilty can be found against the defendant."

Appellant claims that—

The refusal of the instruction was error, "unless Ordinance No. 107, under which this action is prosecuted, does make it a crime to manufacture intoxicating liquor. The ordinance so provides, but in so doing we say this ordinance is void."

The declaration of appellant as to the scope of said ordinance is entirely too sweeping. It does not prohibit the manufacture of liquor for all purposes. Indeed, certain permissible uses are designated for the manufacture of liquor fit for beverage purposes. And it may be said that, in view of the various sections of the ordinance considering its declaration that its provisions are to be liberally construed "to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented," it is not an unreasonable construction to hold that the manufacture for such purpose is what was intended to be prohibited. If so, the proposed instruction embodied a correct principle of law, and might well have been given. The Attorney General, however, thinks that—

"It was covered by the two instructions which appear on page 25, Transcript."

As to this he is clearly in error. The first of the instructions to which he thus refers simply states in the language of the information the offense charged against the defendant, and the second, the familiar principle that the burden is upon the prosecution to establish beyond a reasonable doubt every material allegation constituting the offense. But these do not cover the point, for the reason that the information does not allege that the liquor was manufactured for beverage purposes. However, upon the theory that such was the intention of the board of supervisors and that the proposed instruction, abstractly considered, involves a sound legal principle, the refusal of the court to give it was entirely without prejudice. This follows for the reason that there was no evidence whatever that the liquor was manufactured for any purpose other than for its use as a beverage. All the evidence upon the subject shows that it was used as a beverage, and such use justifies the inference that it was manufactured for that purpose, and no other inference is possible. The instruction therefore was not applicable to any theory supportable by the evidence, and hence it could have been of no assistance to the jury if it had been given.

As to the information, if we concede that it was defective in the respect indicated, appellant suffered no prejudice thereby. Indeed, he urged no such ground at the trial, and the evidence of the use of the liquor was received without objection as though such purpose had been alleged. In this connection it is sufficient to refer to People v. Johnson (Cal. App.) 207 Pac. 257, and People v. Bonfanti, 40 Cal. App. 614, 181 Pac. 80.

[4] Moreover, it is clear that the ordinance prohibits the manufacture of the liquor except for certain purposes therein enumerated. The exceptions are no part of the definition of the offense, and hence they need not be negatived in the information; it being sufficient to follow the general language of the ordinance condemning the manufacture of said liquor. Matter of Application of Lieritz, 166 Cal. 298, 135 Pac. 1129, and cases cited.

[5] That it is competent for the board of supervisors to pass such ordinance is in our opinion settled by the authorities. People v. Tomasovich (Cal. App.) 206 Pac. 119.

[6] Complaint is made of the action of the court in directing the jury that the burden of proof was upon the defendant to show that he had a permit from the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue or from the United States Internal Revenue Department if he desired to excuse the manufacture of said liquor. The general rule is, as contended for by appellant, that the burden of proof is upon the prosecution to establish every element of the crime and to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, but there is a well-recognized exception in cases of this character where the fact is peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant. Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 1, § 79; People v. Boo Doo Hong, 122 Cal. 606, 55 Pac. 402; People v. T. Wah Hing (Cal. App.) 190 Pac. 662.

[7] Appellant complains that the court erred in giving this instruction:

"You are further instructed that it is not necessary that the people prove the manufacture of all of the intoxicating liquors described in the information. It is sufficient if the people prove beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty and to your entire satisfaction that the defendant did in the manner alleged in the information manufacture any one of the intoxicating liquors described in the said information. And if you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, that the defendant did as alleged in the information manufacture any one of the items of intoxicating liquors described therein, it is your duty to find the defendant guilty as charged in the information."

It is not disputed that by virtue of section 954 of the Penal Code it was permissible to charge two offenses in the same information, but the principal objection of appellant to the instruction, as we understand his position, is this: The information really charges only one offense, that is, the manufacture of wine, since "Jackass brandy" is not a liquor known to the law, and there was no evidence of the manufacture of any wine. But it is a fair inference from the testimony that the defendant made wine from raisins, and afterwards converted by distillation this wine or "raisin mash" into a crude brandy, containing the prohibited percentage of alcohol. It is true that the expert witness testified that there is no such liquor known to the chemical profession or the school of pharmacy as Jackass brandy, but he also testified that he believed the term was applied to crude brandy. The Attorney General also claims that the court should take judicial notice of the fact that this expressive term is in general use to designate a particularly vicious brand of liquor, but be that as it may, it is so defined in the information as to bring it within the prohibition of the ordinance, and the significant feature of the information and the evidence is that it was shown to be "brandy" containing a very large percentage of alcohol, and it seems entirely immaterial whether the district attorney was accurate in the use of the other qualifying term.

We may add that there is justification for the view that the information was framed upon the theory—and the evidence supports it—that the manufacture of the liquor was a continuing and uninterrupted process resulting in the production of wine and then of brandy. As thus contemplated, the act of defendant really constituted but one offense, although involving the manufacture of two kinds of liquor. In that aspect the case is somewhat analogous to People v. Oppenheimer, 156 Cal. 733, 106 Pac. 74, and cases cited therein, and People v. Steelik (Cal. Sup.) 203 Pac. 78. It would follow that the jury was not in error in finding a verdict of guilty of the offense charged in the information instead of finding two separate verdicts as required by said section 954 where separate offenses are charged. But, at any rate, if the information be regarded as charging two offenses, there was no objection made to the form of the verdict at the time it was rendered, and we would consider the informality as having been waived and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the accused.

We think there is no merit in the claim that the evidence is insufficient to show that the defendant manufactured liquor which contained the prohibited percentage of alcohol.

One Henry Reitz, who was stopping with the defendant, testified positively as an eyewitness to the acts of defendant resulting in the manufacture of brandy. He detailed the process at great length, and we have no reason to say that his testimony is incredible. Several witnesses testified as to the possession by defendant of a "still," and one O. J. Mouron, an expert pharmacist, made an analysis of two samples of the liquor taken from the tent of defendant, and testified that one contained approximately 32½ and the other, 18 per cent. of alcohol.

Indeed, after a consideration of the entire record, we think it may be justly said that the objections of appellant are quite technical, and that he was fairly tried and legally convicted.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

57 Cal. App. 623

WARD v. MASSACHUSETTS BONDING & INS. CO. (Civ. 2408.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 5, 1922.)

1. Attachment ⚡349—Complaint held sufficient to state cause of action on attachment bond.

A complaint on an attachment bond, alleging commencement and nature of the action and amount sued for, issuance of attachment, and sheriff's levy thereunder, execution of bond sued on, release of attachment, appropriation of property attached to attachment defendant's own use, and value thereof, recovery of judgment against attachment defendants which was unsatisfied, execution thereon, and refusal to redeliver property attached or pay judgment, such conversion of property to attachment defendants' use as rendered it valueless, their surrender of all interest therein, return of execution unsatisfied, and defendant's refusal to pay the judgment on plaintiff's demand, held to state a cause of action.

2. Attachment ⚡348—Attachment defendant not necessary party to action on bond.

In an action on an attachment bond, reciting the surety's undertaking and promise that, if plaintiff recovered judgment, the attachment defendants would redeliver the attached property to the proper officer to be applied to payment of the judgment or pay the whole value thereof, it was not necessary to join the attachment defendant as a party defendant, though she was the principal in the execution of such undertaking, it appearing plainly from the language thereof that the surety's promise imposed a several as well as a joint liability, in which case the surety may be sued separately, under Code Civ. Proc. § 383.

3. Principal and surety ⚡59—Surety's liability does not extend beyond terms of contract.

The liability of sureties does not extend beyond the terms of their contract.

4. Pleading ⚡214(3) — Allegations of complaint taken as true on demurrer.

Allegations of the complaint, in an action on an attachment bond, as to the value of the property and the amount of the judgment against the attachment defendant, must be taken as true on demurrer.

5. Attachment ⚡349—Surety held liable under bond for amount of judgment, not exceeding value of attached property, though plaintiff demanded only the amount of the judgment.

In an action on an attachment bond, reciting the surety's undertaking and promise that, if plaintiff recovered judgment, attachment defendant would redeliver the attached property, or "will on demand pay to the plaintiff the full value of the property released, not exceeding the amount of such judgment," where the complaint alleged that the value of the property was $2,000, and the amount of the judgment $1,287.50, the surety was required to pay any amount recovered, not exceeding $2,000, though plaintiff demanded of the attachment defendant and the surety only "the amount of said judgment," and it was not necessary for him to allege that the surety or such defendants knew the value of the property, proper practice being for the judgment creditor to demand redelivery of the property or payment of the amount of the judgment requiring the judgment debtor to object to the amount demanded if he believed it to be in excess of the value of the property.

6. Attachment ⚡349—Allegation in complaint on bond as to offer to return attached property held not available as defense in view of allegations showing impossibility of performance.

An allegation of the complaint on an attachment bond that the attachment defendants and the surety served a written notice offering to return the attached property to the sheriff, in compliance with the surety's undertaking, held surplusage, and ineffective as a defense,

In view of other allegations that attachment defendants failed to redeliver the property, had converted it to their own use in such manner as to render it valueless, and parted with all interest therein; the context of such complaint revealing such notice as containing an idle and simulated offer to do what was impossible of performance, though the parties may show at the trial that they did have the ability to perform, and that the offer was made in good faith, in which case the surety would be exonerated.

7. Attachment — 345—Offer to return attached property must be made in good faith, and with present ability to perform.

To be effective as a defense to an action on an attachment bond, an offer to return the attached property or pay the judgment must be made in good faith, and with present ability to perform.

8. Attachment — 345—Offer to return or return of part only of attached property is no compliance with undertaking to redeliver or pay value thereof.

An offer by attachment defendants and the surety on their bond to return the attached property, or the return of a part only thereof, is no compliance with the obligation of an undertaking to redeliver the property to the proper officer or pay plaintiff the full value thereof, not exceeding the amount of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Ward against the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for appellant.

John A. Wall, of Mariposa, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from a judgment of dismissal entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the third amended complaint. After an allegation of the corporate capacity of defendant, the complaint proceeds in the second paragraph:

"That on or about the 10th day of March, 1916, Charles Ward, plaintiff herein, commenced an action in the superior court of Mariposa county, state of California, in which he was plaintiff, and Mrs. M. C. McIntyre, whose true name is Nettie C. McIntyre, * * * J. C. Yancey, * * * were defendants; that said action was brought by said plaintiff against said defendants to recover the sum of $1,154.60 upon an account for labor of men and teams, hay and grain furnished, and freighting done, all at the special instance and request of said defendants, and for interest thereon from the 1st day of November, 1915, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and costs of suit.

"That on or about the 10th day of March, 1916, a writ of attachment was duly issued in said action, and in said month duly levied by the sheriff of Mariposa county upon certain property, to wit, a lot of gold-bearing ore in an ore bin, the property of said defendant. That on or about the 16th day of March, 1916, the said Nettie C. McIntyre, as principal, and the said Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company, a corporation, as surety, executed a written undertaking in words and figures as follows: 'In the Superior Court of the County of Mariposa, State of California. Charles Ward, Plaintiff, v. M. C. McIntyre, J. C. Yancey, and John Doe, Defendants. Whereas, the above-named plaintiff commenced an action in the superior court of the county of Mariposa, state of California, against the above-named defendants, claiming that there was due to said plaintiff from said defendants the sum of $1,154.60 or thereabouts, and thereupon an attachment issued against the property of said defendants as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that might be recovered therein, and certain property and effects of the said defendants have been attached and seized by the sheriff of the said Mariposa county under and by virtue of said writ; and whereas, the said defendants are desirous of having said property released from said attachment: Now, therefore, the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company, * * * in consideration of the premises, and also in consideration of the release from said attachment of the property attached, as above mentioned, does hereby undertake in the sum of $2,310, and promise that, in case the plaintiff recovers judgment in the action, defendant will on demand redeliver the attached property so released to the proper officer, to be applied to the payment of the judgment, or will on demand pay to the plaintiff the full value of the property released, not exceeding the amount of such judgment.'"

In the third paragraph it is alleged:

"That, subsequent to the execution and delivery of said bond, as aforesaid, and the release of said attachment, said defendants Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey appropriated to their own use all of the property so attached by said sheriff; that the value of the property at the time it was so attached, as aforesaid, and at the time it was released to said defendants upon the filing and approval of said undertaking, was in excess of the sum of $2,000. That upon the filing of said undertaking and its approval by said sheriff, said sheriff did, upon demand of said Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey, defendants in said action, surrender and deliver possession of said property so attached to said defendants last named, and said writ of attachment was discharged by said sheriff."

The fourth paragraph alleges the recovery of a judgment by plaintiff in said action against the defendants therein for the sum of $1,287.50, that said judgment is in full force and effect, and unsatisfied.

"That execution thereon was issued by the clerk of said superior court and delivered to the sheriff of said Mariposa county. That, upon receipt of said writ of execution, and prior to its return as hereinafter alleged, said sheriff of Mariposa county did demand of defendants Mrs. M. C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey a redelivery of the property so attached, or pay to plaintiff the amount of said judgment, which amount was less than the full value of the property so attached and released. That thereafter said defendant and said McIntyre and Yancey did fail and refuse to pay any part of said judgment, and did fail to redeliver any of said property so attached as aforesaid to said sheriff of Mariposa county to be applied to the payment of said judgment. That, after said attached property was released to said Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey, as aforesaid, and prior to the making and entering of said final judgment, said defendants Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey caused the ore levied upon by said attachment to be crushed and the precious metals taken therefrom and converted the same to their own use. That by such acts said Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey rendered said property useless and valueless. That, subsequent to the levy of said writ of attachment, and prior to the issuance of the writ of execution, said Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey parted with all of their right, title, and interest in and to the ore bins levied upon by virtue of said writ of attachment. That upon said demand of said sheriff said Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey and the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company, defendant herein, served upon said sheriff a notice in writing of which the following is a copy."

Said letter referred to the execution of said undertaking and the recovery of said judgment, and declared that—

"We, and particularly Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey, hereby offer and tender to you all of the property attached under said writ, and released upon the filing of said undertaking. Said property, as shown by your return of the writ of attachment is personal property and consists of the following: (Describing it.) Your return further shows that said property was attached by you, 'by taking the same into your custody and putting a keeper in charge,' and we hereby request that you take the same again in your custody and hold the same in like manner as before the filing of said undertaking and the release of said levy. You will please consider this letter a formal offer on the part of the defendants in said action to return to your custody exactly what you had attached prior to the filing of said undertaking. This is to comply with the engagements of the surety upon said undertaking, as above quoted, and we stand ready to put you in precisely the same position with reference to said property as you were before the release of said levy."

The fifth paragraph is as follows:

"That thereafter said writ of execution unsatisfied. That thereafter, to wit, on January 15, 1920, plaintiff demanded of defendant herein that it pay to plaintiff the amount of said judgment, including costs and interest, as aforesaid. That on the 16th day of January, 1920, said defendant notified plaintiff that, having made the offer in writing as hereinbefore set forth, it was under no obligation respecting said bond, and said defendant and said Nettie C. McIntyre and J. C. Yancey have wholly neglected and refused, and still neglect and refuse, to pay the plaintiff herein said judgment or any part thereof, and the whole of said judgment and interest thereon is unpaid."

[1] In the foregoing we discover the omission of no fact material to the statement of a cause of action upon the undertaking. Plaintiff set up all the facts and conditions upon which the liability of appellant depended. As to this we think there is no serious controversy, and we therefore pass to the consideration of the special objections to the complaint.

[2] We are satisfied that it was not necessary for plaintiff to join Nettie C. McIntyre as a party defendant. She was the principal in the execution of said undertaking, but it plainly appears from the language of said instrument that defendant's promise imposed a several as well as a joint liability, and in such case the surety may be sued separately. Section 383, Code Civ. Proc.; Moreing v. Weber, 3 Cal. App. 14, 84 Pac. 220; London, etc., Bank v. Smith, 101 Cal. 415, 35 Pac. 1027.

In Farmers' Exchange Bank v. Morse, 129 Cal. 239, 61 Pac. 1088, cited by respondent, the note upon which the suit was based involved a joint obligation and there was no several liability. The Supreme Court declared that "it clearly appears, on the contrary, that the intention was that the promise should be joint," and, hence, it was held to be a case for the application of the rule requiring all the joint makers to be made parties, citing Pomeroy's Code Remedies, § 271, and Harrison v. McCormick, 69 Cal. 616, 11 Pac. 456.

[3-5] There seems to be no question as to the sufficiency of the demand for the return of the property, and the only possible criticism relates to the alternative condition, "or pay to plaintiff the amount of said judgment." Instead of using the foregoing language, the bond provided:

"Or will on demand pay to plaintiff the full value of the property released, not exceeding the amount of such judgment."

The rule is, of course, that—

"The liability of sureties is not to be extended beyond the terms of their contract. To the extent and in the manner and under the circumstances pointed out in their obligation they are bound, but no further; and they are entitled to stand on its precise terms." Pierce v. Whiting, 63 Cal. 538; Curtin v. Harvey, 120 Cal. 621, 52 Pac. 1077.

But it is alleged in the complaint that the value of the property was $2,000 and the amount of the judgment was $1,287.50. These allegations must be taken as true, and hence it appears clearly that the "precise terms" of the undertaking required the surety to pay any amount that might be recovered if it did not exceed $2,000. The judgment was for less than said amount, and it seems difficult to understand why appellant should be expected to do more than demand what was required to satisfy said judgment. It was not necessary for plaintiff to allege that defendant or McIntyre and Yancey knew the value of the property. Under the circumstances, they would be presumed to know its value, but, whether they knew it or not, the obligation was to pay to the extent of its value. As we understand the situation, the case in effect is the same as though the value of the property had been recited in the undertaking. If the property was actually of less value than the amount of the judgment, it could be shown in defense, but on demurrer the court is bound by said allegation. Indeed, the proper practice in such case would seem to be for the judgment creditor to make a demand for the redelivery of the property or for the payment of the amount of the judgment, requiring the judgment debtor to object to the amount demanded in case he believed it to be in excess of the value of the property.

We may add that the course pursued is approved in Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 50 Pac. 1066. It seems that therein the value of the property was recited in the bond, but we can perceive no special significance in that fact. A similar objection is urged to the demand that was afterward made upon the surety for the payment of the amount of the judgment, but we think it is equally without merit. In view of the allegations of the complaint we are satisfied that no such circumlocution was required in making the demand as appellant would compel.

In Pierce v. Whiting, supra, cited by respondent, the complaint did not show any demand at all upon the sureties, and, of course, was radically defective in that respect.

In the Curtin Case, supra, the value of the property was found to be $200 and, manifestly, the sureties were not required to pay the full amount of the judgment, which was for $400.

[6, 7] The only other question which we deem worthy of any attention is involved in the circumstance of said written offer of performance. The pleading of this fact by plaintiff was rather gratuitous, and was certainly unnecessary, and might well have been omitted. However, it must be considered in connection with the other allegations of the complaint, and, as thus viewed, it presents the aspect of mere surplusage and redundancy. The other allegations show that defendants McIntyre and Yancey had failed and refused to redeliver the property when it was demanded, or to pay the amount of the judgment, and that, prior to the issuance of said writ of execution, they had crushed the ore, extracted the metal therefrom, and converted it to their own use, thus rendering it valueless, and had parted with all their right, title, and interest in and to the ore bins—all before said offer was made. The context therefore reveals said written instrument as containing an idle and simulated offer to do what was impossible of performance. To be effective as a defense such offer must be made in good faith, and with present ability to perform. Langan v. Mariposa, etc., Co., 39 Cal. App. 71, 178 Pac. 166; Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 91 Pac. 1001. This necessary quality of the act was negatived, and hence no legal significance is to be attached to said offer.

[8] Considering the whole of the complaint, we regard it as though plaintiff had set out said written instrument, and had followed it with the allegation that the offer was not made in good faith, and was impossible of performance because a part of the property had been destroyed, and the residue was beyond the power of the defendants to convey. But, even if it could be said that it does not appear that defendants were unable to secure the conveyance of the bins, it is clear enough that they could not restore the personal property which had been destroyed, and, of course, an offer to return or the return of a part only of the property is no compliance with the obligation of the undertaking. Metrovich v. Jovovich, 58 Cal. 341; Mullally v. Townsend, supra.

The cases cited in this connection by respondent involved different conditions. For instance, in Curia v. Packard, 29 Cal. 194, the question arose after trial as to the sufficiency of the tender of the amount due, and the only controversy was as to whether greenbacks should be taken at their face value. In Oakland Savings Bank v. Applegarth, 67 Cal. 86, 7 Pac. 139, 476, there was no question of the good faith of the tender, but it was a few dollars less than the amount due, and the Supreme Court properly held that the payee of the note should have made an objection to the tender on that ground or else he would be deemed to have waived it by virtue of section 2076 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Likewise, in Bumiller v. Bumiller, 179 Cal. 119, 175 Pac. 897, the ability to perform was not disputed, and, as stated by the Supreme Court:

"The undisputed evidence shows that the plaintiff tendered to the defendant at the place where he was found, or his duly authorized agent, the full amount due, * * * and that she made such tender good by a deposit of such amount with a proper depository, giving the defendant due notice thereof."

Of course, if the parties did have the ability to perform, and the offer was made in good faith, it can be shown at the trial, and the surety would be exonerated; but, as the matter stands, we think the learned trial judge was in error in sustaining the demurrer.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and permit defendant to answer, if so advised.

MARYLAND CASUALTY CO. v. SHAFER
et al. (Civ. 2439.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 4, 1922. Rehearing Denied June 3, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 3, 1922.)

1. Highways ⇨113(5)—Bond for performance of highway contract does not cover claims protected by statutory materialman's bond.

Where a contractor for the construction of a county highway gave not only a bond for the faithful performance of his contract, but also a separate bond in express compliance with the requirements of St. 1897, p. 201, and acts amendatory thereof, to secure the payment of claims of materialmen and laborers, a materialman cannot claim the benefit of the faithful performance bond as he might have done if that had been the only bond which had been given.

2. Highways ⇨113(5)—Failure to perfect claims under statutory materialman's bond gives no right under contractor's bond for faithful performance.

The fact that a materialman had failed to perfect his claim, so as to lose his rights under the statutory bond given to protect such claims, does not entitle him to protection under the bond for faithful performance given by the contractor to the county.

3. Highways ⇨113(4)—Contractor cannot assign payment reserved for materialmen and sureties.

Where a contract for construction of a county highway provided, as authorized by Pol. Code, § 2643, subd. 11, that the county should retain 25 per cent. of the estimated value of the work, after the acceptance, to pay bills and claims filed in the office of the board of supervisors, the contractor had no authority to assign any portion of the reserved payments to a creditor who had not filed his claim, so that an order for payment to such creditor gave no rights where the claims on file more than exhausted the fund.

4. Appeal and error ⇨877(2)—Party showing no right to fund cannot complain of its distribution.

Appellants, who failed to show that they had any claim upon the funds deposited in court as the balance due on a contract for the construction of a county highway, cannot complain of error in the distribution of that fund among those entitled thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; T. N. Harvey, Judge.

Action by the Maryland Casualty Company against M. T. Shafer, O. M. Thompson, and others, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Thompson Bros., and others, to determine the interests of the parties in moneys due under a contract for a highway construction. From a judgment denying Thompson Bros. any interest in the fund, those defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; WILBUR, J., dissenting.

Backus, of Los Angeles, Russell & Heid, of Tulare, and W. O. Tyler and Scarborough & Bowen, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The county of Tulare and the defendant M. T. Shafer, on the 9th of February, 1918, entered into a contract by the terms of which Shafer agreed to construct a concrete highway for the county. Shafer completed the construction of the highway and the same was accepted by the county January 28, 1919. He failed, however, to pay many persons for labor, material, supplies, team hire, and rental of equipment employed, furnished, and used in the construction of the work. He also made assignments to various persons of sums due or to become due under the contract, and which remain unpaid. The plaintiff, as surety of the contractor, brought this action against the county, the contractor, and all claimants under the contract to secure an adjudication of their respective rights in and to the unpaid installments due from the county and the plaintiff's liability under its contracts of suretyship. The various claimants filed cross-complaints setting up their respective claims to the unpaid installments and their rights of recovery against the plaintiff. The county paid into court the balance due under the contract, $12,919.81, to be distributed in such manner and to such parties as the court might adjudge, and none of the parties are now claiming anything against the county. From the judgment rendered, three separate appeals are being prosecuted. This appeal is by Thompson Bros. from that part of the judgment denying recovery against the plaintiff and adjudging that other parties have superior rights to payment out of the unpaid installment.

The contract provides "that the contractor shall pay all bills for labor, team hire, material, and supplies contracted for by him on account of the work herein contemplated, when the same becomes due and payable." By the terms of the contract Shafer was required to furnish "a good and sufficient bond and undertaking in the sum of $16,426.55 conditioned for the faithful performance of this contract by the contractor, according to the terms and provisions herein expressed." Pursuant to this requirement, Shafer and the plaintiff executed a "bond for faithful performance of contract" in the usual form, providing, among other things, that the contractor "shall in all things stand to and abide by and well and truly keep and perform the covenants, conditions, stipulations, contracts, agreements, and obligations in the foregoing contract * * * on his part to be kept or performed at the time and in the manner therein specified, * * * and shall indemnify and save harmless the said county of Tulare."

[1] It is contended that the plaintiff is liable under the faithful performance bond for the claim of Thompson Bros. In support of such contention the following cases are cited: French v. Farmer, 178 Cal. 218, 172 Pac. 1102; Fuller v. Alturas School District, 28 Cal. App. 609, 153 Pac. 743; Callan v. Empire State Surety Co., 20 Cal. App. 483, 129 Pac. 978, 981. If the faithful performance bond were the only one furnished, appellant's position would seem to be invulnerable, but the contract required and Shafer and the plaintiff executed a separate bond in express compliance with the requirements of the act of 1897 (Stats. 1897, p. 201), and acts amendatory thereof, entitled "An act to secure the payment of the claims of materialmen, mechanics, or laborers, employed by contractors upon state, municipal, or other public work."

Liability under a contract of suretyship, as under other contracts, is dependent upon the intention of the parties thereto. In the discussion of a similar question in French v. Farmer, supra, it is said:

"If * * * any effect whatever is to be given to this clause in the condition of the bond, it must be held that it was the intention of the parties to benefit such third persons. * * * The courts of Nebraska, Missouri, Iowa, Indiana, and Michigan * * * seem to hold to the view that, if it can be fairly said from either the contract or the bond, which are to be construed together, that the parties intended to and did agree to pay such third persons, a suit could be brought on such bond by such third person to recover upon the promise so made for his benefit."

Here, in compliance with the contract and the statute, a separate bond was given to secure payment of claims of the character under consideration, and it would be unreasonable to hold that the parties intended the faithful performance bond to secure the same claims.

[2] The statute of 1897, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1422, provides that the claimants "shall, within ninety days from the time such contract is completed, file with the * * * board of supervisors * * * a verified statement of such claims." Concededly appellant failed to file such a claim, and is therefore precluded from recovering on the bond given pursuant to the requirements of that statute. Such failure affords no ground for relief under the faithful performance bond manifestly intended for a different purpose.

[3] Pursuant to the provisions of subdivision 11 of section 2643, Political Code, the contract provides that the county shall retain 25 per cent. of the estimated value of the work for 35 days after the acceptance thereof. The contract further provides that the county "may at its option, retain out of any amounts due the contractor, a sum sufficient to cover and pay any such unpaid bills and claims, provided that sworn statements of said bills and claims have been filed in the office of the board of supervisors on or before the date on which the final payment due the contractor under this contract, shall be made by the first party through its board of supervisors, as hereinafter set forth in article XIV of this contract, and not later than ninety days after the completion and acceptance of the work." As stated, the county retained, under this provision, $12,919.81 due under the contract, that sum being less than 25 per cent. of the value of the work. The court found that valid claims, duly verified, were filed in due time with the board, aggregating more than the amount retained by the county. Appellant did not so file a verified claim, but filed an order, signed by the contractor, for the amount of such claim. It is now contended that appellant was entitled to payment out of the moneys retained by the county and deposited in court as stated; that Shafer's order operated as an assignment of the sum retained by the county to the amount of the order; and that the plaintiff had no right or equity in the fund reserved in so far as it had been assigned by Shafer. In support of such contention appellant relies on the cases of Adamson v. Paonessa, 180 Cal. 157, 179 Pac. 880, and American Surety Co. v. Empire Securities Co., 185 Cal. 586, 197 Pac. 941. The first case relates to a contract for street work under the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), and the latter to similar work under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147). In neither case did the contract provide for a reserve fund as in the case at bar. In Adamson v. Paonessa, supra, this distinction is clearly pointed out by the court. The provision of the contract for the retention of 25 per cent. of the value of the work until the completion thereof became a part of the contract of suretyship and was as much for the indemnity of the surety as for the county. Prairie State Bank v. United States, 164 U. S. 227, 17 Sup. Ct. 442, 41 L. Ed. 412. The further provision for retention by the county of sufficient funds to pay claimants who filed verified claims was equally a part of plaintiff's contract and was for the protection of the surety as much as for that of claimants. To the extent that such provision was observed, the liability of the surety was lessened. The fund retained was beyond the control of Shafer, and no assignment by him could prejudice the rights of the parties for whose benefit the fund was created. To hold otherwise would be to nullify the stipulation of the contract for the retention of the fund and to destroy the security intended for the benefit of claimants bringing themselves within its terms as well as for the protection of the surety. Wasco County v. New England Equitable Ins. Co., 88 Or. 465, 172 Pac. 126, L. R. A. 1918D, 732, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 656; In re Scofield Co., 215 Fed. 45, 131 C. C. A. 353; Derby v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 87 Or. 34, 169 Pac. 500; Henningsen v. United States Fidelity & G. Co., 208 U. S. 404, 28 Sup. Ct. 389, 52 L. Ed. 547; Columbia Digger Co. v. Rector (D. C.) 215 Fed. 618; Greenville Bank v. Lawrence, 76 Fed. 545, 22 C. C. A. 646.

[4] The court found that valid claims amounting to $14,419.50 were duly verified and filed with the board of supervisors, and that such claimants in due time filed cross-complaints in this action and were entitled to judgment against the plaintiff for the respective amounts of their claims, and that the plaintiff is entitled to have the whole of said $12,919.81 applied to the payment of such claims. The judgment against plaintiff awards such claimants the amounts of their respective claims and directs the clerk to pay them the amount of said fund in the proportion of their claims, and, on payment to the clerk by plaintiff of the remainder of the judgment, to pay the claimants in full upon satisfaction of the judgment by them. The judgment further provides that, upon payment by plaintiff to any of said claimants of the sums awarded them, the clerk shall pay plaintiff such part of the $12,919.81 as said claimants otherwise would be entitled to receive. Appellant contends that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment. Whatever grounds of objection may be available to other parties defendant, the findings clearly show that appellant, by reason of failure to file a verified statement of claim with the board of supervisors as provided by the contract, is not entitled to participate in the distribution of the fund reserved, and therefore cannot be heard to complain of the disposition made thereof.

That part of the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

et al. (Civ. 2440.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 4, 1922. Rehearing Denied June 3, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 3, 1922.)

1. Highways §113(4)—Contractor cannot assign material reserved to satisfy laborers and materialmen.

Where the county by its contract reserved a portion of the funds due on the contract for a specified time to pay the materialmen and laborers who might file claims against the county, whether such reservation was under the authority of Political Code, § 2643, subd. 11, or not, the contractor could not, by assignment of the moneys due him, give his assignee any right to such reserved funds if the claims of the laborers and materialmen properly filed with the supervisors were more than sufficient to exhaust the fund.

2. Highways §113(4)—Contractor's assignee of part of amount due to secure personal loan held not entitled to be paid from reserved funds.

Where there was no showing that moneys loaned to a contractor for which he assigned a portion of the amount due him from the county were used by him in the prosecution of the work, the assignee cannot claim any portion of the funds reserved under the contract to pay materialmen and laborers where the claims of such materialmen and laborers exceeded the amount of the fund.

Action by the Maryland Casualty Company against M. T. Shafer, the Lindsay National Bank, and others, to determine interests in moneys due under a contract for a highway construction. HART, J. This is one of three cases growing out of the same transaction which, for the purpose of consideration on appeal, were consolidated. The other cases are numbered, respectively, 2438 and 2439. All three were submitted upon the same record. There are, however, certain questions presented in this case which do not arise in the others.

The appeal here is by Lindsay National Bank from the judgment, upon the judgment roll alone.

The general facts of the transaction out of which the several cases arise are stated in an opinion filed in this court this day in civil No. 2439, 208 Pac. 192, entitled "Maryland Casualty Company, a Corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. M. T. Shafer et al., Defendants and Respondents, O. M., C. M. and

E. O. Thompson, Copartners, Doing Business under the Firm Name and Style of Thompson Bros., Defendants, Cross-Complainants and Appellants." It is conceived, however, that reference to those facts should be made herein.

The plaintiff was surety of the defendant Shafer on a contract between the latter and the county of Tulare, whereby Shafer agreed to build the Lindsay-Tulare division of a system of public highways in said county for a certain specified consideration. The contract was entered into on the 9th day of February, 1918, and the work of construction completed and the same accepted by the board of supervisors of said county on the 28th day of January, 1919. Under the contract Shafer was to furnish all the labor, materials, supplies, team hire, and equipment essential to the consummation of the terms of said contract or the completion of the work according to the requirements thereof. Besides a bond for the faithful performance of the contract which Shafer was required by the contract to furnish the county, Shafer also executed another and separate bond as required by the contract as well as by the statute (Stats. 1897, pp. 201, 202), the specific purpose of which was to secure the payment of all claims for labor, materials, supplies, etc., bestowed upon and furnished in the construction of the work.

The contract, following the provision of subdivision 11 of section 2643 of the Political Code to the same effect, provides that the county shall retain 25 per cent. of the estimated value of the work for a period of 35 days after the same has been regularly accepted. It is further provided in said contract that the county "may at its option retain out of any amounts due the contractor a sufficient sum to cover and pay any such unpaid bills and claims, provided that sworn statements of said bills and claims have been filed in the office of the board of supervisors on or before the date on which the final payment due the contractor, under this contract, shall be made by the first party through its board of supervisors, as hereinafter set forth in article XIV of this contract and not later than ninety days after the completion and acceptance of the work." In pursuance of said provision, the county retained the sum of $12,919.81 due under the contract; the said sum being less than 25 per cent. of the cost of the work.

It appears that, upon the completion and after the acceptance of the work, there remained due from the contractor numerous claims in favor of persons performing labor upon and furnishing materials, supplies, etc., for the work. It is also made to appear that the contractor made assignments to various persons of sums due or to become due under the contract and which are still unpaid.

The plaintiff, as surety of the contractor, instituted this action against the county, the contractor, and all claimants under the contract for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication of their respective rights in and to the balance due from the county to the contractor under the contract and to determine the plaintiff's liability under its contract of suretyship; it being also the surety on the faithful performance bond. The several claimants appeared and filed cross-complaints, setting forth their respective claims to the moneys retained by the county and their right to a recovery against the plaintiff. The balance due under the contract, to wit, the sum of $12,919.81, which was retained by the county by authority of the contract and subdivision 11 of section 2643 of the Political Code, was paid into court by the county, under a stipulation that the same should be distributed in such manner and to such parties as the court might adjudge, and there is no claim put forth by any of the claimants against the county. The gravamen of the cross-complaint or the facts upon which the appellant relies for a recovery may here be given in the language of said pleading:

"VI. That on December 22, 1918, said contractor, said M. T. Shafer, for a valuable consideration, transferred and assigned to one H. E. French the sum of $5,000 in lawful money of the United States out of the final payment which became due under and pursuant to said contract referred to in said cross-complaint from said county of Tulare to said M. T. Shafer on March 4, 1919.

"That on December 23, 1918, said H. E. French, for a valuable consideration, assigned and transferred to this cross-defendant Lindsay National Bank all his right to receive from said county of Tulare said sum of $5,000 which had been so assigned to him by said M. T. Shafer, and ever since December 23, 1918, this cross-defendant, Lindsay National Bank, has been, and now is, the owner and holder of said claim for said sum of $5,000 to be paid out of said final payment, and no part thereof has ever been paid by said county of Tulare to said Lindsay National Bank."

The said cross-complaint proceeds to allege that the said cross-defendant duly notified the said county of Tulare of its claim and demand for said sum of $5,000 on the 2d day of January, 1919; that on said day it filed in the office of the clerk of the board of supervisors of said county its verified claim and demand for said sum "in the manner and form required by law"; that on the 2d day of June, 1919, said board of supervisors rejected said claim and demand and has at all times refused and still refuses to pay said cross-defendant said sum. It is further alleged that said demand of said cross-defendant is, and ever since March 4, 1919, has been, payable out of the said sum of $12,919.81, the balance due the contractor under said contract and retained, as before alleged, and as is admitted, by the county.

The court found the facts with reference to the assignment upon which the bank relies in substantial accord with the above averments, and that, as against all persons except the plaintiff, Maryland Casualty Company, the said bank by virtue of said assignment is entitled to receive out of said fund of $12,919.81 so deposited in court the sum of $5,000 with interest, etc. The court awarded to the several lien claimants appearing in the action by cross-complaint sums aggregating amounts far in excess of the money retained by the county and deposited in court as indicated. The judgment is that "said Lindsay National Bank take nothing herein against said Maryland Casualty Company and no part of $12,919.81." It was further decreed that the clerk of the court prorate and pay said $12,919.81 to the parties herein given judgment against said Maryland Casualty Company, "paying to each of said parties such proportion of said $12,919.81 as his judgment against said Maryland Casualty Company bears to the total amount of all such judgments. * * * And if the said Maryland Casualty Company shall deposit with said clerk a sufficient sum which, in addition to said $12,919.81, would satisfy said judgment against said company, the clerk shall accept such deposit and therefrom pay the balance of said judgment upon satisfaction thereof by such judgment holders." There is no question raised herein, as in Maryland Casualty Co. v. M. T. Shafer et al. and Thompson Bros., Civil No. 2439, supra, as to the liability of the plaintiff under the "faithful performance bond" executed by it to the county contemporaneously with the execution and giving of the bond under the act of 1897, supra, to secure the payment of the claims of materialmen, mechanics, laborers, etc., employed by contractors upon street, municipal, or other public work. Nor could any such proposition be relevantly raised and urged in this case, inasmuch as the cross-complainant herein, as we shall presently more particularly note, undertakes to secure the satisfaction of its claim out of a specific fund set aside for the purpose of paying the claims of laborers, mechanics, materialmen, etc.

[1] The situation presented here is simply this: That the county in the contract with Shafer expressly reserved to itself the right to retain 25 per cent. of the estimated value of the work for 35 days after the acceptance thereof for the purpose of meeting any unpaid claims which might be regularly authenticated and presented to the board of supervisors for labor bestowed upon and materials furnished for and in the construction of the highway, and that in pursuance of that provision of the contract the board of supervisors did retain the sum of $12,919.81, due under the contract and which amounted to a sum less than 25 per cent. of the value of said work, etc. The simple question to be determined here, then, is whether an assignment made by the contractor upon the fund so retained and sequestered for a specific purpose is valid as against those claims which were payable out of said fund and arising out of the construction of the work? A negative answer to the question so propounded must, for obvious reasons, be returned.

Whether the authority for the provision in the contract investing the county with the right to retain 25 per cent. of the value of the work for the purposes stated proceeds from subdivision 11 of section 2643 of the Political Code or from any other statute, is immaterial, since it will not be questioned that the county may, independently of statutory authority and by contract, authorize the retention by it of so much money as may be due on the estimated value of the work as will wholly or in part satisfy claims against the contractor for labor and materials used in the execution of the terms of the contract and which the contractor has not paid. When, therefore, a fund is thus established for the purposes stated, so much of the estimated value of the work done under the contract as is represented by such fund is entirely withdrawn from the control of the contractor. In other words, the contractor has no assignable interest in said fund, unless it should transpire that he had paid all claims for labor and material incurred in the performance of the contract or after all such unpaid claims have been satisfied by the county out of such fund there still remains therein a balance, which is not this case. But this point is discussed and disposed of in accordance with the view thus expressed by this court in the opinion in action No. 2439 this day filed. It is therein said that—

The "provision for retention by the county of sufficient funds to pay claimants who file verified claims was equally a part of plaintiff's contract and was for the protection of the surety as much as for that of claimants. To the extent that such provision was observed, the liability of the surety was lessened. The fund retained was beyond the control of Shafer, and no assignment by him could prejudice the rights of the parties for whose benefit the fund was created. To hold otherwise would be to nullify the stipulation of the contract for the retention of the fund and to destroy the security intended for the benefit of claimants bringing themselves within its terms as well as for the protection of the surety"—citing cases.

The appellant, however, contends that it is supported in its claim to the right to payment out of the moneys retained by the county and deposited in court as indicated by the recent case of American Surety Co. v. Empire Securities Co., 185 Cal. 586, 197 Pac. 941, and also the case of Adamson v. Paonessa, 180 Cal. 157.¹ In the opinion in the Thompson Bros. Case, Civil No. 2439, supra, this court called attention to the distinction between the cases named and the one at bar, and the reasons for the distinction, and held that they had no application to the instant case. What is said therein with respect to those cases and their inapplicability to the situation presented here is sufficient for the purposes of the decision of the present case.

[2] But there is still another consideration which supports the conclusion that the assignment declared upon by the appellant cannot legally be satisfied out of the fund referred to, said fund not being sufficient to meet and satisfy all the claims for labor and materials which were put into the work and unpaid by the contractor, and it is this: That it is not made to appear by the complaint or the findings that the money received by the contractor upon the assignment was used in satisfying claims against him for labor and materials used in the construction of the highway. For aught that may be known to the contrary from the record before us, the assignment might have been made for the purpose of securing a loan of money from the original assignee, French, to be used by Shafer for private purposes, or for a purpose entirely foreign to the contract. It is plainly manifest, as is above indicated, that the fund in question was subject to no other burdens than those which arose out of claims against the contractor for labor and materials furnished in the construction of the work.

Our conclusion is that the judgment below is correct, and it is accordingly affirmed.

et al. (Civ. 2438.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 4, 1922. Rehearing Denied June 3, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 3, 1922.)

1. Highways — § 113(5)—Cross-complaints in surety's suit against materialmen, contractors, and county to determine interest of parties need not be filed within statutory time for suit to establish liens.

Where the surety on a county highway contractor's bond brought suit against the contractor, the county, and the materialmen and laborers to have the interests of the parties determined, that suit was the beginning of a suit to enforce the claims of materialmen and laborers under the statute requiring such suit within six months from the time the claims were filed, so that such materialmen and laborers could recover against the surety on the bond, though their cross-complaints in that suit were not filed within the six months' period.

2. Highways — § 113(5)—Complaint by surety on highway contractor's bond held to show right of claimants to recover.

Where the complaint of a surety on a county contractor's bond alleged the filing of claims against the county by materialmen and laborers for materials furnished and work done for the contractor and admitted the execution of the bond by the surety to cover such claims, the complaint was sufficient to authorize recovery by the materialmen and laborers without the necessity of their filing cross-complaints.

BURNETT, J. This is a companion case to Nos. 2439 and 2440, 208 Pac. 192, 194, in which the opinions are filed herewith. The appellants herein are laborers and materialmen who claim under the bond executed by plaintiff for their benefit. The bond was given in accordance with the requirement of section 1 of said "act to secure the payment of the claims of materialmen, mechanics, or laborers, employed by contractors upon state, municipal, or other public work," to which act reference is made in the other opinions. St. 1897, p. 201. The trial court found:

"That there is due and unpaid from defendant M. T. Shafer to each of the following persons named in this paragraph, for and account of work and labor performed, rental of teams and equipment, supplies, and materials furnished under and pursuant to the contract set forth in the complaint herein by and between the said M. T. Shafer and said county of Tulare, by each of the following persons together with interest, the following sums."

Then follow the names with some typographical errors of all the appellants herein except Luis Clarin, H. E. French, Blakeney Hughes, Morris & Co., Nick Pazin, and Steve Pazin, together with the respective amounts due them. However, the court further found:

"That each and every of the following parties to this action who did not file a complaint, answer, or cross-complaint praying judgment against said Maryland Casualty Company on said materialmen's bond within six months from the time he filed a verified statement with the board of supervisors is barred from any relief against said Maryland Casualty Company by the provisions of the statute of 1897 and amendments thereto, providing for the execution of said materialmen's bond."

Then follow the names of all but four of appellants herein. Said finding was based upon said statute, as amended by St. 1915, p. 926, providing:

"At any time within six months after the filing of such claim the person, company or corporation filing the same may commence an action against the surety or sureties on the bond, specified and required in section 1 thereof."

[1] We are entirely satisfied, though, that the trial court made a wrong application of said provision. Upon principle and authority we are convinced that the filing of the complaint by plaintiff suspended the operation of said statute of limitations. Said complaint was filed before the expiration of six months after the verified claims were filed with the board of supervisors, and it set forth the contract and the whole transaction upon which the claims of appellants depend; and their appearance in the action, in response to the invitation of respondent and the command of the court, for the very purpose of having their claims adjudicated, must be regarded as though made at the time the complaint was filed. If the action were brought by the maker of a promissory note against the payee to determine its validity, it would hardly be questioned, we think, that the payee would be allowed to maintain the legal integrity of the note and to establish the obligation of the maker, although in the meantime the statutory period of limitations had expired. In this case the whole issue as to the rights and obligations of the parties is tendered by the complaint, and any defense or counterclaim relating to the instrument which is brought in question is cognizable as of the time when the litigation is instituted.

A similar case to this is McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 64 Pac. 278, wherein the action was brought by a surety, "who had signed a joint and several guaranty of rent payable under a lease, to have it decreed what amount was due and unpaid to the lessor, and that the other surety, and the corporation of which he was president, were principal debtors, and that they be compelled to pay the unpaid rent, and save plaintiff harmless therefrom," and it was held that "the lessor may set up in his answer, by way of counterclaim or cross-complaint, the contract of guaranty and the amount due thereunder, and seek judgment therefor against the plaintiff." It was further held therein that "the filing of the complaint suspended the statute of limitations as to the matters arising out of the transaction pleaded; and where such matter is set forth in the answer, whether called an answer, counterclaim, or cross-complaint, and arose upon contract, and existed at the commencement of the action, the statute of limitations can not run thereupon after the commencement of the action."

In Perkins v. West Coast Lumber Co., 120 Cal. 27, 52 Pac. 118, the action was by an attorney at law to recover against his client upon a special contract for services, and it was held that a counterclaim for damages for bad advice given under the contract alleged and arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint was not barred by the statute of limitations, "if not so barred at the commencement of the action, notwithstanding the lapse of the period fixed by the statute before the filing of the answer setting forth such counterclaim."

In 24 R. C. L. 837, the rule as to set-offs and counterclaims is stated as follows:

"It is generally held that the object of statutes of set-off was to prevent multiplicity of lawsuits, and not to interfere with or affect the operation of the statute of limitations, and that the statute of limitations applies as well to a demand attempted to be set off as to one upon which an action is brought. A claim which is barred by the statute is not therefore available as a set-off or counterclaim. If, however, a counterclaim or set-off is not barred at the commencement of the action in which it is pleaded, it does not become so afterward, during the pendency of that action."

It seems difficult to conceive of a situation wherein it would be more manifest than herein that the counterclaim or cross-complaint relates to and depends "upon the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought," creating the condition for the application of sections 438 and 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] Indeed, it was not necessary for the prevailing appellants herein to file a counterclaim or cross-complaint. The facts upon which their claims are based are disclosed by the allegations of the complaint, and it is a fair inference from these allegations that said defendants were entitled to judgment against the plaintiff for the respective amounts. It is true that plaintiff alleged upon information and belief that said claims were invalid, but this should be disregarded as the mere opinion of the pleader, since no reason is assigned nor legal foundation disclosed for its support.

For confirmation of this view we may direct specific attention to its material allegations as they relate to the claim of these appellants. In paragraph 2 it appears that on February 9, 1918, the contract was executed for the construction of the highway, and the various provisions of said contract are set out, including the requirement that the contractor should furnish said bond for the payment of laborers and materialmen, and that he should pay all such claims.

Paragraph 3 alleges that on February 15 the contractor made a written application to plaintiff for a bond or undertaking in the sum of $32,853.10 to secure said payment, a copy of said application being exhibited in said paragraph.

In paragraph 4 it is alleged:

"This plaintiff, to secure the payment of work and labor performed and material used in the construction of said division of said system of highways and roads as aforesaid, did, on or about the 28th day of February, 1918, make, execute and deliver to said county of Tulare its bond in the sum of $32,853.10, which said bond was duly acknowledged and was filed with said board of supervisors of said county of Tulare, as provided by law."

In paragraph 5 this bond is set out in full and it appears unobjectionable in form.

In paragraph 10 we find this allegation:

"That labor, team hire, materials, and supplies furnished and used in and upon said division of said system of public roads and highways did on and after July 1, 1918, become and were due and payable, remained unpaid, and are now unpaid and payable," etc.

In paragraph 11 it appears that said contract was completed by Shafer and accepted by said county of Tulare as completed on January 28, 1919.

In paragraph 12 it is alleged that—"The time for filing verified claims as against said bond of this plaintiff expired on or about April 28, 1919."

Paragraph 17 alleges:

"That the persons, partnerships and corporations hereinafter named, defendants herein, claim to have some right, title, interest or claim either as against the bond executed by plaintiff, as herein set forth, or as against said county of Tulare or the funds now due and payable under the terms of said contract of February 9, 1918, and have filed with the board of the county of Tulare a bill, or statement of account, or an order signed by M. T. Shafer directing said county of Tulare and said board of supervisors to pay such alleged claim, or a certificate of said M. T. Shafer certifying that such alleged claim is due and payable on account of labor performed or material furnished in connection with said contract of February 9, 1918, or a notice to withhold payment of money (as provided by section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California), or a statement of claim, acknowledged, verified, or otherwise; that the names of said persons, partnerships or corporations so having filed bills, statements of accounts, orders, certificates, withhold notices, or statements of claim as aforesaid, the nature of said claims and the amounts claimed thereunder, are respectively as follows."

In the list therein set out appear all of appellants except Blakeney Hughes.

To recapitulate: The complaint alleges the execution of the contract between the county and Shafer for the construction of the highway; the execution of the bond by plaintiff for the benefit of the laborers and materialmen; the performance of labor and the furnishing of material by said appellants for which they have not been paid; the completion of the contract and its acceptance as completed by the county; and the filing of the verified claims of appellants with the board of supervisors. It is true that it is not specifically designated to which class of claimants appellants belong, but the uncertainty, if any, in that respect would be resolved against the pleader in view of the fact that it was a matter of record. There was an omission also to allege the date of the filing of the respective verified claims, but it is clearly implied that the filing was within the statutory period.

The complaint also specifically prayed "that a full and final determination and adjudication be had in this action of any and all rights, claims and demands of each and all of the parties herein," etc., and for general relief.

It is apparent that, if said appellants had begun the action against respondent on the bond, they would have been required to allege only the same facts as appear in said complaint, although, as careful pleaders, they would have been more specific as to one or two of the incidents of the case.

Such being the situation, it seems plain that they cannot be barred from relief simply because their actual appearance in the case was delayed until said period of six months had expired, and they then filed what they called a cross-complaint containing no additional facts to those alleged in the original complaint, but simply making more definite the date when the verified claims were filed with the board of supervisors.

It appears, then, that the complaint would have justified a judgment in favor of all the appellants except Blakeney Hughes. The number is diminished, however, by the findings. It appears from the finding as to the filing of the claims that M. G. Dunlap filed his too late and R. Carmona filed none at all. The court also found specifically that there was nothing due to George Norwood, H. E. French, Lindsay Plumbing Company, W. S. Cairns, and Morris & Co. There seems to have been no specific finding as to the amount due Luis Clarin, Nick Pazin, and Steve Pazin, but there was really no issue as to the validity of their claims; respondent's only contention as to them being that they were barred by the statute of limitations.

We may add that it is not disputed that said bond is enforceable for the benefit of said laborers and materialmen and falls within the doctrine of Callan v. Empire State Surety Co., 20 Cal. App. 483, 129 Pac. 978, 981; Fuller v. Alturas School District, 28 Cal. App. 609, 153 Pac. 743; French v. Farmer, 178 Cal. 218, 172 Pac. 1102.

The judgment is reversed, and the court below directed to render a judgment upon the findings against the Maryland Casualty Company for the respective amounts of their claims in favor of these defendants: George G. PEOPLE'S BANK v. PORTER. (Civ. 2404.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 31, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 27, 1922.)

1. Bills and notes ⇨343—Negotiability not destroyed in hands of indorsee in due course who takes with knowledge that note is part of purchase price of a chattel by which title is retained until payment of note.

The negotiability of a note is not destroyed in the hands of an indorsee in due course who takes with knowledge that the note is given as part of the purchase price of a chattel, title to which is retained until the note is paid, under Negotiable Instruments Law (St. 1917, p. 1533, § 3084), providing an unqualified order or promise to pay is unconditional, though coupled with the statement of the transaction; and this is true even assuming that the actual consideration for the note was the transfer of title to the chattel at maturity, not the mere promise to do so.

2. Bills and notes ⇨144—Negotiability determined at time note is given.

The negotiability of a note is determined at the time it is given, as, under Negotiable Instruments Law (St. 1917, p. 1539, § 3128), an instrument negotiable in origin continues to be negotiable until it has been restrictively indorsed or discharged, by payment or otherwise.

3. Bills and notes ⇨168—Rule that note secured by mortgage not negotiable inapplicable to note given in part payment for chattel, title to which is retained until note is paid; "chattel mortgage."

The rule that, where a note is secured by a mortgage, the note, though negotiable in form, is not negotiable in law, does not apply to a note given as part of the purchase price of a chattel, title to which is to be retained until the note is paid, since such note is not a chattel mortgage within Civ. Code, § 2956 et seq.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Chattel Mortgage.]

4. Bills and notes ⇨165—Making note on face subject to another instrument is warning that promise is conditional.

Where a note upon its face is made subject to the terms of another instrument, such provision is an intentional warning given by the maker to any prospective indorsee that the promise to pay is conditional upon, or subject to, the performance of the collateral agreement referred to.

5. Bills and notes ⇨164—Note nonnegotiable in hands of indorsee when all instruments constituting transaction and note to him make promise conditional.

A note is not negotiable in the hands of an indorsee when all the contemporaneous instruments constituting the transaction and note to the indorsee make it clear that the promise to pay is conditional upon the performance of certain acts by the payee.

6. Bills and notes ⇨155—Note payable whenever payee deems himself insecure nonnegotiable.

Where a note (or some collateral agreement known to the indorsee) makes the note payable whenever the payee deems himself insecure, the due date is usually held uncertain, so as to render the note nonnegotiable.

7. Bills and notes ⇨168—Negotiability not affected by fact that payee may, on default in payment, retake chattel in payment for which note was given.

A note given as part of the purchase price of a chattel, title to which is retained until the note is paid, is not rendered nonnegotiable by the fact that the payee could retake the chattel in the event of failure of payment, since that circumstance does not affect the absolute promise to pay, but merely gives the payee a choice of remedies when the note is due, especially under Negotiable Instruments Law (St. 1917, p. 1533, § 3086), providing that negotiability is not affected by giving the holder an election to require something to be done in lieu of payment of money.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by the People's Bank against C. W. Porter. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ralph H. Lewis, of Sacramento, for appellant.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff brought an action on March 3, 1921, as indorsee and assignee of two certain promissory notes, dated August 21, 1920, appellant being the maker and the Eckley-Reynolds Company, a copartnership, engaged in the tractor business, the payee thereof. Each note is for the sum of $393, and is in the same form, except that one is made payable 6 months after date and the other 12 months after date. It will be sufficient to set out the former, as follows:

$393. Sacramento, Calif., August 21, 1920.

"Six months after date without grace I promise to pay to the order of Eckley-Reynolds Co. at 531 Jay street, Sacramento, Calif., three hundred ninety-three dollars in gold coin of the United States of America, of the present standard value, with interest thereon in like gold coin at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum from date until paid, for value received, interest to be paid semiannually and if not so paid the whole sum of both principal and interest to become immediately due and collectible, at the option of the holder of the note, and in case suit or action is instituted to collect this note, or any portion thereof, I promise and agree to pay in addition to the costs and disbursements provided by statute, such additional sum in like gold coin, as the court may adjudge reasonable for attorney's fees to be allowed in said suit or action."

It was not claimed that any part of either of said notes was paid nor was it denied that plaintiff was an indorsee for value in good faith before maturity, but it was urged in defense that there was a breach of warranty of a tractor for which the notes were given, and that this defense could be maintained against plaintiff by reason of the fact that the notes were nonnegotiable.

The trial court found:

"That at the time of the sale, delivery, and indorsement of said promissory notes, and each of them, plaintiff had knowledge that said promissory notes were, and each of them was, given as part of the purchase price of said tractor, and had notice and knowledge that at the time of the execution and delivery of said promissory notes, and each of them, a contract had been entered into by defendant and said copartnership in the words and figures set forth as Exhibit A to plaintiff's answer to defendant's cross-complaint; that plaintiff, at the time of indorsement and delivery to it by said copartnership of said promissory notes, and each of them, had no notice or knowledge of any defect, if any there were, in the personal property for the purchase price of which said notes were given, and had no notice or knowledge of any total or partial failure of consideration for said promissory notes, or either of them; that plaintiff, at the time of said purchase, delivery, and indorsement to it of said promissory notes, and each of them, * * * had no notice or knowledge of any warranty or guaranty that had been given at any time by said copartnership to defendant, nor did it have notice or knowledge of any facts that put it upon inquiry as to any failure of consideration for said promissory notes, or either of them, or as to any warranty or guaranty made by said copartnership to defendant."

The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the foregoing finding is not controverted, but its ordinary legal effect is deemed by appellant to be nullified by the consideration that the contract of sale of said tractor provided that the title to the machine should remain in the vendor until the whole consideration was paid by the vendee.

[1] The question to be determined, then, may be stated in the language of respondent:

"Is the negotiability of a promissory note, having all the characteristics of a negotiable instrument, destroyed in the hands of an indorsee in due course who takes with knowledge that the note is given as part of the purchase price of a chattel, title to which is retained until the note is paid?"

The situation is the same as though there had been written into each of said notes the following clause:

"This note is given as part of the purchase price of a Kordell tractor this day delivered to the maker of this note, title to which tractor shall remain in the payee until this note, with all costs, expenses and attorney's fees for the collection thereof, has been fully paid when same shall become vested in the buyer."

As to the negotiability of such note, a conflict of authority exists, although the weight and number of authorities decidedly preponderate in favor of respondent's contention, as pointed out in its brief. From the citations therein we may quote from Daniels on Negotiable Instruments (6th Ed.) § 52, and 3 R. C. L. p. 917. From the former:

"Where in a note the obligation to pay is not limited or contingent, but is absolute and unequivocal, the character of the note as a negotiable instrument is not affected by a recital therein that it was given for an amount due by the makers for goods furnished by the payee, upon a reservation of title as upon a conditional sale."

The latter declares:

"It seems to be a settled rule that the negotiability of a note is not destroyed merely because, in addition to the promise to pay, it contains a statement that the title to the property for which the note is given is not to pass until the note is paid."

Respondent claims—and we think with reason—that the framers of the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law, which has been adopted in this state (Stats. 1917, p. 1531), had in view this conflict of authority and sought to render the negotiability of such notes unquestionable by providing (section 3084, Civ. Code) that—

"An unqualified order or promise to pay is unconditional within the meaning of this act, though coupled with— * * *

"2. A statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument."

Indeed, in Brannon's Negotiable Instrument Law (3d Ed.) p. 477, it is said:

"The real purpose of this clause, as we learn from Mr. Crawford, who drafted the act, and from Judge Brewster, is to cover the case of a note which contains a statement that it is given for a chattel, which is to be the property of the owner of the note until the note is paid. Such notes are usually regarded as negotiable. Several states, however, have taken the opposite view, holding that such notes are nonnegotiable, and it was to bring the latter states into accord with the more general view and unify the law on this point that this clause was inserted."

But whether such was the purpose is, of course, of little interest here, since we have no direct adjudication in this state upon the subject. Our courts are certainly at liberty without any embarrassment from the conflicting decisions of other jurisdictions to give a reasonable construction to said provision, so as to effectuate the intention of the parties to be gathered from a consideration of the whole transaction. For, after all, such intention is the vital question, and the only reason for considering at all the circumstance that the payee retained the title is that thereby the promise to pay may be rendered conditional. The notes, as we have seen, do not refer to said contract of sale, but contain an unconditional and absolute promise to pay at a certain time. But, considering together all the instruments as constituting one transaction, we do not discover an intention to make the payment dependent upon any contingency. Assuredly, there is no express language to the effect that the maker was to pay upon condition that the payee could and would transfer title at the time of the maturity of the notes. If such had been the intention of the parties it should have been, and we must assume it would have been, so written. If any such condition is to be imposed upon the payment of the notes, it must be the result of a reasonable implication of the said reservation. But such implication is strongly rebutted by the circumstance that one of the notes was to be paid six months before the absolute title was to pass. As to this note there can be no pretense that its payment was dependent upon any future contingency as to the title or otherwise. And as to both notes it should be said that the absolute promise made therein in simple, unequivocal language is not to be reduced or cut down to a conditional or contingent obligation by reason of a doubtful construction of an uncertain term in another part of the instrument.

But, assuming that the actual consideration for the notes was the transfer of the title to the machine at the time of their maturity, and not the promise to do so, it would not destroy their negotiability. A written promise to pay a certain sum of money at a day certain for a consideration thereafter to be rendered is a good promissory note.

"The most that can be said of a recital in a note itself, of the consideration on which it rests, is that the indorsee, taking it before maturity, is chargeable with notice of the recital. But a recital that it is given for some future thing to be done by the payee is not enough to advise an indorsee before maturity that there will be a failure of consideration." Siegel et al. v. Chicago Trust & Sav. Bank, 131 Ill. 569, 23 N. E. 417, 7 L. R. A. 537, 19 Am. St. Rep. 51.

So in Splivallo v. Patten, 38 Cal. 138, 99 Am. Dec. 358, it was held that a note given for the rental of property is negotiable, and that an indorsee of the note, though he takes it with knowledge of the consideration, is not subject to the defense that the original payee failed to give possession of the property for the rental of which the note was given. Appellant's position really amounts to an assault upon the consideration for the payment of the notes. It is virtually the claim that the obligation to pay the notes may not mature by reason of the failure or inability of the vendor to convey title. But there can be no doubt that such possible failure of the consideration cannot defeat the right of an indorsee in good faith and for value to recover.

[2] Manifestly the question must relate to the situation at the time the notes were given. What may happen later will not affect their negotiability. Pitman v. Walker (Cal. Sup.) 203 Pac. 739.

"An instrument negotiable in its origin continues to be negotiable until it has been restrictively indorsed or discharged by payment or otherwise." Stats. 1917, p. 1539, § 3128.

We think it clear that the parties intended no qualification of the promise to pay, but said provision that the title should be withheld was for the protection of the vendor to secure the payment of said notes. The only question, as we view the case, is whether this amounted to a mortgage in the sense of the statute requiring foreclosure to secure the payment of the indebtedness. Section 726, Code Civ. Proc.

[3] The rule in this state is that, where a note is secured by a mortgage, the note, although negotiable in form, is not negotiable in law where the purchaser takes it with knowledge of the existence of the mortgage. National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881. But this undoubtedly refers to a mortgage executed in compliance with the requirements of the Civil Code. We have no such mortgage herein. It is true that in some of the decisions a similar situation is characterized as involving a mortgage, and it does possess, of course, the common feature of security. For instance, while in Chicago Railway Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 10 Sup. Ct. 999, 34 L. Ed. 349, after stating that the negotiability of the note was not affected by the fact that the title to the cars for which it was given remained in the vendor until all the notes of the same series were fully paid, the Supreme Court of the United States declared that the agreement for the retention of the title constituted a short form of chattel mortgage, it is entirely plain that it was not technically a chattel mortgage within the contemplation of the law of this state. Section 2956 et seq., Civ. Code. Indeed, it is not claimed by appellant that a foreclosure would be required to enforce the obligation, and no such issue was raised by the pleadings, appellant admitting that:

"In the event the vendor at any time should desire to retake the possession of the tractor, such vendor could do so, and, in the event he did take possession and allowed the installments to fall due under the contract, the delivery of the possession of the tractor and the payment of the balance due under the contract would be mutual and concurrent conditions, and the vendor could not recover the balance due under the contract until the possession of the said tractor had been either tendered or delivered to the vendee"—citing Liver v. Mills, 155 Cal. 462, 101 Pac. 299, and Muncy v. Brain, 158 Cal. 307, 110 Pac. 945.

It may be stated finally as to this branch of the case that the rule making a note secured by a mortgage nonnegotiable is peculiar to this state, and is based upon the theory that the note amounts to a promise to pay the balance of the indebtedness that may remain after the net proceeds of the sale under foreclosure have been applied to the payments thereof. The amount of such balance being, of course, uncertain at the time of the execution of the note, it cannot be said that the promise is to pay a certain and definite sum of money. In such case an essential element of a negotiable instrument is therefore lacking. Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 Pac. 1110.

Respondent very aptly declares that the cases cited by appellant fall naturally into three classes, and illustrate certain definite principles of law as follows:

[4] (1) Where the note upon its face is made subject to the terms of another instrument such provision is an intentional warning given by the maker to any prospective indorsee that the promise to pay is conditional upon or subject to the performance of the collateral agreement referred to. Among the cases of this character cited by appellant, Klots Throwing Co. v. Mfrs'. Co. 179 Fed. 813, 103 C. C. A. 305, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 40, and Fleming v. Sherwood, 24 N. D. 144, 139 N. W. 101, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945, may be taken as examples. In the former, the note specifically recited that it was "subject to terms of contract between maker and payee of October 25, 1905." Therein the court said:

"It is not too much to hold that when a promise is expressly limited by a provision in the note itself, assignees should take it subject to such limitation. In our opinion, the special stipulation in the present note limits and qualifies the obligation to pay so that it is not absolute, but is a prima facie obligation subject to be defeated by the maker's defenses."

In the latter the note recited:

"Payee's ownership of goods account of which this note is given, the account thereof and contract condition of original sale are not affected by accepting this note until receipt of the full amount due thereon."

It is to be observed also that in the decision the court makes a distinction between "title" and "ownership," stating that, while there is a conflict of authorities as to whether the reservation of title makes the note negotiable, there is no authority holding a note negotiable where it recites that "ownership"—that is, title and possession—was reserved. We may add that in the case at bar it is not disputed that possession of the tractor was delivered to the maker of the note.

[5] 2. When all the contemporaneous instruments constituting the transaction and known to the indorsee make it clear that the promise to pay is conditional upon the performance of certain acts by the payee. Of this line of cases we may refer to Robertson v. Kochtitzky (Mo. App.) 217 S. W. 543, and Dyer v. International (C. C. A.) 262 Fed. 296. In the former the court declared:

"The note involved here does not fall within the Negotiable Instrument Law (Laws 1905, p. 243). As it reads, it is a promissory note with conditions attached that take away from it its negotiability in that it expressly refers to and covers a contract outside of the note itself and made part of it."

It may be added, however, that therein the action was between "the original parties to the note," so that the rights of a purchaser in good faith for value were not involved.

In the Dyer Case, supra, the contract between the original parties provided that the money for which the note was given should not be paid until a certain transfer of property should be made and the evidence showed that said note and contract constituted one transaction of which the indorsee had notice. It was properly held that the note was nonnegotiable.

[6] 3. Whenever the note (or some collateral agreement known to the indorsee) makes the note payable whenever the payee deems himself insecure the due date is usually held to be uncertain, and the note nonnegotiable. For instance, in Reynolds v. Vint, 73 Or. 528, 144 Pac. 526, the Supreme Court of Oregon declared:

"A note providing, as the note in suit does, that whenever Reynolds or his agents deem the note insecure they shall have the power to declare it due, even before maturity, is nonnegotiable."

The same court followed the same rule in Western, etc., Co. v. Burnett, 82 Or. 174, 161 Pac. 384, wherein the note provided that the payee or assigns "are hereby fully authorized and empowered to declare this note due any time they may feel insecure."

[7] We can see no merit in the suggestion that the notes were rendered nonnegotiable by the fact that the payee could retake the tractor in the event of failure of payment. That circumstance does not affect the absolute promise to pay. It simply gave the payee a choice of remedies when the notes became due, either to reclaim the chattel or to sue for the money. Indeed, section 3086 of the Civil Code (Stat. 1917, p. 1533) provides that the negotiable character of an instrument otherwise negotiable is not affected by a provision which "gives the holder an election to require something to be done in lieu of payment of money." So long as the maker's promise to pay is unconditional, and absolute it makes no difference that the payee may not require payment, but may resort to another remedy.

It is undoubtedly true, in the language of respondent, that—

"Out of the necessities of trade and credit has grown the rule that an unconditional written promise to pay a sum certain at a fixed date for practical purposes shall be regarded as money itself, so that, until nonpayment at maturity has raised some question as to the validity of the promise to pay, the note may pass from hand to hand free from defenses against original parties, its value determined only by the financial responsibility of the maker, and by the rate of interest to be paid. If, however, the note itself, or some other written or oral understanding between the original parties of which the indorsee has notice, makes the time or amount of payment, or payment itself, uncertain or conditional, the instrument loses its character as mere future cash—that is, loses its negotiability—and the purchaser takes the instrument subject to all defenses existing between the original parties."

Within the contemplation of the foregoing principles we think the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. ANDERSON. (Cr. 857.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 20, 1922.)

1. Homicide $\S$ 244(1)—Facts showed that defendant did not shoot deceased under fear of being killed or suffering injury at deceased's hands.

In a murder prosecution, evidence held such that the jury was fully warranted in its conclusion that the circumstances were not sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable person, and that defendant did not shoot deceased under fear of being killed or of suffering great bodily injury at his hands.

2. Homicide $\S$ 110—Simple assault does not justify homicide.

A simple assault does not justify homicide.

3. Homicide $\S$ 276—Whether killing was in self-defense for jury.

Where the evidence in a murder prosecution showed that defendant stated, shortly before the killing, that he would "kill me a Wop to-night," the jury might have inferred that defendant shot deceased with a predetermined design to kill, and waited until deceased's hostility might create apparent necessity for taking life, and the question of self-defense was for the jury.

4. Homicide $\S$ 174(7)—Evidence of all circumstances of flight, including shooting bystander, held admissible.

In a murder prosecution, permitting the state to show all the circumstances attending the flight of defendant from the scene of the homicide, including the shooting of a bystander, who jumped on the running board of defendant's car as the latter was about to drive away, was not error.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 351(3)—Evidence of flight admissible as tending in some degree to prove consciousness of guilt.

Flight of an accused raises no presumption in law of guilt, but is admissible as tending in some degree to prove consciousness of guilt, and is received, not as part of the res gestae, but as indicative of a guilty mind.

6. Criminal law $\S$ 361(3)—Accused may show flight consistent with innocence.

Where evidence of flight of the accused had been admitted, the accused could explain it and show that it was consistent with his innocence, and the state may show the circumstances connected with the flight which would strengthen its probative value as showing guilt.

7. Homicide $\S$ 171(3)—Evidence of offenses other than for which defendant on trial inadmissible.

Evidence of offenses other than the one for which defendant is on trial is not admissible, but where the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of a person accused of another crime, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice defendant in the minds of the jury is no ground for its exclusion.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 351(4)—Willful resistance to authorized arrest a crime.

Willful resistance to arrest by an authorized officer, who is discharging or attempting to discharge his duty, is a crime under Pen. Code, $\S$ 148, if made by one who is placed on trial for the particular crime for which the officer sought to make the arrest, and may be shown in evidence against the accused, as tending to show his consciousness of guilt.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 686(1)—Permitting state to reopen its case in chief and introduce evidence of autopsy not error.

In a murder prosecution, permitting the state to reopen its case in chief and to introduce testimony as to the course of the bullet through the body of deceased, which had been exhumed, after the commencement of the trial, was not error.

10. Criminal law §686(1)—Defendant, having been given opportunity to examine exhumed body of deceased, could not complain as to court's action in reopening of case to show course of bullet.

In a murder prosecution, where the state was permitted to reopen its case in chief and introduce testimony as to the course of the bullet in deceased's body, defendant, having declined the offer of the court to take such measurements on the exhumed body as he might desire, could not complain that he was prejudiced by the court's action.

11. Criminal law §829(5) — Where law of self-defense fully covered by instruction given, refusal of instruction on self-defense not error.

In a murder prosecution, where the court's instruction fully covered the right of self-defense, the refusal of defendant's instruction on self-defense was not error.

12. Homicide §109—Killing in self-defense not unlawful.

Under Pen. Code, § 187, murder is the unlawful killing of a human being, and under section 192 manslaughter also is the unlawful killing of a human being, but if one kills in self-defense, the killing is not unlawful.

13. Criminal law §829(5)—Instruction held tantamount to instruction that state must prove defendant did not shoot in self-defense.

Where defendant relied on self-defense, an instruction that the jurors should acquit unless they believed that the prosecution had proved defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt as charged was tantamount to an instruction that the jury must acquit unless the prosecution satisfied the jurors beyond all reasonable doubt that the killing was unlawful, that is, without justification, which was equivalent to saying that the prosecution must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant did not shoot in self-defense.

14. Homicide §300(3) — Where survivor claimed self-defense, refusal of instruction as to who was aggressor and as to communicated and uncommunicated threats not error.

Where defendant claimed self-defense, the refusal of an instruction that, where one is killed in a deadly encounter and the survivor claims self-defense, the question as to who was the aggressor is of vital importance, and all acts of hostility or threats communicated or uncommunicated are proper to be considered by the jury, was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Charles W. Anderson was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Fred H. Thompson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant, who was charged with murder and convicted of manslaughter, appeals from the judgment, and likewise from an order denying him a new trial.

The homicide consisted in the killing of one G. B. Armanda on July 17, 1921, shortly after midnight, at the Montebello oil fields in Los Angeles county, and after defendant, the deceased, and three other workmen had left their work upon a well which they were drilling for the Union Oil Company. The killing, which was done by shooting Armanda as the latter stood facing defendant, who was seated in his automobile, was admitted; but it was claimed that it was done in necessary self-defense.

As is usual in such cases, there was a sharp conflict in the evidence. The version of the tragedy and of the events leading up to it, as given by witnesses for the prosecution—whose testimony, in view of the verdict of conviction, must be deemed to have been accepted by the jury as true—is substantially as follows: Defendant was the foreman of a crew of oil drillers at work on an oil rig of the Union Oil Company near Montebello. He had under him a crew of about four men, one of whom was the decedent. Work on the well was done by crews working in shifts. Defendant and the four men under him had the night shift, working eight hours, from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 12 o'clock at night. On the evening of July 15, 1921, the men under defendant's charge were talking among themselves in a joking manner about matters pertaining to the marriage relation. In the course of the conversation the deceased jokingly said something which defendant interpreted as a reflection upon the legitimacy of his birth. Taking umbrage at the remark, defendant struck deceased a blow in the face while the latter was seated at a work table. Though mutual explanations followed, and defendant apologized for his hasty act, it is evident that the event left feelings of resentment ranging in the breast of each. The next day the deceased, whose fellow workmen had nicknamed him the "Wop" told defendant not to call him "Wop" any more, but to address him by his given name. Later in the evening defendant, apparently speaking to himself, was heard to say: "I see where I am going to kill me a Wop to-night." At midnight of that day, July 16, 1921, defendant, the deceased, and the three other men who constituted the night shift ceased their work on the well and went into the "dog house," where they changed their clothes preparatory to leaving the oil rig and going to their respective homes in automobiles which were parked near by. After they had changed their clothes the five men went out the back door together; defendant, preceding the others, bidding them "good night." About this time the deceased, who had come out of the "dog house" with the others, spoke up, saying to defendant:

"You are going to kill you a Wop to-night? I guess I am the Wop. Now if you want to have this out, fight it out like a man."

Still addressing defendant, who now had his hand on his hip pocket, the deceased said:

"If you want to fight it out like a man, take your hand off that knife, and we will fight it out like a man—settle the argument."

Defendant made no reply, but, still keeping his hand on his hip pocket, walked backward up the slope of a hill toward where his automobile was parked, followed, for a short distance, by the deceased. Defendant continued to back up the hill until he found that he was not going in the right direction, when he turned and walked to his car, stepped into it, and seated himself at the steering wheel. Decedent stopped and stood still while defendant thus walked to his car. Meanwhile one V. E. Gardner, a fellow workman in whose automobile the deceased had intended returning to his home, started the motor of his car. As Gardner started his engine, the deceased turned and walked toward Gardner's car, which, while being driven down the hill toward Montebello, was slowed down so as to permit the decedent to get in. In the meantime defendant, who had started his car, stopped it directly in front of and across the path of Gardner's car, blocking the latter's passage and causing him to come to a stop about five feet from defendant's car. As Gardner's car thus came to a stop, the deceased, with his foot on the running board of Gardner's car, put his lunchpail in his friend's machine, and was standing on the running board preparatory to stepping into the car, when defendant, from his car four or five feet away, called out to the deceased, saying:

"You are a son of a bitch; you are a God damned son of a bitch."

He repeated this three or four times. Deceased replied in kind, saying:

"You are not a son of a bitch; your mother was a cow."

The deceased then took his foot from the running board of Gardner's car and started toward defendant, who was still sitting in his car. Standing some four or five feet from defendant's car and shaking his finger at defendant, but making no other hostile gesture or demonstration, the deceased, addressing defendant, said:

"Now look here, we have got to be at work to-morrow, and we have got to work together; God damn it, we are going to get along, and I just want you to understand that."

The deceased repeated this statement several times. Defendant said something in reply, when the deceased, stooping down, picked up a clod of dirt and said to defendant, "Don't you pull that knife on me or I will crown you," or, "If you draw a knife I will brain you." According to the witnesses for the prosecution, the deceased, though he told defendant that he would "crown" him if the latter "pulled" his knife, made no threatening gesture when he spoke; he did not lift his arm as though to strike defendant or to hit him with the clod of dirt that he had picked up, but kept both hands at his side. As the deceased thus stood four or five feet from where defendant was seated in his car, and while telling defendant not to "pull" a knife on him or he, the deceased, would "crown" him, there came a flash from defendant's pistol, and Armanda fell, mortally wounded. Gardner immediately sprang from his car and started to Armanda's assistance, but, noticing a spot of blood on the latter's shirt just over the heart, he jumped on the running board of defendant's car and tried to stop defendant, who, starting his car forward immediately after shooting Armanda, was leaving the scene of the tragedy. As Gardner jumped on the running board of defendant's car, he said to the latter: "Anderson, you have killed him; you better stop." Gardner had barely finished his admonition to defendant to stop when another shot rang out, and Gardner fell, shot through the shoulder with a bullet from defendant's pistol. Defendant then drove away in his machine toward his home in Montebello, where later he was arrested. The testimony respecting the shooting of Gardner went in over defendant's objection that it was not a part of the res gestæ, and was incompetent and irrelevant.

Appellant contends: (1) That the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence; (2) that the court erred in permitting the prosecution to introduce evidence of the shooting of Gardner; (3) that the court erred in permitting the prosecution to reopen its case and introduce certain testimony as to the course taken by the bullet through Armanda's body, which was exhumed after the introduction of the people's case in chief; and (4) that the court erred in refusing certain instructions requested by defendant.

[1-3] There is no merit in the claim that the verdict is against law and the evidence. Because he was seated in his automobile when he fired the fatal shot, appellant says that he had all the rights of a person in his castle, and that he was under no obligation to retreat, but could stand his ground and repel force with force. Without doubt, appellant had the right to stand his ground and to kill Armanda if, to a reasonable person, circumstanced as defendant was, that seemed necessary in order to save his own life or to save him from great bodily harm. But it was never claimed by the prosecution that appellant should retreat. Nor was it ever claimed that he would not be justified in shooting Armanda from where he sat in his car if the circumstances, as they appeared to him, were sufficient to excite the fear of a reasonable person that the deceased meant to kill him or to do him great bodily harm, and if he acted under the influence of such fear alone. What the prosecution contended was that the circumstances confronting appellant were not such as to excite the apprehension of a reasonable person. According to the witnesses for the prosecution, the deceased did not threaten to injure appellant at the time when the latter fired the fatal shot. The details of the tragedy, as recounted by the people's witnesses, were such that the jury was fully warranted in its conclusion that the circumstances were not sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable person, circumstanced as defendant was, and that appellant did not shoot Armanda under the influence of any fear of being killed or of suffering great bodily injury at the hands of Armanda. It is true, deceased had picked up a clod of dirt, but he held it at his side, saying no more to appellant than that he would "crown" him if he drew a knife, or words to that effect. The fact that the deceased had a clod of dirt in his hand, which he held at his side and threatened to use only in the event that appellant should draw a knife, did not necessarily justify appellant in taking Armanda's life in defense of his own. A simple assault does not justify homicide. People v. Webster, 13 Cal. App. 349, 109 Pac. 637. Whether the killing was done in self-defense was a question for the jury, who, from appellant's remark that he would "kill me a Wop to-night," might well have inferred that he shot Armanda with a predetermined design to kill, and that he but bided his time until decedent's hostile feelings might create the semblance of a necessity for taking life. All the circumstances and their full significance were for the jurors to determine and weigh; and their verdict, having substantial evidence to support it, cannot be disturbed unless it be vitiated by some erroneous ruling of the court.

[4-6] The court did not err in permitting the prosecution to show all the circumstances attending the flight of appellant from the scene of the homicide, including the shooting of Gardner, who, it will be recalled, jumped on the running board of appellant's car as the latter was about to drive away from the scene, and said to him, "Anderson, you have killed him; you better stop." While the flight of an accused raises no presumption in law that he is guilty, it is admissible in evidence as a circumstance to be weighed by the jury as tending in some degree to prove consciousness of guilt, and is entitled to more or less weight according to the circumstances of the particular case. Evidence of flight is received, "not as a part of the res gestæ of the criminal act itself, but as indicative of a guilty mind." Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 18. See, also, People v. Giancoli, 74 Cal. 644, 16 Pac. 510. For the same purpose the events and circumstances connected with the flight of the accused are equally admissible as a part of the res gestæ of the flight. The accused may explain his flight and may show that it was entirely consistent with his innocence; and in a like manner the people may introduce evidence of the circumstances connected with the flight which will strengthen its probative value as tending to show the guilt of the accused. Ford v. State, 129 Ala. 16, 30 South. 27; Johnson v. State, 120 Ga. 135, 47 S. E. 510. One conscious of his innocence is less liable to use a lethal weapon to avoid detention or to facilitate his escape from the scene of a tragedy than is one who fears the consequences of his guilty act.

[7, 8] It is, of course the general rule that evidence of offenses other than the one for which the defendant is on trial is not admissible. But where the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of a person accused of another crime, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jury is no ground for its exclusion. Appellant's conduct, when he was informed by Gardner that he had killed Armanda and was counseled to stop, was a circumstance proper to be brought to the knowledge of the jury, not for the purpose of showing that defendant was guilty of the additional crime of assault with intent to commit murder, but for the purpose of determining whether such conduct was or was not an indication of guilt of the crime charged; and it matters not that the evidence tended to show that the defendant was guilty of another and distinct offense. Willful resistance to arrest by a public officer who is authorized to make the arrest and who is discharging or attempting to discharge a duty of his office is a crime (Pen. Code, § 148); and yet such resistance, if it be made by one who is placed on trial for the particular crime for which the officer sought to make the arrest, may be shown in evidence against the accused as tending to show his consciousness of guilt. State v. Lambert, 104 Me. 394, 71 Atl. 1092, 15 Ann. Cas. 1055; 16 C. J. p. 553.

[9, 10] It was not error to permit the prosecution to reopen its case in chief and to introduce the testimony of the county autopsy surgeon and others as to the course taken by the bullet through the body of the deceased, which had been exhumed after the commencement of the trial. It was within the discretion of the court to allow the district attorney to reopen the case for further testimony. And since no abuse of discretion appears, there was no error. In granting the prosecution leave to reopen its case the trial judge expressly stated that, in the interest of justice, defendant would be given the opportunity to make such measurements on the exhumed body as he might desire. Appellant's counsel saw fit to decline this offer, and he cannot now be heard to say that his case was prejudiced by the court's action.

[11] Complaint is made that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions proposed by defendant bearing upon the question of self-defense. The law upon that subject was fully and fairly presented to the jury by the instructions which were given. All the necessary, fundamental, and essential legal propositions relating to the situation were clearly and fully presented in the court's instructions, including the nature of the charge against defendant, the definition of the various offenses contained therein, the necessity of the prosecution proving beyond all reasonable doubt every material element of any crime contained within the information before the jury would be warranted in finding a verdict of guilty, the presumption of innocence attending the defendant at all stages of the case, the right of the jury to determine the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of evidence, the definition of reasonable doubt, the right of self-defense, including the doctrine of appearances—in fact, everything which the situation seemed to demand. The instructions upon the law of self-defense, which were requested by defendant and refused by the court, if given, could not have thrown any more light upon that question than was furnished by the instructions allowed and read to the jury. Their rejection, therefore, was not error.

[12, 13] It seems to be appellant's contention that the court should have instructed the jury, in so many words, that the burden of proof was upon the prosecution to show that defendant did not kill Armanda in self-defense. Appellant cannot claim that the instructions given by the court placed upon him the burden of proving justification by showing a case of self-defense. Nowhere in its charge did the court say anything which, by any stretch of the imagination, might be construed as an intimation that the burden was upon defendant to justify the homicide by showing self-defense. On the contrary, the jury was instructed, in effect, that the burden was upon the prosecution to show that the killing was not done in self-defense. In its charge to the jurors the court specifically instructed them that it was their duty to acquit the defendant unless the prosecution proved his guilt "beyond a reasonable doubt * * * in the manner and form as charged." The information charged that defendant did "unlawfully" kill one G. B. Armanda. Murder is the "unlawful" killing of a human being. Pen. Code, § 187. So, also, is manslaughter the "unlawful" killing of a human being. Pen. Code, § 192. If one kills in self-defense the killing is not "unlawful." From this it follows that the instruction to the effect that it was the duty of the jurors to acquit unless they believed that the prosecution had proved defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, "in the manner and form as charged," is tantamount to an instruction that the jury must acquit unless the prosecution, by proof satisfying the minds of the jurors beyond all reasonable doubt, shall prove the killing to have been "unlawful," that is, without justification, which is equivalent to saying that the prosecution must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not shoot in self-defense.

[14] Defendant requested an instruction to the effect that where one is killed in a deadly encounter and the survivor claims that the killing was in self-defense, the question as to who was the aggressor is of vital importance, and all acts of hostility or threats "communicated or uncommunicated" are proper to be considered by the jury. In refusing to give this instruction the court did not err. While it is true that there is some evidence to the effect that prior to the day of the homicide the deceased had complained to his fellow workers of defendant's domineering conduct and spoke of him in disrespectful terms, there is no evidence that he ever made any threat to kill defendant or to do him bodily harm. For this reason we need not discuss the question whether the requested instruction involved a strictly accurate abstract statement of the law, for it is clear that it is not applicable to the evidence, and doubtless for that reason was rejected by the court.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by B. Farrell against E. A. Parkford. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Abrahams and P. B. D'Orr, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred L. Dreher, of San Francisco, and James, Pace & Smith, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the sum of $4,500 with interest alleged to be the balance due plaintiff upon a certain contract in writing for the purchase by the defendant from the assignor of plaintiff of certain manure and fertilizer, upon a certain portion of a ranch in Nevada known as the "Marker Field." The defendant in his answer admits the making of said contract, but denies that the plaintiff's assignor performed the conditions and covenants therein contained to be by her kept and performed; and denies that any sum whatever remains or is due thereon. As a special defense the defendant alleges the making of certain representations by the manager of said ranch who was the agent and representative of the plaintiff's assignor during the negotiations leading up to said contract as to the amount of manure and fertilizer upon said portion of said ranch covered by said contract, upon which representations said defendant alleges that he relied in entering into the same, and which proved to be false and untrue. The defendant also, and as a further and separate defense, alleged that said contract was entered into under a mutual mistake of fact on the part of the parties thereto as to the amount in tonnage in manure and fertilizer upon said premises, and that to the extent of that mistake the consideration of said contract had failed. The cause proceeded to trial upon the issues as thus framed, at the conclusion of which the trial court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein the court found that the parties had entered into the contract as alleged and admitted in their respective pleadings, and that plaintiff's assignor had fully performed the covenants and conditions thereof to be by her performed; that the plaintiff's assignor or her agents or representatives had made no false or fraudulent representations as to the subject-matter of said

FARRELL v. PARKFORD. (L. A. 7076.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1922.)

Sales 71(3)—Contract for sale of fertilizer construed to constitute sale in bulk.

A contract for the sale of all the fertilizer on a certain farm, to be removed within a year, for $7,500, providing for the payment of $1,000 at execution of contract and $500 each month thereafter, $1 to be paid for each ton of fertilizer removed, and the $500 payments to contract as alleged in the said defendant's separate answer and defense, nor had the said defendant relied upon any such representation in entering into said contract; that said contract was not entered into under any mutual belief or mistake of the parties as to the amount of material forming the subject-matter of said contract, and that no such belief or mistake was the moving cause of the execution of the same; and that there was no failure of consideration on the part of plaintiff's assignor for the same. The court further found that the defendant by the terms of said contract purchased from the plaintiff's assignor in bulk all of the manure and fertilizer on the premises named in the contract for the total sum of $7,500, upon which purchase price thereof the sum of $3,000 had been paid according to the terms and at the times specified in said contract, but that no further payments had been made thereon, and that there remained and was due and payable thereon the sum of $4,500, with interest, which principal and interest amounted in the aggregate to the sum of $5,077.84, for which sum judgment was accordingly ordered and entered. It is from such judgment that the defendant has taken and prosecutes this appeal.

The first contention of the appellant is that under the terms of the contract in question, as properly construed, the purchase price of the said manure and fertilizer to be purchased by him was to be calculated at the rate of $1 per ton thereof upon said premises, and removed by him therefrom up to the amount of 7,500 tons, and that in fact there proved to be but about 2,500 tons of said material thereon, of which said defendant had removed but 2,280 tons, and for which plaintiff's assignor had been fully paid, and in fact overpaid; and that the deposit of said material having been exhausted he was not liable to pay the plaintiff any more money upon said contract. This contention requires examination of the terms of said contract with a view to its proper interpretation. The first clause in said contract provides:

"That in consideration of the money to be paid at the time and in the manner hereinafter mentioned, the said party of the first part hereby sells, assigns, and transfers to the party of the second part, all manure and fertilizer on that part of the Rodgers or Reservation ranch in section 23, and known as the 'Marker Field'; and hereby agrees to allow the party of the second part a period of one (1) year from the first day of November, nineteen hundred and eighteen, and up to the first day of November, nineteen hundred and nineteen, in which to remove the said manure and fertilizer from the said land."

It then proceeds to provide that—

"The party of the second part agrees and covenants with the party of the first part as follows:

First: To pay the party of the first part as the purchase price for all of said manure and fertilizer on the land described, the sum of seven thousand five hundred ($7,500.00) dollars at the times and in the manner following, that is to say:

"One thousand ($1,000.00) dollars to be paid on the signing of this contract, and at least five hundred ($500.00) dollars on the first day of January, 1919, and a like sum of five hundred ($500.00) dollars on the first day of February, 1919, and on the first day of each succeeding month. The said payments of five hundred ($500.00) dollars being minimum payments on this contract, and shall apply upon the payment of the purchase price which shall be made as follows:

"The party of the second part shall pay or cause to be paid to the party of the first part, one ($1.00) dollar for each ton of manure removed from the said ranch until the whole of said purchase price has been paid. Provided, however, that in making settlement, the five hundred ($500.00) dollar payments shall apply on the tonnage removed during the month in which said five hundred ($500.00) dollar payment is made."

It seems to us clear that the interpretation of the foregoing provisions of said contract which the trial court placed upon them must be upheld. The plaintiff's assignor agreed to sell, and the defendant agreed to buy, all of the manure and fertilizer upon the designated premises, and agreed to remove the same within a period of one year from November 1, 1918. For this bulk amount of said material the defendant agreed to pay the sum of $7,500. He was to make this payment at the times and in the manner following: $1,000 upon the date of the execution of the contract; $500 on January 1, 1919; and a like sum on the first day of each succeeding month until the whole purchase price of said material had been paid. These monthly installment payments were, however, to be minimum payments, since the defendant was to pay for said material as he removed the same, at the rate of $1 for each ton of said material removed from the said ranch, until the whole of said purchase price had been paid; thereafter whatever remained of said material upon said premises belonged to said defendant without further payment, subject to the necessity of the removal of the same by him within the period of one year from November 1, 1918. Such was the plain intentment of this contract. The requirement therein that $1 per ton was to be paid upon the removal of the manure was not inserted therein for the purpose of fixing a tonnage valuation thereon, but was evidently inserted for the protection of the seller against the removal of any large portion of said material without payment therefor within the month of such removal. The amount of said material so contracted for in bulk upon said premises was possible and entirely susceptible of estimation as to its probable tonnage by the parties to the contract. If that tonnage did not measure up to the defendant's estimate and anticipation, that, in the absence of any fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the other contracting party, was entirely the defendant's concern. In this aspect of the case it differs in no respect from the purchase of any other specific article of personal property for a fixed price for the whole; as of a herd of ranch cattle (Cole v. Smith, 26 Colo. 506, 58 Pac. 1086); or an entire lot of goods in a certain warehouse (Brawley v. U. S., 96 U. S. 168, 24 L. Ed. 622); or of all the lumber of the seller than on hand in a certain mill (Inman Bros. v. Dudley, etc., Lumber Co., 146 Fed. 449, 76 C. C. A. 659); or all of the coal in place in a certain ledge (Timlin v. Brown, 158 Pa. 606, 28 Atl. 236). In every such case the contract is held to be only for the sale of the specific article or articles in bulk for a gross price, and the fact that upon delivery the thing sold proves less in number or weight or measurement than was the estimate of the parties at the time of the purchase, furnishes no defense against the payment of the entire purchase price, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation upon the part of the seller. The foregoing authorities fully sustain this doctrine, and in fact go so far as to give it application in cases where the quantity is estimated with the qualification of "about," or "more or less," the cases holding that the contract applies to the specific goods, and the naming of the quantity is not regarded in the nature of a warranty, but only as an estimate of the probable amount in reference to which good faith is all that is required of the party making it. Benjamin on Sales (7th Ed.) p. 713. The cases relied upon by the appellant do not militate in any degree against this doctrine; the case of Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard, 172 Cal. 289, 156 Pac. 458, L. R. A. 1916F, 1, upon which the appellant chiefly relies, is easily distinguishable from the case at bar. In that case the contract was one by which the plaintiff granted to the defendants the right to haul gravel and earth from plaintiff's land, the defendants agreeing to take therefrom all that was necessary in the construction of a certain fill and cement work on a proposed bridge, estimated at approximately 114,000 cubic yards, and for which they agreed to pay 5 cents per cubic yard. After extracting a little less than one-half of the specified amount of said material, the defendants ceased the work of extraction, and refused to pay for more than the amount actually taken. The trial court found that the deposit of said material on the plaintiff's land was far in excess of the amount taken, but that the same could not be practically removed, and hence that it was not in the contemplation of the parties that the defendants should take and pay for something the removal of which was not practicable. The distinction between the cases is obvious, since in the case cited there was no contract to pay a lump sum for a specified article, but only an agreement to pay so much per ton for material the removal of which was practicable. The court in that case referred to certain mining cases upon which the appellant herein also relies; but these, upon examination, are cases where the parties contracting to mine the ore agreed to pay royalties of so much per ton upon the ore actually extracted, the courts in such cases holding that the exhaustion of the deposit puts an end to the liability. These cases have no application to the facts of the case at bar.

The case of Williams v. Miller, 68 Cal. 291, 9 Pac. 166, which the appellant also relies upon, comes within the last-named class of cases, and is thus of no aid to the appellant herein.

We do not pass upon the technical objections urged by the respondent against the consideration of the questions presented upon this appeal, deeming it to be a case which should be considered and decided upon the merits.

The judgment is affirmed.

MADERA SUGAR PINE CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 10158.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1922.)

Master and servant ☞405(5)—Evidence held to show child's dependency within Compensation Act irrespective of statutory presumption.

In a proceeding by a 5 year old child for compensation for the death of his father, a widower, evidence of contributions for the child's support held sufficient to show that claimant was wholly dependent upon his father, irrespective of the conclusive presumption declared by Workmen's Compensation Act, § 14, as amended by St. 1919, p. 917, § 5.

In Bank.

Certiorari by the Madera Sugar Pine Company, a corporation, against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and Lilburn Milton Mankin, a minor, by Kate Manley, his guardian ad litem and trustee, to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission. Award affirmed.

Fee & Ring, of Madera, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco (Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

WASTE, J. This is a proceeding on a writ of review. Lilburn Mankin, while employed by the petitioner as a laborer, sustained injuries occurring in the course of and arising out of his employment, which resulted in his death. After proceedings duly had, the Industrial Accident Commission found that the deceased employee left surviving, alone, and wholly dependent upon him Lilburn Mankin, his son, aged 5 years, and awarded said minor child a death benefit in the sum of $4,900, payable weekly at a specified rate. The sole question presented upon the application is the correctness of an award predicated upon total dependency of the claimant. The respondent justifies its action upon two grounds: First, that it is supported by evidence of the existing facts; and, second, that it is warranted by the conclusive presumption as to the dependency of a minor, laid down in section 14 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Laws, as amended (Stats. 1919, p. 917, § 5). Both of these positions are challenged by the petitioner.

From the testimony adduced before the Commission it appears that, at the time of and for three years prior to the death of Mankin, the employee, his minor child, the claimant was not living with him, but resided with Mrs. Kate Manley, mother of Mankin's deceased wife, and maternal grandmother of the boy. The circumstances which brought about this arrangement were as follows: The mother of the little boy died in November, 1918, when the child was but two years of age. Mankin, taking the boy with him, thereupon resided for a short period with Mrs. Manley, paying her $8 a week for a time, and later $10 a week, for himself and child. When he went away, apparently to return to his employment, he left the child with Mrs. Manley, and made an arrangement with her to pay her $15 a month for the support of the boy, and to supply necessary clothes for him as needed. This arrangement Mankin faithfully kept until his death. The arrangement was satisfactory to Mrs. Manley, and the amounts paid by the father were declared by her to be sufficient to cover all the expenses of board and clothing for the child. The boy was never sick, was too young to attend school, and needed but few clothes, which the father supplied, amounting to about $30 a year.

Mrs. Manley lived separate and apart from her husband. Her 18 year old son, who lived with her, and who worked as a ranch hand, earning $18 a week when so employed; contributed to the household expenses. Mrs. Manley herself did washing as a means of support. Whatever her son contributed, her own earnings, and the amount paid to her by her son-in-law, for board and clothing for his child, went into a common fund, from which Mrs. Manley paid all the expenses. From this fact the petitioner would have it appear that both Mrs. Manley and her son contributed to the support of the boy, and he was therefore not wholly dependent upon his father for support. There is nothing in the point. In view of the uncontradicted evidence, cited above, particularly in the light of the testimony of Mrs. Manley that the amount paid her by the boy's father covered the cost of the boy's keep and clothing, the contention is scarcely worth the consideration here given to it. The record under review clearly establishes, as a fact in the proceeding before the commission, that the claimant there was wholly dependent upon the injured employee for support, and the award based upon that finding may not be disturbed.

Passing to the second phase of the proceeding here under review, respondent takes the position that the claimant for an award, being a child under the age of 18 years, physically incapacitated from earning a living because of tender age, is conclusively presumed to have been wholly dependent for support upon Mankin, the deceased parent, at the time of the injury. In making such contention respondent relies upon the provisions of section 14, subd. (a), paragraph (2), of the Workmen's Compensation Act as amended (Stats. 1919, p. 917), which in substance so declares. Whether that be so or not, and whether or not that provision of the act is unconstitutional, in that the application in this case would deprive petitioner of a proper opportunity to submit all the facts bearing upon the issue, these questions are immaterial in the face of the testimony contained in the record before us. Irrespective of the "conclusive presumption" declared by the statute, it otherwise satisfactorily appears that the claimant before the Industrial Accident Commission was wholly dependent upon the deceased employee of the petitioner for his support.

The award is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Proceedings for the appointment of an administrator of the estate of Henry S. Rollins, deceased. From an order appointing Warren K. Rollins, Florence Rollins Smith appeals. Affirmed.

Clyde R. Burr, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This is an appeal from an order appointing respondent, Warren K. Rollins, administrator of the estate of Henry S. Rollins, deceased.

Henry S. Rollins died on the 18th of April, 1921. On the 19th of April the appellant, Florence Rollins Smith, a daughter of decedent, filed a petition for appointment as administratrix of her father's estate. On May 3d following respondent, Warren K. Rollins, a son of decedent, and brother of appellant, petitioned for the issuance of letters of administration to himself. Both petitions were set for hearing and heard on the same day. No contest was made on the ground of incompetency of either applicant, but each petition was made and noticed as an original application, as provided in section 1374 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The two petitioners, as children and heirs of the decedent, were equally entitled under the provisions of section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure to appointment as administrator of the estate.

[1] When an original application for letters of administration is presented and no question of incompetency is raised by contest and appropriate averments, competency will be presumed, and no issue on that point is presented. Estate of Eliza Gordon, 142 Cal. 131, 75 Pac. 672; Estate of McCausland, 170 Cal. 136, 148 Pac. 924.

Between two applicants equally entitled to letters, and in the absence of such contest, the choice lies in the discretion of the court. Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1367.

[2] The appellant here concedes this discretionary power to the probate court, but complains that in this case the court permitted over appellant's objections the introduction of improper and incompetent evidence in aid of its discretion. The evidence received by the court was testimony tending to show that the appellant was claiming property transferred to her by the decedent under circumstances which made it apparent that an action would in all probability have to be maintained against her in behalf of the estate to determine the ownership of such property. While this circumstance did not disqualify her to serve as administratrix, it was a matter properly to be taken into account by the probate court in determining its choice between the applicants.

We know of no reason why the court was not justified in taking such testimony in aiding it in the exercise of the discretion given under section 1367 above cited in deciding which of the applicants to appoint.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

MAPEL et al. v. CANADY. (L. A. 6776.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 1, 1922.)

1. Records $\S$ 9(10 $\frac{1}{2}$)—Judgment in Torrens proceeding held not to purport to extend force of restrictive clause in prior deed.

The judgment in proceedings by H., the owner of a lot, to have it registered under the Torrens Act, adjudging H. the owner of an estate in fee simple therein, subject, however, to "conditions, restrictions, and reservations in favor of A. * * * contained in" prior deed of the lot from A. to another, does not purport to extend the force of the restrictive building clause in A.'s deed, so as to make it a covenant running with land, but merely establishes the existence of such clause and subjects the title to whatever operative force it may have.

2. Covenants $\S$ 69(2)—Building restriction not covenant running with land.

Clause in a deed "subject to the following restrictions" to the effect that only a residence of a certain value and a certain distance from the street can be erected on the lot does not create a covenant running with the land or a privity with grantees of adjoining lots.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by E. B. Mapel and others against Martha Canady. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Muhleman & Crump, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earle M. Daniels and John F. Keogh, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The object of this action was to subject certain real property owned by defendant, Martha Canady, and consisting of a city lot in a residence section of Los Angeles known as Forest Glen Heights tract, to certain building restrictions.

The tract of which the lot in question was a part had previously been owned by one E. L. Allen, who subdivided the same with a view to making it a strictly residential section. After such subdivision, Allen, by a deed of grant, bargain, and sale, conveyed title in fee to the lot in question, being lot 19 of said tract, to one Jennie A. Mannington. This deed, after the granting clause and description, contained the following clause:

"Subject to the following restrictions, no stores, offices, lodging houses, flats, or business buildings of any description to be erected, kept, or maintained upon said premises, but a residence, same when erected to cost not less than $4,000.00, same to be placed at a uniform distance of 50 feet from Forest avenue property line."

No other words of condition, agreement, reservation, or covenant relating to the limitation upon improvements to be maintained on the lot were contained in the deed.

Plaintiffs do not demand relief in this action by virtue of the terms of the deed itself. The purported cause of action is based upon proceedings taken by a subsequent owner of the lot, one William Bonine Hubbard, in registering his title under the so-called Torrens Land Act (St. 1897, p. 138).

In his petition in such proceeding Hubbard alleged his ownership in fee of the lot in question as subject to the restrictive clause as provided in the deed heretofore referred to, and in the decree in such proceeding it was adjudged that Hubbard was the owner of an estate in fee simple in said lot, subject, however, to "conditions, restrictions, and reservations in favor of E. L. Allen, whose post office address is 333 Grand avenue, Los Angeles, Cal., contained in deed recorded in Book 2329, page 244, of Deeds," in the office of the recorder of Los Angeles county, this reference being to the deed first referred to from Allen to Mannington. Subsequent conveyances under the Torrens Act vested title to the lot in Martha Canady, the respondent, with the same conditions and restrictions, designated by reference to the same deed.

The plaintiffs in this action allege no facts connecting them with any rights in the premises other than that they hold an assignment of all the rights and interest of Allen, the original grantor, in and to and under the reservations attempted to be made under said original deed, and that they are owners of other lots in the same tract and contiguous to lot 19.

[1] It is the contention of appellants that in some way the judgment in the Torrens proceeding impressed upon this real property a continuing covenant running with the land that no "stores, lodging houses, flats, or business buildings should be erected thereon."

If the judgment purported to do this, it might be necessary to consider to what extent jurisdiction under the Torrens Law extended in the matter, but such is not the judgment. It does not renew, extend, or enlarge the application of the limitation declared in the deed, but merely subjects the title under consideration to whatever burdens the deed may have imposed. It merely makes the present title subject to the conditions of the deed, but it does not and cannot add anything to the force or effect thereof.

Just as if the title in fee had been registered in Hubbard subject to the lien of a certain designated mortgage such decree would determine the existence and due execution of the instrument referred to, but would impose no further or greater lien than the mortgage itself created, and the mortgagor would in no wise be estopped from attacking any infirmities of the mortgage itself.

So in the present case the Torrens judgment establishes the existence of the restrictive clause of this deed and subjects the title to whatever operative force it may have, but the terms of the deed itself continue to be the measure of the rights conferred and the liabilities incurred.

[2] An examination of the deed in this case shows that it was not made or accepted on any condition; that the grantee did not enter into any covenant or agreement restricting his rights in the premises, that no reference is made in the deed to any other lots in the tract, or that such restrictions ran with or were for the benefit of such other lots, or that a general plan or scheme of restrictions was contemplated as to such tract; and there is nothing to indicate that such restrictions were intended to run with the land, or to create a privity of contract or estate with any grantees of the adjoining lots of the tract.

In fact, appellant concedes that the deed in question did not create any covenant running with the land, and can only sustain the action here as supplemented by the judgment in the Torrens Land Act proceeding referred to.

It is held in Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 175, 183 Pac. 949, that the instrument in which such reservation is made must contain all the conditions that make the contract binding, and the opinion in that case is epitomized in the statement of the court that—

"This whole discussion * * * may be summed up in the simple statement that if the parties desire to create mutual rights in real property of the character of those claimed here they must say so, and must say it in the only place where it can be given legal effect, namely, in the written instruments exchanged between them which constitute the final expression of their understanding."

The most that can be said for the restrictions of this deed is that they created a mere personal right of action in favor of the grantor, which was in no wise extended or enlarged in the subsequent judgment in the Torrens proceeding by registering the title as subject to the provisions contained in this prior deed.

We are of the opinion that the facts stated did not constitute a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re BOWDITCH'S ESTATE.

Taxation §883—Exercise of power of appointment under will of nonresident of property located in that state held not taxable.

The exercise of a power of a testamentary disposition by legatee under her father's will covering property in another state, title to which was in trustees, residents of such state, is not subject to the transfer tax imposed by St. 1917, p. 882, § 2, subd. 6, providing that the exercise of a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property shall be deemed a taxable transfer in the same manner as though the property had belonged absolutely to the donee and had been bequeathed or devised by the donee.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Charlotte Bowditch, deceased. From an order directing the payment of inheritance tax on transfer of certain personal property, the administratrix and certain legatees appeal. Order vacated.

Richards, Heaney & Price, of Santa Barbara (Frank M. Angellotti, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Erwin P. Werner and Karl R. Levy, both of Los Angeles (Ralph W. Smith of Sacramento, of counsel), for respondents.

LENNON, J. The administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Charlotte Bowditch, deceased, and certain legatees and devisees under said will, appeal from an order decreeing, among other things, that an inheritance or succession tax be paid on account of the purported transfer under said will of certain personal property valued at $299,260.66. The uncontradicted material facts pertinent to the point presented on the appeal are these:

J. Ingersoll Bowditch, who died in the year 1889, was a resident of the state of Massachusetts, where his will was admitted to probate and his estate distributed. By his will the property here involved was bequeathed to certain trustees in trust, to pay the net income derived therefrom to Charlotte Bowditch during her life, and, upon her death, to convey the corpus and remainder of said property "to such person or persons and in such way or manner as such child [Charlotte Bowditch] shall direct in and by * * * her last will, if any." In accordance with this testamentary direction, the trustees under the will of J. Ingersoll Bowditch paid the income from the property to Charlotte Bowditch during her lifetime, and, upon her death, transferred the property to certain persons named in her will, accepting the latter instrument as a proper exercise of the power of appointment created in her favor by the will of J. Ingersoll Bowditch. At all times herein mentioned all of said trustees were residents of the state of Massachusetts and it is stipulated that the property itself always remained physically within that state. Charlotte Bowditch, however, was a resident of the county of Santa Barbara, state of California, continuously from the date of the execution of her will, August 7, 1912, to the day of her death, September 3, 1919.

The order from which the present appeal is taken decrees that the transfers of the said trust property to the persons named in the will of Charlotte Bowditch are taxable under subdivision 6 of section 2 of the California Inheritance Act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 880), which provides, in part, that—

"Whenever any person, trustee or corporation shall exercise a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property made either before or after the passage of this act, such appointment, when made, shall be deemed a transfer taxable under the provisions of this act, in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee by will."

It is appellants' contention that the transfers in question are not taxable by the state of California.

Of prime importance in all cases concerning the determination of the jurisdiction to impose an inheritance tax is the fundamental proposition that a tax of that character is a tax upon the right or privilege of succeeding to property.

"The so-called right of inheritance, and also the right of testamentary disposition, are not inherent rights of the individual, nor are they safeguarded or secured in futuro by any provision of our constitution. They are both subject to legislative control, and are creatures of legislative will. Consequently the Legislature has the power to take away both rights, and to make the state the successor to all property upon the death of the owner. The right and power to impose a succession tax rests on this principle." Estate of Potter (Cal.) 204 Pac. 826.

In other words, the tax is imposed and is sustainable upon the theory that a state which confers the privilege of succeeding to property may attach thereto the condition that a portion of the property shall be contributed to that state. In re Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 281, 284, 49 Pac. 181. Necessarily, then, and concededly, a succession to property effected entirely independently of the authority of a particular state is not taxable by that state and is not within the purview of our inheritance tax acts.

Applying this jurisdictional test to the present case, we are confronted with the fact that, by the will of a resident of Massachusetts, probated in Massachusetts, trustees, also residents of Massachusetts, were authorized to convey certain personal property situated in Massachusetts as directed by the will of Charlotte Bowditch, who died a resident of California. The ultimate question, therefore, is whether the will of Charlotte Bowditch, in so far as the exercise of this power of appointment is concerned, is governed by the laws of California.

The law in this respect is stated in Estate of Clark, 148 Cal. 108, 112, 82 Pac. 760, 761 (1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 996, 113 Am. St. Rep. 197, 7 Ann. Cas. 306), as follows:

"Every state has plenary power with respect to the administration and disposition of the estates of deceased persons as to all property of such persons found within its jurisdiction. Thus the courts of a state may and do grant original probate upon wills of deceased non-residents who leave property within that state. In California this is expressly provided for by section 1294, supra, and the rule as to other states is the same. * * * But the limitations of the operation of this principle would also be recognized, namely that this exercise of original jurisdiction over the estates of nonresidents affects, and can affect, only the property within the state. The judgment admitting the will to probate is valid in all other states only as to the property within the jurisdiction of the court pronouncing the judgment. It has no extraterritorial force, establishes nothing beyond that, and does not dispense with nor abrogate the formalities and proofs which may be exacted by other jurisdictions in which the deceased also left property subject to their laws of administration."

It is obvious that the exercise of the power of appointment in the will of Charlotte Bowditch is governed by and dependent upon the laws of California only in the event that the personal property which is the subject of the said power is within the jurisdiction of this state. As previously stated, the personal property here involved is not actually within the state of California. Neither is it constructively within this state, under the doctrine of mobilia sequuntur personam.

"That maxim [mobilia sequuntur personam], universally applied in the jurisdiction of all civilized nations, is that the personal estate of a decedent, wherever it may in fact be located, is, for the purposes of succession and distribution, deemed to have no other locality than the domicile of the decedent." Estate of Hodges, 170 Cal. 492, 150 Pac. 344, L. R. A. 1916A, 837.

But personal property which is the subject of a power of appointment does not acquire a constructive situs in the state of the domicile of the donee of the said power under this theory, for such property is no part of the estate of the donee.

"When a donor gives to another power of appointment over property, the donee of the power does not thereby become the owner of the property. The donee has no title whatever to the property. The power is simply a delegation to the donee of authority to act for the donor in the disposition of the latter's property." Shattuck v. Burrage, 229 Mass. 448, 118 N. E. 889; United States v. Field, 255 U. S. 257, 41 Sup. Ct. 256, 65 L. Ed. 617; Walker v. Treasurer, 221 Mass. 600, 109 N. E. 647.

Therefore, for the purpose of testamentary succession and distribution, the property here involved has acquired no situs in this state, either actual or constructive, and the laws of Massachusetts alone control the transfer thereof under the will of Charlotte Bowditch.

Even if the will were accepted in Massachusetts as a valid exercise of the power of appointment because executed in accordance with the laws of California, that result would follow solely because of and under the laws of Massachusetts. It would be entirely competent for the state of Massachusetts to authorize a transfer of the property in accordance with an appointment in a will invalid under the laws of California. Sewall v. Wilmer, 132 Mass. 131.

The precise question presented in this case has not frequently arisen, and the cases which have decided the point are somewhat in conflict. However, the view above expressed is apparently in accord with the weight of authority. A case almost identical with the present case in its facts, and arising under an inheritance tax law in every material respect the same as ours, is Walker v. Treasurer, supra. In that case a resident of Maryland left personal property to trustees in Maryland by a will probated in that state. The will directed the trustees to pay the income to the wife of the testator during her life, and, upon her death, to pay the principal to persons designated by her will. The donee of the power, who was domiciled in the state of Massachusetts at the time of her death, exercised the power of appointment in a will admitted to probate in Massachusetts. The Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts held that the transfer was not subject to an inheritance tax imposed by the state of Massachusetts, for the reason that both the physical and constructive situs of the property was in the state of Maryland and no necessary incident of the transfer depended for its efficacy upon the laws of Massachusetts.

For similar reasons we hold that the transfer of the property under the power of appointment exercised by Charlotte Bowditch in her will is not subject to an inheritance tax in this state.

The order appealed from is vacated, with instructions to the court below to enter an order in accordance with the foregoing opinion.

VETERANS' WELFARE BOARD et al. v. JORDAN, Secretary of State.
(S. F. 10240.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 13, 1922.
Rehearing Denied July 13, 1922.)

1. States ☞115—Veterans' Welfare Bond Act held to create "indebtedness against state" within constitutional limitation.

The Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921, providing for a bond issue to carry out the provisions of the Veterans' Welfare Act and the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act, held to provide for the creation of indebtedness against the state within Const. art. 16, § 1, limiting the amount of indebtedness which may be created against the state, though the act makes an appropriation for the payment of the issued bonds and interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Indebted—Indebtedness.]

2. States ☞119—Any scheme which in substance gives or loans the state's credit prohibited regardless of the particular form.

Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibiting a gift or a loan to the credit of the state, prohibits any plan or scheme by which in substance and effect the credit of the state is given or loaned, regardless of the particular form which the transaction takes.

3. States ☞119—Veterans' Welfare Bond Act. In so far as it authorizes use of funds to purchase land to be sold, held violative of prohibition against giving or loaning state's credit.

The Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921 held violative of Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibiting the making of a gift or a loan of the credit of the state in so far as it authorizes the use of the funds derived from bond issue to carry out the provisions of the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act, providing for the purchase by the state of land to be sold to the veterans on credit.

4. States ☞119—Statute to achieve public purpose not unconstitutional merely because, as incident to its main purpose, state's credit is used to effectuate such purpose.

Where a separate and distinct public purpose is achieved and such public purpose is one within the constitutional powers of the Legislature to bring about, the law will not be held unconstitutional under Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibiting a gift or a loan of the credit of the state, merely because as an incident to its main purpose the credit of the state is used to effectuate that purpose.

5. Constitutional law ☞48—Doubts resolved in favor of constitutionality of statute.

Doubts are to be resolved in favor of the constitutionality of a statute.

6. States ☞119—Veterans' Welfare Bond Act, in so far as it provides for acquiring and improving land, acquiring water rights, and selling land at cost to veterans, not violative of prohibition against giving or loaning state's credit, but violative thereof in respect to loans to purchase personal property.

The Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921 held not violative of Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibiting a gift or a loan of the credit of the state in so far as it provides for the use of the proceeds of bonds to acquire, subdivide, improve, and acquire water rights for land, and to sell the land so improved to veterans at cost, such statute being devoted to a public purpose, but the act is violative thereof in so far as it provides for the loaning of money from such proceeds to enable them to purchase personal property to carry on their farming operations.

7. Statutes ☞64(8)—Invalidity of one portion of Veterans' Welfare Bond Act held not to affect validity of other portion.

The unconstitutionality of the Veterans' Bond Act of 1921, in so far as it authorizes the use of the proceeds to purchase land to be sold to the veterans on credit under the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act, because violative of Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibiting a gift or loan of the credit of the state, does not affect the statute in so far as it authorizes use of proceeds for the purchase and improvement of land to be sold to veterans at cost under the Veterans' Welfare Act, since it cannot be said that the Legislature would not have passed the act if it had known of the unconstitutionality of such portion.

8. States ☞ 113—Statute held not violative of constitutional provision requiring the creation of a debt to be for a single object.

Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921, providing for a bond issue to carry out the provisions of the Veterans' Welfare Act and the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act, held not violative of Const. art. 16, § 1, prohibiting the creation of a debt except for "some single object," in so far as it relates to the purchase and improvement of land to be sold to the veterans at cost under the Veterans' Welfare Act, since, in so far as it provides for the use of the proceeds to further the provisions of the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act, the statute is void.

9. Statutes ☞ 107(7) — Statute providing for bond issue held not violative of constitutional provision as to bill making appropriation of money containing more than one item.

Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921, providing for a bond issue to carry out the provisions of the Veterans' Welfare Act and the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act, held not violative of Const. art. 4, § 34, providing that no bill making an appropriation of money, except the general appropriation bill, shall contain more than one item of appropriation, which must be for a single purpose, since, if such constitutional provision is applicable to bond issues authorized by voters on submission of question under article 16, § 1, the appropriations therein made are for a single object.

10. States ☞ 152—Statute providing for bond issue held not violative of constitutional provision requiring such statute to provide ways and means for repayment of loan.

The Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921, providing for a bond issue, held not unconstitutional as against contention that it does not provide ways and means for the repayment of the loan, as required by Const. art. 16, § 1, in view of section 5 of the statute, providing that the bonds shall be paid from a fund to be raised in part by taxation in the same manner as moneys raised for general purposes of the state.

Mandamus by the Veterans' Welfare Board and others against Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of the State of California. Writ granted.

John U. Calkins, Jr., of Oakland, Milton D. Sapiro and George J. Hatfield, both of San Francisco, and Frederick B. Wood, for petitioners.

Gregory & Goodell, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. The petitioner, Veterans' Welfare Board, prays for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to publish an act of the Legislature known as the Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 959), as required by section 17 of that act (Stats. 1921, pp. 959, 966), as notice to the voters who are to vote on said bond issue. The respondent has refused to publish this statute on the ground that the same is unconstitutional and void. The act is entitled:

"An act to authorize the creation of a debt or debts, liability or liabilities, through the issuance and sale of state bonds, for the single object of creating a fund to carry on the operations of the Veterans' Welfare Board; * * * to provide ways and means, exclusive of loans, for the payment of the interest of such debt or debts, liability or liabilities, as such interest falls due, and also for the payment and discharge of the principal of such debt or debts, liability or liabilities, as such principal matures. * * *" (Italics ours.)

Section 1 of the act provides:

"For the purpose of creating a fund to carry on the operations of the Veterans' Welfare Board * * * the veterans' welfare finance committee created by this act shall be and it hereby is authorized and empowered to create a debt or debts, liability or liabilities, of the state of California, in the manner and to the extent hereinafter provided, but not otherwise, nor in excess thereof." (Italics ours.)

Section 2 of the act provides for the issuance and sale of state bonds of the denomination of $1,000 each and not exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000, if authorized by a majority of the voters of the state. Provision is made for the submission to the people of the act in question by printing on the ballot "For the Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921" and "Against the Veterans' Welfare Bond Act of 1921," with this explanation:

"This act provides for a bond issue of ten million dollars to be used by the Veterans' Welfare Board in assisting California war veterans to acquire farms or homes." Section 15.

It is contended by respondent that the act in question violates article 4, § 31, of the Constitution, in that it authorizes the gift or loan of the credit of the state. The money raised by the issuance of bonds under the statute is to be used to carry out the provisions of the Veterans' Welfare Act (Stats. 1921, p. 969) and the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act (Stats. 1921, p. 815), the provisions of which were recently before this court in the case of Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 206 Pac. 631. In our opinion we cited with approval the decision of the New York Court of Appeals in People v. Westchester County National Bank, 231 N. Y. 465, 132 N. E. 241, 15 A. L. R. 1344, with relation to the proposed bond issue in that state of $45,000,000, for the payment of a bonus to the world war veterans of that state. That court held that by the issuance of state bonds and the payment of the money derived from a sale thereof as a bonus to the veterans, there was a giving of the credit of the state to such individuals as received money from the proceeds of the sale of bonds in violation of the constitutional provisions of the Constitution of that state prohibiting the giving of the credit of the state to individuals. We pointed out in our decision that article 4, § 31, of our Constitution, was not violated by the terms of the two acts under consideration because the effect of the act was to loan the money, and not the credit, of the state, while article 4, § 31, prohibited the giving or loaning of the credit of the state and did not prohibit the loaning of the money of the state. It was clearly intimated in that decision that where the state was required to obtain the money so loaned by a bond issue, and the proceeds of the bonds were used for the purpose of purchasing land to be sold on credit, it was, in effect, loaning the credit of the state to the purchaser of the land from the state.

The petitioners meet this difficulty by a very ingenious argument based upon the case of People v. Pacheco, 27 Cal. 175. It is argued that, inasmuch as the Veterans' Bond Act of 1921 makes an appropriation in section 5 for the payment of the issued bonds and interest, no debt whatever is created by the issuance of the bonds. This argument would lead to the conclusion that an indebtedness, if authorized according to section 1, art. 16, of the Constitution, created no indebtedness, for that article, under the head of "State Indebtedness," provides that—

The Legislature "shall not, in any manner, create any debt or debts, liability or liabilities, * * * unless the same shall be authorized by law, * * * which law shall provide ways and means, exclusive of loans, for the payment of the interest of such debt or liability as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal of such debt or liability within seventy-five years of the time of the contracting thereof, and shall be irrevocable until the principal and interest thereon shall be paid and discharged and such law may make provision for a sinking fund to pay the principal of such debt or liability to commence at a time after the incurring of such debt or liability of not more than a period of one-fourth of the time of maturity of such debt or liability, * * * and all moneys raised by authority of such law shall be applied only to the specific object therein stated or to the payment of the debt thereby created. * * * The Legislature may, at any time after the approval of such law by the people, if no debt shall have been contracted in pursuance thereof, repeal the same." (Italics ours.)

Under this constitutional provision, such law creating an indebtedness must not only be ratified by a vote of the people, but must also make provision for repayment of the indebtedness. If it is true that no debt against the state is created within the meaning of the Constitution where ways and means are provided at the time of the creation of the debt for its payment, this section of the Constitution, in effect, would read: The Legislature shall not create any debt, where such indebtedness is in excess of $300,000, except by a law which does not create a debt and except where the people have approved such indebtedness. It is certainly a startling proposition that the issuance of $10,000,000 in interest-bearing bonds by the state does not create an indebtedness. It is obvious that the Legislature did not take this view of the situation or it would not have made provision for the submission of the bond issue to the people and would not have provided in the title of the act, and in the first subdivision thereof, for the creation of an indebtedness. It must be conceded, however, that the decision in People v. Pacheco, supra, relied upon by the petitioners, tends to support their contention that where the Legislature by statute authorizes the indebtedness, and provides and appropriates the revenue for payment of such indebtedness as it accrues, such statute does not create a debt within the meaning of article 4, § 31, and article 12, § 13, and article 16, § 1, of the Constitution. The Legislature of California, on April 4, 1864 (Stats. 1863-64, p. 344), passed a law authorizing the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California to issue bonds in the sum of $1,000 each, not exceeding $12,000,000 in all, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 7 per cent. per annum and provided that the interest coupons of the first million and a half dollars of such bonds should be payable at the state treasury. It provided for the annual levy and collection of a tax of 8 cents on each $100 of taxable property in the state to be paid into a fund from which said interest coupons should be paid as they fell due, and appropriated such money in such fund for the payment of said interest coupons. It was claimed that this law violated article 8 of the Constitution of 1849, which is substantially identical with the provisions of article 16, § 1, of the present Constitution. The Constitution of 1849, article 11, § 10, is also substantially identical with the provision of article 12, § 13, of the present Constitution:

"The credit of the state shall not in any manner be given or loaned to or in aid of any individual, association, or corporation; nor shall the state, directly or indirectly, become a stockholder in any association or corporation."

It was held in People v. Pacheco, supra, that the credit of the state was not loaned to the Central Pacific Railroad Company for the reason that the Legislature in the act authorizing the aid to the railroad company also made an appropriation to pay said interest coupons from taxes already levied. The court in that case, after quoting extensively from State v. Medbery, 7 Ohio St. 526, advanced the following proposition:

"The theory is, that if the Legislature provides a million of dollars revenue, by taxation or otherwise, for any given year, or other period of time within the constitutional limit, and appropriates a million of dollars to be paid out of it, the one balances the other, and the debt or liability of the state is not increased thereby. * * *

"In our Constitution, as we have seen, there is no restriction upon the power of taxation, or upon the objects, or the time for which appropriations may be made, except, that 'no appropriation for a standing army shall be for a longer time than two years.' As to all other objects, so far as any constitutional restriction is concerned, it may as well be for twenty as for two years. * * *

"It follows, from these views, that the act under consideration does not create, or authorize to be created, a debt, or liability, within the meaning of the limiting clause of the eighth article of the Constitution. * * *

The reasoning of this opinion would lead to the conclusion that where the Legislature by an act creating an obligation or indebtedness also levied a tax to pay the indebtedness and appropriated the proceeds of the tax levy to the payment of such indebtedness, that the appropriation balanced the indebtedness, and that there was therefore no debt created by the act within the meaning of the clause limiting the power of the state Legislature to create indebtedness, and as was held in that case, as there was no debt there was no loan of credit to the corporation. This reasoning would perhaps justify the conclusion in this case that the bond issue did not create a debt within the meaning of the section authorizing the creation of an indebtedness, and therefore that there was no loaning of credit contemplated by the law within the meaning of article 4, § 31, of the Constitution. There are, however, several points of difference between the situation presented here and that presented in the case of People v. Pacheco, supra. In that case there were no bonds issued by the state, and no proposal to submit the issuance of bonds to the voters of the state. The Legislature provided for an appropriation to pay the interest coupons upon the bonds of a private corporation secured by a mortgage upon its property. The interest accrued annually and was to be met annually by an annual tax levy in an amount fixed by the statute, authorizing the payment of the interest coupons. The court in People v. Pacheco, supra, cited State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 455, McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11, 24, and Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 248, as controlling authority for the proposition advanced; the court stating:

"The questions to be determined, are:

"Firstly—Does the appropriation made by the act for the payment by the state semiannually during the next twenty years of the interest on the first fifteen hundred bonds create a debt, or liability, within the meaning of these terms, as used in article VIII of the Constitution. * * *

"The first question appears to us to have been determined in the negative by our predecessors in the cases of the State of California v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 455, McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 24, and Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 249. * * * Page 207.

"But if the reasons for maintaining the decisions already cited upon this question were less cogent than they are, we should now hesitate long before overruling them. The last of them was rendered in 1860. The construction put upon the clause under consideration thenceforth became a judicially recognized part of the Constitution. Since that time two Legislatures have proposed, and the people have adopted, numerous amendments to other sections of the Constitution; but this provision was left unchanged. It must be presumed, therefore, that they were satisfied to have the provision under consideration stand with the interpretation thus put upon it by the courts." Pages 220-221. (Italics ours.)

In considering the effect of these decisions upon the proper interpretation of the Constitution of 1879, other decisions of the Supreme Court under that Constitution must also be considered. In the case of People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 499, an act to provide for the survey and construction of a wagon road through the Sierra Nevada Mountains at a price not exceeding $300,000 was held invalid because at the time the act was passed there was an aggregate indebtedness of the state over and above the sum sought to be appropriated of a million dollars, and the indebtedness thereby created had not been submitted to the voters of the state. In commenting upon the provisions of article 8 of the Constitution of 1849, the court stated:

"The language of the article already quoted is too clear and explicit to admit of but one interpretation. In fact, it would defy the ingenuity of the most subtle intellect to invent a consistent interpretation, other than that which naturally suggests itself from the words of the article. It is without ambiguity, and expressly forbids the Legislature from creating a debt of more than $300,000, in any way, unless the same is left to the vote of the people. So plain is the meaning of the language, that it is scarcely worth while to invoke rules of construction, and in cases where the language of an act is plain and unambiguous, courts are not permitted to resort to rules of construction to alter such meaning; but if it were otherwise, the doubt could be easily resolved by a reference to the intention of the framers of the Constitution, as appears in the reports of the Debates of the Convention, p. 165." 6 Cal. 500, 501.

"That the article was not intended simply as a limitation on the power to borrow money, is evident from its language; the words are, 'shall not in any manner create any debt or debts, liability or liabilities, which singly, or in the aggregate,' etc. A debt or liability may be created, in other ways than by the borrowing of money; it may be created by appropriation, where there is no money to meet it; it may be created by drawing on a fund where there is no cash in the treasury, or incoming revenue, to satisfy such drafts; it may be done in various ways; yet the stern letter of the Constitution imperatively forbids the Legislature from creating, in any manner, except in the mode pointed out, such debts or liabilities. * * * 6 Cal. 503.

Article 8 of the Constitution was again considered in Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65, where the act of April 18, 1856 (Stats. 1856, p. 110), providing for the erection of a state capitol at a cost not to exceed $300,000, to be paid for by bonds of the state, was held to be unconstitutional although the act, section 16, provided for the payment of said bonds, principal and interest, from funds derived from the sales or leases of lands donated to the state of California by the United States government for the purpose of erecting public buildings and authorizing the state treasurer to set aside money in the general fund to pay any additional amount necessary to pay said bonds as they accrued. Another act passed by the Legislature in 1856 (Stats. 1856, p. 48), providing for the leasing of the state prison grounds and property together with the convict labor of the state for a period of five years at a price not to exceed $15,000 per month, was held constitutional in State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429. The law was attacked on the ground that it in effect created a debt of $600,000, the board of prison directors having contracted at the rate of $10,000 a month for five years. The court said:

"The contract provides for the payment of $10,000 a month, and the act appropriates this sum per month. The appropriations are to take effect, and the services are to be rendered in future. Until the services are rendered, there can be no debt on the part of the state. The lessee could not have claimed, at any time after the making of the contract, the aggregate of all the monthly installments—because the state never owed him that amount. The state only became indebted as the services were each month performed."

This holding, it will be observed, is in line with the subsequent cases of this court in regard to municipal indebtedness. McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 Pac. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191; Higgins v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670. This view was adhered to in the case of McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11. In the case of Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 248, an act providing for the construction of a state capitol in the city of Sacramento (Stats. 1860, p. 128) was held not to violate article 8 of the Constitution of 1849, limiting the indebtedness of the state to $300,000, notwithstanding the fact that it authorized the construction of a capitol valued at $500,000, for the reason that the commissioners were only authorized to contract to the extent of $100,000 and the act appropriated $100,000 out of money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated to carry the act into effect. The court in that regard stated as follows:

"The commissioners are only authorized to contract to the extent of $100,000; though a plan be adopted by them which may require, in its execution, the half million designated. For the liabilities which may be thus incurred, the act makes provision; it appropriates, for that purpose, the requisite sum, thus anticipating their existence, and discharging them as they arise. See State v. McCauley and Tevis, 15 Cal. 429. Before any greater liabilities can be created, further legislation must be had.

"It will be thus seen that there is no analogy between this case and the case of Nougues v. Douglass et al., 7 Cal. 65, cited by the plaintiff in error. The Act of 1856, considered in the latter case, authorized a contract for the construction of a capitol for a sum not exceeding $300,000, and provided that the payments should be made in bonds of the state, redeemable in 30 years; and at the time of its passage the state was indebted to the amount limited by the Constitution without a vote of the people."

It is these three cases that were relied upon by the court in People v. Pacheco, supra, to support the proposition that no indebtedness was created by the act there in question. These cases do not purport to overrule the cases of People v. Johnson, supra, or Nougues v. Douglass, supra, but, on the contrary, distinguish such cases. It will be observed that all these cases dealt with statutes providing for annual payments to be met by annual tax levies. The decisions do not, therefore, apply to a single indebtedness, exceeding $300,000, evidenced by bonds of the state. Such an indebtedness, when created by the Legislature without the vote of the people, was held to be invalid under the provisions of article 8 of the Constitution of 1849 in the case of Nougues v. Douglass, supra, notwithstanding the act in question made provision for payment of the bonds as they accrued. So far as we know, it has never been held by this court that a bond issue submitted to the people did not create an indebtedness.

The proposition advanced in People v. Pacheco, supra, has been generally accepted throughout the United States as far as it applies to the application of appropriations to current indebtedness created during the period intervening between two sessions of the Legislature. Rowley v. Clarke, 162 Iowa, 732, 144 N. W. 908; State v. Medbury, 7 Ohio St. 529; State v. Parkinson, 5 Nev. 15; In re State Debts, 19 R. I. 610, 37 Atl. 14. But see, also, Flechten v. Lamberton, 69 Minn. 187, 72 N. W. 65. But the decision has not been accepted as authority outside of California for the proposition that bonds do not create an indebtedness where the law authorizing the bond issue provides ways and means for the payment of the bonds. State ex rel. v. Candland et al., 36 Utah, 406, 104 Pac. 285, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260, 140 Am. St. Rep. 834; Rowley v. Clarke, supra; State v. McMillan, 12 N. D. 280, 96 N. W. 310. As early as December, 1868, Judge Deady of the United States Circuit Court, in deciding the case of Coulson v. City of Portland, Fed. Cas. No. 3275, Deady's Reports, 481, 499, said:

"I have never been able to bring my mind to assent to the reasoning by which the court [in People v. Pacheco, supra] arrived at the conclusion that the act in question did not create a debt. By means of such artificial reasoning and unlooked for construction of popular and plain terms and phrases, constitutions may be purged of every prohibition upon the legislative power of taxation and creating indebtedness, which the wisdom or fears of the people may place in them."

The distinction between the legislative power of taxaton and the appropriation of money and the creation of debt during the period between the two sessions of the Legislature and the creation of obligations extending beyond the two-year period is pointed out by the Supreme Court of Iowa in the case of Rowley v. Clarke, supra. That court after calling attention to the fact that State v. McCauley, supra, McCauley v. Brooks, supra, and Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, supra, did not sustain the decision of this court in People v. Pacheco, supra, said:

"For the reasons already stated, we are not inclined to follow the California decisions. To do so would defeat the manifest design of the people in adopting the section of the Constitution in limiting indebtedness the General Assembly may create. The salutary purpose was to prevent mortgaging the revenues of the state in the future, beyond a specified amount, and, if this is to be rendered effective, it is quite as essential to denounce a scheme to incur a debt for the payment of which provision is made by a scheme of taxation as a debt to the payment of which no thought has been given. In either event, the funds to meet the obligation must be raised by taxation, and, in either, it is certain to be paid."

[1] It is true that the mere fact that the decision in People v. Pacheco, supra, may seem to us to be incorrect and illogical so far as it applies to a period in excess of the two-year period between sessions of the Legislature, would not alone justify us in departing from the rule therein laid down in the interpretation of the similar constitutional provisions in the Constitution of 1879, adopted in the light of that decision, but the decisions in People v. Johnson, supra, and Nougues v. Douglass, supra, and the cases relied upon in People v. Pacheco, supra, are also a part of the constitutional history of the state, and, in the light of these earlier cases, we do not think it can be said that either under the Constitution of 1849 or the Constitution of 1879 a bonded indebtedness authorized by vote of the people would not create a debt or liability within the meaning of the Constitution prohibiting an indebtedness of over $300,000, merely because the law authorizing the indebtedness and calling for a vote of the people also provided, as the Constitution required it must, ways and means for the payment of the bonds (article 16, § 1).

It is clear, then, that the bond issue of $10,000,000 proposed to be submitted to the people will, if authorized by vote of the people, create an indebtedness against the state when such bonds are issued.

If the money derived from the sale of the bond issue is to be given or loaned directly to the veterans, we would have exactly the question presented to the Court of Appeals of the state of New York in the case of People v. Westchester County National Bank, supra, and which was by that court held to be a violation of the constitutional provision against the giving or loaning of the credit of the state. In one sense the loaning of money derived from the sale of bonds by the state is no more a loaning of the credit of the state than loans made by a bank of money deposited in such bank is a loan of the credit of the bank. But constitutional provisions of the character under consideration by which the people seek to limit the power of the Legislature should not receive a technical construction, but should be construed in the light of the evils to be remedied and the purpose to be achieved. There is no essential difference in the effect upon the state finances between selling a bond for $100 and giving the proceeds to an individual, and giving the bond directly to the individual. The Supreme Court of the state of Minnesota, in William Deering & Co. v. Peterson, 75 Minn. 118, 77 N. W. 568, a case involving loans to farmers for the purchase of seed wheat, said:

"If the state cannot loan its credit, it cannot borrow the money on its own bonds, and then loan the money. It cannot do indirectly what it cannot do directly."

The same view was expressed by the Supreme Court of the state of North Carolina in the case of Galloway v. Jenkins, 63 N. C. 147. The Legislature of North Carolina in 1868 had passed an act authorizing the treasurer of the state to deliver $2,000,000 in coupon bonds of the state to the Chatham Railroad Company in exchange for an equal amount of its stock. It was held that this was a giving or a lending of the credit of the state within the meaning of the Constitution prohibition, notwithstanding the fact that the state received stock of the railroad corporation of an equivalent amount in exchange for its bonds. In Webb v. Lafayette

County, 67 Mo. 353, the Supreme Court of Missouri had under consideration the validity of a statute which authorized counties and townships to issue bonds in aid of railroads and which also provided that a portion of the state taxes derived from the counties and townships extending such aid should be applied by such counties and townships to the payment of such bonds without being remitted to the state treasury. This law was held unconstitutional as a giving or loaning of the credit of the state. In that connection the court stated as follows:

"To the extent that section 5 withdraws the state tax on such roads and applies it to the payment of a township subscription, every citizen of the state, in effect, and in fact, is required to pay a part of such subscription, when section 13 of the Constitution declares, 'that the credit of the state shall not be given or loaned in aid of any person, association or corporation.' It is no answer to this to say that this is not giving or loaning the credit of the state. We agree that it is not done directly, but that it is done indirectly is clear; for what is the difference between giving this tax directly to the railroad corporation, and giving it to a township to pay a debt contracted to such a corporation? Can that be done indirectly which is forbidden to be done directly? If so, constitutional inhibitions accomplish nothing, and organic laws may be set at naught by the merest evasion. We admit the power of the General Assembly to control and dispose of the funds and revenues of the state, in its fullest and broadest sense, but when it is limited and restricted by the Constitution, it is to be exercised only in conformity thereto, and not simply according to legislative will."

[2] So far as our research reveals, the decisions are unanimous upon the proposition that this provision of the Constitution prohibiting the giving or loaning of credit should be construed liberally to effect its purpose. Such construction would, therefore, prohibit any plan or scheme by which in substance and effect the credit of the state is given or loaned, regardless of the particular form which the transaction takes. In two recent decisions upholding the issuance of bonds to be devoted to the raising of money to pay veterans a bonus, provisions of the state Constitutions involved prohibiting the giving or loaning of the credit of the state were not considered. This was pointed out in People v. Westchester County National Bank, supra:

"In Minnesota the money necessary to pay a bonus was to be borrowed. It was held that the purpose of the loan was public and the act constitutional. A clause like ours was in the Constitution (section 10, art. 9), but this phase of the matter seems not to have been argued. Certainly it was not referred to in the opinion. Gustafson v. Rhinow, 175 N. W. Rep. 903 [144 Minn. 415]. Again in Washington a bonus was to be financed by an issue of bonds. Again, too, a similar clause in the Constitution (section 5, art. 8) was not referred to. But in discussing whether the purpose of the act was public, the court did say that moral obligation to make a compensation rested on the state. State ex rel. Hart v. Clausen, 194 Pac. Rep. 793."

In State v. Johnson, 170 Wis. 218, 175 N. W. 589, 7 A. L. R. 1617, one of the points raised was:

"The act violates the provisions of section 3 of art. 8 of the Constitution, which inhibits the giving or loaning of the credit of the state in aid of any individual."

The question thus raised is not discussed in the opinion for the reason evidently that the scheme there under consideration was one by which the state levied a tax for a number of years and authorized its expenditure, and therefore did not create a debt because there was no assumption of any obligation and the arrangement was to give money to the veterans when obtained from year to year by taxation.

[3] The plan contemplated by the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act to which a portion of the money raised by the bond issue is to be devoted is substantially this: The veteran selects the farm or the home which he desires to purchase and calls the attention of the Veterans' Welfare Board to his desire to purchase this particular piece of property. If they approve of the application, they purchase the land with the money of the state derived from this bond issue and sell to the veteran for the same price plus interest and a due proportion of the expense of the administration of the law, upon terms of payment by which the repayment to the state may be extended over 40 years. There is no essential or substantial difference between this procedure and the procedure which would be involved in loaning the purchase price of the land directly to the veteran and taking a mortgage back upon the property he purchased with the money so loaned. It is impossible to escape the conclusion that this is in substance and effect a loaning of the credit of the state to the veteran purchasing the farm or home. No advantage is gained by the state by reason of these loans except the fundamental and underlying advantage which is supposed to accrue from all statutes making provisions for veterans; that is, a stimulation of patriotism on the part of others who may be called upon to engage in future wars and the promotion of the general welfare by giving due recognition and reward to those who in their service for their country have jeopardized their lives and accepted the hazards of war for the purpose of perpetuating the institutions under which they live. While these considerations may well justify the classification of citizens so that such veterans receive special consideration in the making of such loans, it cannot deprive the transaction of its essential characteristics of a gift or loan of the credit of the state.

[4, 5] The Veterans' Bond Act of 1921 also provides for the use of the proceeds of the bonds by the Veterans' Board in connection with the purchase, improvement, subdivision and sale of large tracts of land contemplated by and provided for in the Veterans' Welfare Act. It is pointed out that another bond issue is pending for this same general purpose, but authorizing the purchase of the land so purchased, improved, and subdivided by settlers other than veterans. Two such settlements have already been provided for by direct appropriation of money for that purpose (Stats. 1917, p. 1566). In this scheme of subdivision in the Veterans' Welfare Act as well as in the provisions of the Veterans' Farm and Home Purchase Act for the direct purchase of individual farms or residences for the benefit of the veteran, the state pays the purchase price of the land and sells to the veteran on long terms of credit. There is, however, a very essential difference between the two schemes. In the one, no benefit accrued to the state other than the indirect one involved in the reward of the veteran; in the other, there is carried out a policy of land settlement. In the case of the land settlement provision an object is achieved other than the mere extending of credit to veterans. In the case of Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 206 Pac. 631, we called attention to the fact that the decisions were not uniform with relation to the question as to whether or not a plan of purchase and subdivision of land was a public purpose for which public money might be appropriated and used, and in that case we placed our decision as to the constitutionality of the act upon the ground that the statute authorized expenditures in aid of veterans, which is conceded to be a public purpose, and gave aid in such a way as not to violate the constitutional provisions under consideration with regard to giving of the money and credit of the state. If the purpose achieved by the purchase and subdivision and settlement of the land is a public purpose and justifies the expenditure of public money, and if the scheme provided by the Veterans' Bond Act and the Veterans' Welfare Act for the purchase and subdivision of such land accomplishes this public purpose, it may well be that we would not be justified in declaring such a law unconstitutional because of the fact that incidental to the main purpose there was an advantage to the purchaser of the land ultimately derived from the credit of the state. If we look at the form of the transaction, it is not a giving or a loaning of the credit of the state; it is a purchase of land by the state, a sale of that land, and an extension of credit for the purchase price. If we look at the substance of the transaction as we have said with reference to the Farm and Home Purchase Act, it is a loan unless there is some other factor also entering in the substance of the transaction which changes its character. Where a separate and distinct public purpose is achieved and such public purpose is one within the constitutional powers of the Legislature to bring about, we do not feel that we would be justified in declaring that the law is unconstitutional because of the fact that as an incident to its main purpose the credit of the state is used to effectuate that purpose. As has frequently been said, doubts are to be resolved in favor of the constitutionality of a statute. And if the injection into this scheme of the separate and distinct public purpose involved in land settlements raises such a doubt, the law should be upheld as constitutional.

We therefore turn to the question of whether or not the purpose sought to be achieved by the law for the settlement of large tracts of land after their improvement by the state is a public purpose. The question is a federal as well as a state question, for the taking of money by taxation for private instead of public purposes is a violation of the federal as well as of the state Constitution. For that reason the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Green et al. v. Frazier, Governor, et al., 253 U. S. 233, 40 Sup. Ct. 499, 64 L. Ed. 878, in passing upon certain statutes of North Dakota, is of great, if not controlling, importance. Among other acts of the Legislature of the state of North Dakota was one with reference to home building, as follows:

"The Home Building Act declares the purpose of the state to engage in the enterprise of providing homes for its residents and to that end to establish a business system operated by it under the name of 'The Home Building Association of North Dakota'; and defines its duties and the extent of its powers. [Laws 1919, c. 150.] The Industrial Commission is placed in control of 'The Home Building Association,' and is given the power of eminent domain, and the right to purchase and lease the requisite property. Provision is made for the formation of home building unions. The price of town homes is placed at $5,000, and of farm homes at $10,000. A bond issue of $2,000,000, known as 'Bonds of North Dakota Home Building Series,' is provided for."

In considering that matter the court upheld the state statute and laid down the following general principles and disposed of the matter as follows:

"What is a public purpose has given rise to no little judicial consideration. Courts, as a rule, have attempted no judicial definition of a 'public' as distinguished from a 'private' purpose, but have left each case to be determined by its own peculiar circumstances. Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, § 176. 'Necessity alone is not the test by which the limits of state authority in this direction are to be defined, but a wise statesmanship must look beyond the expenditures which are absolutely needful to the continued existence of organized government, and embrace others which may tend to make that government subserve the general well-being of society, and advance the present and prospective happiness and prosperity of the people.' Cooley, Justice, in People v. Salem, 20 Michigan, 452. Questions of policy are not submitted to judicial determination, and the courts have no general authority of supervision over the exercise of discretion which under our system is reposed in the people or other departments of government. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 569; German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389.

"With the wisdom of such legislation, and the soundness of the economic policy involved we are not concerned. Whether it will result in ultimate good or harm it is not within our province to inquire.

"We come now to examine the grounds upon which the Supreme Court of North Dakota held this legislation not to amount to a taking of property without due process of law. * * *

"As to the Home Building Act, that was sustained because of the promotion of the general welfare in providing homes for the people, a large proportion of whom were tenants moving from place to place. It was believed and affirmed by the Supreme Court of North Dakota that the opportunity to secure and maintain homes would promote the general welfare, and that the provisions of the statutes to enable this feature of the system to become effective would redound to the general benefit. * * *

"This is not a case of undertaking to aid private institutions by public taxation as was the fact in Citizens' Savings & Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 665. In many instances states and municipalities have in late years seen fit to enter upon projects to promote the public welfare which in the past have been considered entirely within the domain of private enterprise."

It is true that in this decision the Supreme Court of the United States announced its purpose to be controlled somewhat in its determination of the broad general question as to whether a legislative scheme takes property without due process of law, or for a private purpose, by the decisions of the various state courts based upon the knowledge of those courts of the local conditions and not to interfere with such legislative schemes under the broad provisions of the federal Constitution where the Legislature and the courts of the state have virtually declared that the purpose is a public one; unless it is very clear that the purpose is not such. It is obviously the view of the Supreme Court of the United States, and in this view we concur, that the broad general restrictions against the taking of property without due process of law ought not to be construed so as to prevent legislative action adjusted to the growing needs and the changed condition of the people. The situation existing where there are relatively small areas of public lands available for settlement is vastly different from that which confronted our ancestors when the great problem before the public was the settlement of the vast areas of fertile and vacant land which was offered to settlers at nominal prices. It is well recognized in this state that small tracts of 5, 10, 15, and 20 acres are sufficient for a single settler if accompanied by an adequate water right and used for horticulture, and that large areas of land without water are only available for perennial crops, and for that reason yield support to comparatively few people.

The Supreme Court of Washington, in State ex rel. Reclamation Board v. Clausen, 110 Wash. 525, 531, 188 Pac. 538, 541 (14 A. L. R. 1133), held a land settlement act constitutional. The problem is disposed of in the opinion as follows:

"Our problem, then, is reduced to this, is the raising of funds by taxation and the expenditure thereof for the purchase of land to the end that it be subdivided, improved and disposed of as by the terms of this act provided, the exercise of the power of taxation and the expenditure of public funds for a public purpose? * * * Is there not abundant room for arguing that the development of our unoccupied lands suitable for agriculture, by a land policy which would encourage the settlement thereon of home-owning farmers, will materially contribute to the welfare of our people as a whole? Can it not be argued with a fair show of reason that not only will such a policy ultimately lead to the enhancement of the material wealth of the state, but that it will also make for better citizenship, better notions of necessity for law and order, and a sounder and saner patriotism? In the light of the debatable character of these questions, we are quite convinced that it is not within the province of the judicial branch of our state government to answer them in the negative. Our decision sustaining the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1911, in State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 117 Pac. 1101, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466, 2 N. C. C. A. 823, 3 N. C. C. A. 599, seems quite in harmony with, and to lend support to, the conclusion we here reach. * * *

The Supreme Court of Montana, in the case of Hill v. Rae, 52 Mont. 378, 158 Pac. 826, L. R. A. 1917A, 495, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 210, held that a statute providing for loans to farmers authorized the raising of money by taxation for public and not private purposes. After reciting the fact that one-third of the productive population of Montana were engaged in agriculture and the agitation in favor of loans to farmers and the public necessity and advantage thereof, the opinion proceeds as follows:

"In the light of these circumstances it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the subject appeared to be one 'held by the strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare.' (Noble State Bank v. Haskell, supra [219 U. S. 104]), and that, whether wisely or not, the Legislature, in enacting the law in question, did believe that it was legislating to develop the resources of the state and to add to its prosperity. It is not our province to assert that this was a mistaken belief."

In Wheelon v. South Dakota Land Settlement Board, 43 S. D. 551, 181 N. W. 359, 14 A. L. R. 1145, a land settlement act was held to be for a public and not for a private purpose. The Supreme Court of Oregon, in the case of McMahan v. Olcott, 65 Or. 537, 133 Pac. 826, held that a somewhat similar law was constitutional and that it did not authorize the expenditure of public revenue for a private purpose. That statute, however, differs from the one under consideration for the reason that a part of the land embraced in the district to be improved and sold already belonged to the state.

This court has taken a liberal view in determining what constitutes a public purpose. In Daggett v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 53, 28 Pac. 51, 14 L. R. A. 474, 27 Am. St. Rep. 95, an act appropriating money for the erection of buildings and maintenance of an exhibit at the World's Fair Columbian Exposition in 1893 was held constitutional. It was held in that case that the question of whether or not a statute affects a public purpose is held to be largely one for the determination of the Legislature itself, a determination only to be interfered with in cases where it is clear that the legislative discretion has been abused. A similar appropriation was upheld by the Supreme Court of the state of Kentucky (Norman v. Board of Managers, etc., 93 Ky. 537, 20 S. W. 901, 18 L. R. A. 556). Our Constitution was amended to allow public debts to be incurred in furtherance of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Francisco. Our laws for the irrigation, reclamation, and drainage of land by moneys raised by taxation, or local assessment, have been held constitutional upon the theory that the work so authorized to be done was in furtherance of the public interest and promoted the general welfare and was for that reason a public and constitutional purpose. If it is legitimate to tax or assess the land within a given area described as an irrigation district for the purpose of bringing water to and distributing it upon the lands within the district, as has been so frequently held in this state and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, it must follow that a land settlement plan by which an agency of the state is to secure land, conduct water to it, and provide for its distribution thereon, is equally a public purpose, although for the purpose of carrying out the plan the Legislature authorizes the acquisition of the title of the land and the subsequent sale of the land as so improved.

[6] We conclude therefore that the provisions of this statute authorizing a bond issue for the purpose of acquiring, subdividing, improving, acquiring water rights for, and selling the land so improved at cost, is valid as authorizing the expenditure of public money for a public purpose.

In view of the fact that the money raised by the bond issue so far as it is to be applied to the purchase, subdivision, etc., of land under the Veterans' Welfare Act, is applied to a public purpose, it follows that the fact that incidentally there is a benefit derived by the purchaser from the credit of the state and that such purchaser is a veteran, should not render invalid such legislation. That is to say, where the transaction authorized by statute on its face purports to be a purchase and sale of land and there is no loan of credit in the ordinary acceptance of such terms and where in substance and effect the legislation accomplished a wholly different public purpose from the mere extension of credit, the law is not to be held unconstitutional as a violation of the substance and effect of the provision against lending or giving the credit of the state. In this connection, however, it should be clearly stated that we are not to be understood as approving those portions of the law providing for the loaning of money from the proceeds of the bonds to settlers to enable them to purchase personal property to carry on their farming operations. This would be as clearly a loaning of the credit of the state as in the case of the farm and home purchasing provision by which land selected by the veteran is to be purchased by the Veterans' Welfare Board and turned over to him upon long term credit is a loaning of the credit of the state.

It is true that the giving or lending of money as a bonus to an ex-soldier is also recognized as a public purpose, and we have this fact to consider in the Farm and Home Purchase Act. But the method of extending aid is one expressly forbidden by the Constitution, if we have regard to the substance and effect of the constitutional restrictions. The distinction between this situation and that involved in the purchase, improvement, subdivision, and sale of large tracts of land, already pointed out, is perhaps not very great, but enough, we think, to require us to give the benefit of the doubt, if any, of the constitutionality of this scheme, to the legislative determination of that matter.

[7] The next question that presents itself is whether the unconstitutionality of this Veterans' Bond Act of 1921, so far as it authorizes the use of money from the sale of these bonds in the farm and home purchasing scheme, affects the validity of the bond issue so far as it would authorize the Veterans' Welfare Board to use the money derived from the sale of bonds in the purchasing, improving, subdividing, and disposition of such land so subdivided. If the whole scheme were so intimately connected that the failure of one part of it would indicate that the Legislature would not have passed the other without the unconstitutional provision, the whole law would have to be declared unconstitutional. In view of the fact, however, that there are 131,000 veterans in the state of California who would be entitled to the benefit of the act and that the act authorizes lands worth $5,000 to be conveyed to one veteran, it is clear that the amount provided by the law will not be sufficient to extend the benefit of the Veterans' Welfare Act to each veteran, and it is doubted by the members of the Veterans' Welfare Board, who addressed the court in behalf of this law, whether there be sufficient money to take care of the wants of the wounded and disabled veterans who were given precedence under the law. In view of this fact, we cannot say that the Legislature would not have passed the act if they had known that the portion of it authorizing the expenditure of money for the farm and home purchasing features of the plan would have been declared unconstitutional.

[8,9] Article 16, § 1, provides that the Legislature shall not create a debt "unless the same shall be authorized by law for some single object or work to be distinctly specified therein." Article 4, § 34, also provides:

"No bill making an appropriation of money, except the general appropriation bill, shall contain more than one item of appropriation, and that for one single and certain purpose, to be therein expressed."

It is claimed by the respondent that the statute in question violates these provisions of the Constitution. The argument advanced in support of this proposition is that the law authorizes the use of the money for two purposes, that is, one for the Veterans' Welfare Act and the other for the Farm and Home Purchase Act. If this question were in doubt, it is settled by the fact that our conclusion is that the law does not authorize the use of the money derived from the sale of the bonds for the Farm and Home Purchase Act, because in so far as it does make such provision it is unconstitutional.

If it is to be assumed that article 4, § 34, applies to bond issues authorized by the voters of the state after submission to them under the provisions of article 16, § 1, it must also follow that if the statute submitting the matter to the voters is for a single object, all the appropriations therein made are also for that object and therefore for a single object within the meaning of article 4, § 34. We have no doubt that the bond issue is for a single purpose within the meaning of article 16, § 1, and that in this respect the law is constitutional.

[10] It is next contended that the law is unconstitutional for the reason that it does not provide ways and means for the repayment of the loan as required by article 16, § 1. Section 5 of the act does provide in general terms that the bonds shall be paid from a fund to be raised in part by taxation in the same manner as moneys raised for the general purposes of the state. Under our present system of taxation, the rate to be paid for state taxes is fixed by the Constitution itself, and it requires a law passed by two-thirds of the members of the Legislature to increase this tax rate. The voting of these bonds in effect pledges the Legislature as a part of the tax raising machinery of the state to provide for such increase of taxes whenever the same is necessary in order to pay the interest and principal due on these bonds, regardless of whether or not the bond act was passed by a two-thirds vote. The provision is the one usually incorporated in the laws for the submission of bond issues to the people of the state. This matter is discussed at length in the case of Morton, Bliss & Co. v. Comptroller General, 4 S. C. 430, and we content ourselves with the citation of this well-reasoned case as stating the reasons for the validity of the act in question. That case also deals with the question as to whether or not more than one subject is covered by the law there in question, and we refer to that decision upon that point also as confirming our view on that matter.

The objections to the validity of this statute are not well taken. We are not called upon to determine whether or not there are or may be other features of the law which are unconstitutional. If any of its provisions are valid, it should be published and voted upon.

Peremptory writ of mandate will issue.

FOLLETTE v. PACIFIC LIGHT & POWER CORPORATION. (L. A. 6332.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1922.)

1. Records $\S$ 9(7)—Torrens Act requires personal notice to be served on occupant if within jurisdiction.

Under Torrens Land Title Law, $\S$ 5, requiring the petitioner to set forth the name and address of each occupant of the land and what title he claims, and section 12, requiring publication of notice, but also providing that all occupants named in the petition shall be personally served with a copy of the notice attached to a copy of the petition if they reside in the state and can with reasonable diligence be found, personal notice is required to be served upon the occupants within the jurisdiction, and the publication is insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to adjudicate the claims of the occupants.

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 309(2)—Legislature can provide for substituted service of proceedings in rem without denying due process.

The Legislature can provide for substituted service of notice by publication in proceedings in rem by which the interests of the parties notified in that manner may be affected, without denying due process of law, but it did not make such provision by the Torrens Land Title Law of 1915.

3. Constitutional law $\S$ 309(2)—Decree registering title without personal service on occupant is without due process and void.

Since an occupant of land is presumed to know that under the Torrens Land Title Law he is entitled to personal service of notice in proceedings for the registration of the title, a decree rendered in such proceedings, registering the title free from claims of the occupant when he had not been personally served because the petition for registration failed to state he was occupying the premises as required, would deprive the occupant of his property without due process of law, and is utterly void.

4. Judgment $\S$ 521—Cross-complaint to quiet title in ejectment held direct attack on decree of registration.

In an action of ejectment, in which the plaintiff relied upon the title registered under the Torrens Land Title Law of 1915, a cross-complaint, which set forth facts showing want of jurisdiction in the court to render the decree of registration, and alleged it was procured by fraud and prayed for affirmative relief, was a direct and not a collateral attack upon the decree of registration.

5. Stipulations $\S$ 14(10)—Objection attack on decree was collateral held waived.

In an action of ejectment based on a Torrens registered title, in which defendant attacked the decree of registration for want of jurisdiction and fraud, an agreed statement of facts, assented to by plaintiff, which contained the facts invalidating the decree and a stipulation that all pleadings in the case might be considered as amended so as to authorize relief to which either party was entitled under the facts, waived the objection that defendant's attack on the decree of registration was a collateral attack.

6. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 232(1)—Purchaser is charged with knowledge of title of person in possession.

Except as it may otherwise be provided by statute, it is an ancient and universal rule of law that a purchaser of land is charged with notice of the title and claim of all parties in possession of the land at the time of the purchase.

7. Records $\S$ 9(13)—Torrens Land Title Law will not be construed to deny notice of claims of possessors of land unless such construction is necessary.

The Torrens Land Title Law will not be construed to overturn the universal rule that a purchaser of land is charged with notice of the title and claims of those who are in possession of the land at the time of purchase, unless such intention is made clearly to appear by express declaration or by necessary implication.

8. Constitutional law $\S$ 309(1)—Records $\S$ 9(2)—Provisions of Torrens Law, defeating right of occupants of registered land regardless of want of notice, denied due process.

The provisions of the Torrens Land Title Law of 1915, which make a purchaser of a registered title a bona fide purchaser entitled to hold as against all the world, regardless of notice with which such purchaser is charged by reason of the occupancy of the premises by another, who had not been personally served in the proceedings for registration, deprives the occupant of his property without due process of law, contrary to the United States Constitution.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action of ejectment by Channing Follette against the Pacific Light & Power Corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

B. Rey Schauer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles (E. E. Bacon, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

E. Swift Torrance, of San Diego, and Jas. W. Bell, of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment in the defendant's favor in an action of ejectment. The cause was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, which may be summarized as follows: On and prior to the 18th day of November, 1915, one Charles H. Bogart was the owner of the premises in controversy, which are situated near Baldwin Park, Los Angeles county, Cal. On the above date he made a deed to the Pacific Light & Power Corporation, a California corporation having its officers and principal place of business in Los Angeles, Cal., of an easement of right of way over and across a portion of said premises for the uses of its light and power lines as a public utility corporation engaged in the transmission to its consumers and to the general public of electric energy in various forms. This conveyance was duly recorded, and the grantee took possession of the portion of said premises required for the exercise of its said easement, and has since continuously been in the actual and visible possession and occupancy thereof. On September 8, 1916, said Bogart filed a petition in the superior court of Los Angeles county for the registration of his title to said property under the provisions of the so-called "Torens Land Title Law," adopted as an initiative measure in 1915. Stats. 1915, p. 1932. The said Bogart did not in his said petition mention or in any way refer to the fact of the existence of said easement or of the occupancy and possession of any portion of said premises by his said grantee thereunder, nor did the name of or any reference to the Pacific Light & Power Corporation appear therein, but the said Bogart alleged that he himself was and for more than five years last past had been in the actual, exclusive, and adverse possession of said premises and of the whole thereof, claiming to own the title thereto in fee simple as against all the world. Upon the filing of said petition the court ordered notice of the hearing thereon to be given as provided in said law and the said notice was thereupon published in a newspaper of general circulation in said county for four successive weeks. No service of said notice other than by said publication was made, and it is an admitted fact in the case that no other service thereof, or of any other process, was had upon the Pacific Light & Power Corporation, and that neither said published notice nor any knowledge of the pendency of said proceedings ever came to its attention until about the time of the institution of the present action by the successor in interest of the said Bogart. On December 18, 1916, the trial court, upon proof of said publication of said notice and after hearing had upon said petition, made and entered a decree of registration, decreeing said Bogart to be the sole and exclusive owner in fee simple of said premises and the whole thereof; and thereupon a certificate of title was issued to him in conformity with said decree. Thereafter, and on January 17, 1917, said Bogart sold said premises to one Leo Gibbs, who paid full value therefor, and who relied exclusively upon the said certificate of title to support his claim of being an innocent purchaser for value. On February 16, 1917, said Gibbs sold the premises in question to Channing H. Follette, the plaintiff herein, who similarly relied upon said certificate of title as supporting his claim as being an innocent purchaser thereof for value. Neither said Gibbs nor said Follette went upon or examined, either in person or by agent, the premises they were thus purchasing, nor did either of them have any actual knowledge of the claim, interest, easement, occupancy, or possession of the Pacific Light & Power Corporation in or to said premises, or any portion thereof. Shortly after the purchase of said premises by said Follette he inspected the same, and, finding the Pacific Light & Power Corporation in possession of its said portion thereof by virtue of its easement therein, commenced this action in ejectment against said corporation. The defendant appeared in due time and presented an answer, denying generally the plaintiff's averments as to his exclusive title and right of possession to the portion of said premises covered by its said easement. It also presented and filed a further and separate answer, setting forth in detail the proceedings which had been taken by said Bogart under said Land Title Act to obtain the registration of his title, and showing that all mention of said defendant of its interest in or possession or occupancy of said premises had been omitted from said proceedings, and that no notice thereof had ever been personally served upon said defendant, nor knowledge thereof been brought to its attention during the course of its occupancy of said premises or prior to the institution of the present action, and that said defendant had at all said times been and still was in the actual, exclusive, and complete possession and occupancy of the portion of said premises required in the exercise of its said easement and during all of the said time, and by the use and exercise thereof had been and was engaged in supplying electricity to its customers in its capacity as a public service corporation. It was further alleged that said defendant was a California corporation, having its officers and principal place of business in the city of Los Angeles, and being at all of said times within reach of personal service of notice. The defendant further alleged that the omission of the name, title, and interest of said defendant by said Bogart and of the fact of its possession and occupancy of said premises from his petition for the registration of the title thereof under the said Land Title Law and the failure of the said petitioner to serve upon said defendant any personal notice of the fact of the filing of said petition or of the hearing thereon were and each of them was willful and intentional, and done for the purpose of defrauding said defendant and depriving it of its said interest in said premises without due process of law. The defendant, while denominating its foregoing pleading as an answer, prayed for the affirmative relief of having its title quieted to the portion of said premises occupied by its said easement and for such other and further relief as might be meet and just in the premises. The issues being thus made up, the parties, prior to the trial of the cause, entered into the stipulation as to the agreed facts in the case above noted, in the concluding paragraph of which it was stipulated and agreed that:

"For the purpose of enabling the court to enter any judgment in this action to which either of the parties may be entitled by reason of the law applicable to the facts herein set forth, it is further stipulated that the respective pleadings of the parties herein shall be deemed to be amended by incorporating therein appropriate allegations of any or all of the facts set forth in this stipulation, and appropriate prayer by each party for all of the relief to which such party is entitled upon the aforesaid facts."

Upon the submission of the cause upon the foregoing stipulation the trial court made its findings of fact in accordance therewith, and for its conclusions of law thereon found that the defendant was entitled to judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by said action; that the certificate of title issued to said Bogart pursuant to said proceedings under said Land Title Law, in so far as it purported in any way to affect the title, possession, and occupancy of said defendant in relation to that portion of said premises covered by its said easement and right of way, was fraudulently obtained by said Bogart, and was null and void, and that all subsequent certificates of title issued to the successors in interest of said Bogart which were predicated thereon were also null and void as to the interest of this defendant; that said defendant was the owner of its easement and right of way on and over the portion of said premises occupied thereby, and was entitled to have its right, title, estate, occupancy, and possession thereof quieted against the plaintiff and all persons claiming by, through, or under him. The decree followed accordingly, and from said judgment the plaintiff has taken and prosecutes this appeal.

The first contention of the appellant upon this appeal is that the proceedings providing for the registration and certification of title in and under the said Torrens Land Title Law are proceedings in rem, and that the notices required to be given to persons who are or may be affected by such proceedings as having claims to or interests in the premises described therein, constitute, when shown to have been properly given as required by said act, due process of law, so as to give jurisdiction to the court in which such proceedings are instituted, to render a decree establishing and quieting the title to said premises in the persons found to be entitled thereto as against all the world, and that in the instant case such proceeding was instituted by said Bogart and such procedure followed in the proper publication of the notices required by said law as to give said court jurisdiction to render and enter the decree establishing the title of said Bogart against all the world, and particularly against the respondent herein, and hence the plaintiff and appellant herein, as successor of said Bogart, was entitled to a decree in his favor at the hands of the trial court in this action and hence is entitled to a reversal of the judgment herein. To the proposition that the proceedings under the so-called Torrens Land Title Law are in the nature of proceedings in rem, and that when, by pursuing the provisions of said law as to the giving of the notices required by its terms to be given to the persons or classes of persons entitled to notice, the court acquires jurisdiction to establish and quiet title to the premises affected by the proceedings, in the persons found to be entitled thereto, and such decree is good and valid against all the world, the appellant cites a large number of well-known decisions, both of this court and courts of other jurisdictions, dealing with proceedings in rem under similar enactments having for their purpose the establishing, quieting and registration of land titles. With these decisions the court has no quarrel upon this appeal. The only question presented upon this first contention of the appellant is as to whether or not the proceedings herein referred to have been commenced and conducted in conformity with the requirements of the said Land Title Law so as to have given to the trial court jurisdiction to render the decree it did render, establishing the title of said Bogart in said premises and the whole thereof, and quieting the same as against the claim, interest, and easement of the respondent herein. To resolve this proposition requires a closer examination of the several provisions of the so-called Torrens Land Title Law. By the express terms of section 5 of said law the petitioner is required to set forth, among the other facts which his application must contain, "a statement of whether or not the land is occupied, and if so, the full name and post office address of each occupant and what interest he has or claims." Section 12 of the said section provides for the form and contents of the notice to be issued upon the filing of the petition, and proceeds to provide for its service in the following manner:

"When the notice is issued, service thereof shall be made as follows: In all cases said notice shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation published in the county, to be designated by the court, for four successive weeks; if the notice is published in a daily newspaper, publication therein once a week for four successive weeks, it shall be sufficient. All parties who have not been joined in the petition or assented thereto in writing and who appear by the petition or petition and abstract or report of the examiner of titles to be interested in the fee, all occupants named in the petition * * * shall be personally served with a copy of the notice, attached to a copy of the petition, if they reside in the state and can, with reasonable diligence, be found and served therein. All owners of adjoining lands who have not given their written consent to the hearing of the petition and who reside in the state and can, with reasonable diligence, be found and served therein, shall be served with a copy of said notice, without a copy of said petition, personally."

[1] From these excerpts from the body of the said Land Title Law it appears to be the clear intendment of the law that as to every occupant of lands with respect to which the establishment and registration of the title is sought there must be a personal service of notice which serves as the process by which such person shall be brought within the jurisdiction of the court in which the proceeding for the establishment and registration of the title to the premises is pending. Any other interpretation of these essential provisions of the act giving the court jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the parties interested in such proceedings would permit the petitioner, by the mere omission of the name or names of those persons who were in the actual occupation of the premises in question from his petition, to avoid the express requirement of the law as to the personal service of the notice or process upon such person or persons. This would be to permit him to take advantage of his own wrong, and to thus violate one of the most ancient and salutary axioms of our law. This view of the subject is in harmony with what has already been said by this court in several well-considered cases involving the power of the Legislature to provide for substituted service or notice and process in proceedings in rem. In the case of Title, etc., Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 317, 88 Pac. 363, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199, Mr. Justice Sloss, in the course of an elaborate discussion of the subject, made use of this language:

"It is no doubt true that, so far as substituted service upon a class of unknown claimants is permitted at all, in proceedings which are merely quasi in rem, it rests upon the ground of necessity, and that this necessity will not justify the omission of personal service upon all who could with reasonable diligence be ascertained and found. This principle is recognized even in the cases which sustain the power to bind unknown owners by substituted service in actions of the character now under consideration. Tyler v. Judges, etc., 175 Mass. 71, 55 N. E. 812; Shepard v. Ware, 46 Minn. 174, 24 Am. St. Rep. 212, 48 N. W. 773. But we think that, a proper construction of the act under examination [the McEnerney act] does require the plaintiff to designate and to serve as known claimants all whom with reasonable diligence he could ascertain to be claimants. * * * The evident purpose of the act is to secure, so far as possible, actual notice of the proceeding to all known claimants by personal service if they reside and can be found within the state, by mailing if they cannot be so found or are nonresidents. We have no doubt that where the statute is thus careful to secure actual notice to known claimants, it should not be construed as intended to permit a plaintiff to willfully or negligently close his eyes to the means of knowledge and thus secure a decree by publication and posting alone, as against persons whose identity he might have learned by the use of due effort. * * * We are satisfied that the statute in question imposes upon the party seeking to proceed under it the duty of inquiry as to the names and residences of all persons who may claim an adverse interest in the property. * * * So construed the statute does not, nor can an action prosecuted under it, deprive any person of his property without due process of law."

In the case of Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 40, 90 Pac. 129, 121 Am. St. Rep. 90, 12 Ann. Cas. 829, which was a case involving the construction of the Torrens Land Title Act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 138) for which the present law has since been substituted, attention was called to the fact that the proceeding under that act was in all important particulars of a similar character to that provided by the "McEnerney Act" (St. Ex. Sess. 1906, p. 78), and the decision of this court above referred to as construing that act was expressly approved and given application to the Torrens Land Title Act then under review. This earlier act provided (section 6) for the inclusion in the petition of a statement:

"(e) Whether the land is occupied or unoccupied and if occupied the name and post office address of each occupant, and what estate or interest he has or claims in the land.

"(f) Whether the land is subject to any easement, lien, or incumbrance, and, if any, the name and post office address of each holder thereof, the nature and amount of the same, and, if recorded, the book and page of the record."

The present law, as is shown by the foregoing excerpt therefrom, contains substantially the same requirement as to the contents of the petition. By the terms of the earlier act it was provided that notice of the time and place of hearing upon such petition should be given "to all parties interested as shown by the petition and the abstract or referee's report * * * and the owners of adjoining lands, in the same manner as the service of a summons in a civil action and by publication for at least four weeks in some newspaper of general circulation to be designated by the court."

It will thus appear that this provision of the earlier act has in its substantial effect been carried into the present law. Commenting upon the foregoing provisions as to notice as embodied in the earlier act, Mr. Justice Shaw, in the case last above cited, says:

"We construe this provision for service of notice to mean that the service thus to be made on these persons must be personal service, except in those cases wherein, under sections 412 and 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure, service may be made by publication."

This construction of the earlier statute would require personal service of notice or process provided for in the act, upon occupants of the property who are residents of the state and admittedly within reach of personal service of process and as to which property the title was sought to be established and certified under said earlier act, and we are of the opinion that a similar interpretation must be given to the like provisions of the present law.

[2] It is not intended by this opinion to intimate that as to persons who are in the actual possession or occupancy of real estate, having or claiming an interest therein, the Legislature may not provide for the service of notice by publication of pending proceedings by which their said interests in the property may be affected, imperiled, burdened, or destroyed; such as proceedings for street improvements, for the assessment and collection of taxes or for the determination of the title to the premises. Such substituted service when provided for by the statute authorizing such proceedings has been uniformly held to be due process of law. This, however, is not such a case, since under the express terms of the Land Title Law under review the only service of notice of the proceedings to establish title which could be made upon occupants of the property was personal service. The provisions of the act as to publication of notice can have application only to those who were not in the possession or occupancy of the premises, and hence those provisions are a false quantity in the consideration of the case at bar. The case stands as though the only provision in the law as to the giving of notice was that requiring personal service upon the class of claimants in which this defendant is; and, that notice not having been given, there was in that proceeding and as to this defendant no due process of law. The distinction between these two classes of cases is expressly pointed out in State v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 47 N. E. 551, 38 L. R. A. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 756.

[3] There is another aspect of this subject which lends an added persuasiveness to the views above expressed. Persons who have an interest in real property, such as an easement therein, and who are in actual possession and occupancy of the portion of the property devoted to the exercise of such easement, are presumed to know the law under which they hold and exercise their said property rights, and hence to know the content of the Torrens Land Title Law; and, having this knowledge, they are assured by the express terms of that law that their rights and interests in said property will not be imperiled or called into question in any proceeding undertaken under said law, in which they have not been named as parties, and to which they have not been brought by personal service of notice. To adopt a construction of said law which would permit a petitioner thereunder to imperil or destroy the vested rights and interests of the occupants of the property by the simple process of omitting their names as parties to such proceedings, and by so doing obtain jurisdiction by a mere publication of notice and without that personal service of process which the law designates as to those whose names are required to be set forth in said petition, would be a manifest injustice, and would work a departure from those constitutional principles which are as old as Magna Charta and which guarantee to the owners of vested interests in property that they shall not be deprived of these without due process of law. We therefore hold in this case that the decree obtained by Bogart declaring him to be the sole and exclusive owner of the fee-simple title to the property in question to the exclusion of the rights and interests of the respondent herein, having been obtained without that personal notice of such proceeding upon this defendant in the actual occupancy and possession of a portion of the premises in question, was obtained without due process of law as to this respondent, and hence was as to said Bogart utterly void.

[4] The appellant, however, contends that, conceding the decree obtained by Bogart establishing his title to the whole of said premises to be thus void as to him, it was not void upon its face, and hence, being regular upon its face, cannot be made the subject of collateral attack. The answer to this contention is that the assault which the defendant makes upon this decree is not a collateral but a direct attack. The plaintiff as the sole foundation of his right to maintain this action in ejectment bases his asserted title upon said decree. The defendant in his second and separate answer sets forth the facts showing lack of jurisdiction in the court to render and enter said decree, and avers that the same was procured by said Bogart by fraud, and it prays for affirmative relief. Although the defendant does not denominate its answer a cross-complaint, it is, in effect, a cross-complaint, and for the purposes of this appeal should be treated as such, particularly in view of the stipulation of the parties above referred to respecting the pleadings in the case. White v. Patton, 87 Cal. 151, 25 Pac. 270; Hibernia, etc., v.

London Assurance Co., 128 Cal. 633, 61 Pac. 278, 79 Am. St. Rep. 73.

[5] There is yet another answer to this contention to be found in the stipulation of the parties as to the facts of the case to which reference has above been made. After the service and filing of the defendant's answer herein, in which we have seen he directly assails said decree, the parties to this action entered into said stipulation, in which it was expressly admitted by the plaintiff that no personal service of notice or process in the prior proceedings under the Torrens Land Title Law was ever made upon the defendant, and further admits that prior to and at the time of the institution and prosecution of said proceeding the defendant was in the actual possession and occupancy of the premises, and was a resident corporation within reach of the personal service of the process. The said agreed statement of facts containing these admissions was offered and admitted in evidence without objection. When the attack which the defendant makes upon said decree is not only not resisted as collateral but when the facts upon which it relies to establish that the decree is void are expressly admitted by the party relying upon such decree, and also expressly permitted to be introduced in evidence without objection, his present objection that the attack is collateral must be held to have been waived, and if, as a matter of law, the decree upon the admitted facts is void, it is the duty of the court to so declare. Hill v. City Cab, etc., Co., 79 Cal. 188, 21 Pac. 728; People v. Harrison, 107 Cal. 541, 40 Pac. 956; Lake v. Bonyng, 161 Cal. 120, 118 Pac. 535.

[6] In this state of the record it is obvious and undeniable that but for the provisions of the Land Title Law hereinafter to be considered the title of the plaintiff herein as the successor in interest of Bogart would have been subject to the infirmities above pointed out, as inherent in the Bogart decree, and would also be subject to the prior easement of the respondent herein by virtue of the well-established rule by which the actual possession and occupancy of the property imparts notice of the right of the possessor and occupant to those who undertake to deal with the property or the title thereto while such actual possession and occupancy exists. That under that rule a subsequent purchaser, even though he had paid full value for the property, could not be a purchaser in good faith under such circumstances, is borne out by the uniform course of decisions in this state from the very beginning of our judicial history. Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. 479; Partridge v. McKinney et al., 10 Cal. 181; Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 494, 73 Am. Dec. 593; Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660; Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393; Killey v. Wilson, 33 Cal. 690; Pell v. McElroy et al., 36 Cal. 268; Jones v. Marks, 47 Cal.

242; Pacific Mutual, etc., Co. v. Stroup, 63 Cal. 150; Dreyfus v. Hirt, 82 Cal. 621, 23 Pac. 193; Scheerer v. Cuddy, 85 Cal. 270, 24 Pac. 713; Hyde v. Mangan, 88 Cal. 319, 26 Pac. 180; Security Loan, etc., Co. v. Willamette, etc., Co., et al., 99 Cal. 636, 34 Pac. 321; Bessho v. General Petroleum Co. (Cal. Sup.) 199 Pac. 22.

This being so, the appellant herein is driven to his final contention, which is that, notwithstanding the infirmities in the Bogart decree, and notwithstanding the fact that he took the title to the premises while the respondent was in the actual possession and occupancy of said premises in the exercise of said easement, he is still protected in the supremacy of his title, ownership, and right of possession to the whole of said premises by virtue of the finding of the trial court that he took the title to said premises for full value and without any actual knowledge of the existence of the respondent's easement or of its possession and occupancy of the said premises thereunder, and also by virtue of the following further provisions of the Land Title Law upon which he particularly relies. These provisions of that act read as follows:

"Sec. 34. The registered owner of any estate or interest in land brought under this act shall, except in case of fraud to which he is a party, or of the person through whom he claims without valuable consideration paid in good faith, hold the same subject only to such estates, mortgages, liens, charges, and interests as may be noted in the last certificate of title in the registrar's office, and free from all others, except:

"1. Any subsisting lease or agreement for a lease for a period not exceeding one year, where there is actual occupation of the land under lease. The term 'lease' shall include a verbal letting.

"2. All land embraced in the description contained in the certificate which has theretofore been legally dedicated as declared by a competent court to be a public highway.

"3. Any subsisting right of way or other easement, created within one year before issue of the certificate upon, over, or in respect of the land.

"4. Any tax or special assessment for which a sale of the land has not been had at the date of the certificate of title.

"5. Such right of action or claim as is allowed by this act.

"6. Liens, claims, or rights arising under the laws of the United States, which the statutes of California can not require to appear of record upon the register. * * *

"Sec. 36. Except in case of fraud, and except as herein otherwise provided, no person taking a transfer of registered land, or any estate or interest therein, or of any charge upon the same, from the registered owner, shall be held to inquire into the circumstances under which, or the consideration for which, such owner or any previous registered owner was registered, or be affected with notice, actual or constructive, of any unregistered trust, lien, claim, demand, or interest; and the knowledge that any unregistered trust, lien, claim, demand, or interest is in existence shall not of itself be imputed as fraud.

"Sec. 37. In case of fraud, any person defrauded shall have all rights and remedies that he would have had if the land were not under the provisions of this act; provided, that nothing contained in this section shall affect the title of a registered owner who has taken bona fide for a valuable consideration, or of any person bona fide claiming through or under him.

"Sec. 38. If a deed or other instrument is registered, which is forged, or executed by a person under legal disability, such registration shall be void; provided, that the title of a registered owner, who has taken bona fide for a valuable consideration, shall not be affected by reason of his claiming title through some one, the registration of whose right or interest was void, as provided in this section.

"Sec. 39. No unregistered estate, interest, power, right, claim, contract, or trust shall prevail against the title of a registered owner taking bona fide for a valuable consideration, or of any person bona fide claiming through or under him.

"Sec. 41. In any action or proceeding brought for ejectment, partition, or possession of land, the certificate of title of a registered owner shall be held in every court to be conclusive evidence, except as herein otherwise provided, that such registered owner has a good and valid title to the land, and for the estate or interest therein mentioned or described, and that such registered owner is entitled to the possession of said land."

[7] It is the contention of the appellant that these sections of the act in question entitle the purchaser of a registered title to the premises for which he has paid full value, to hold the same by a title which shall be superior to every claim, title, or interest which has not been protected in the decree of registration or which is not expressly excepted from the application of the foregoing sections of the act; and hence that even though the respondent herein was in the open, actual, and visible possession and occupancy of the portion of said premises upon and over which its said easement was being exercised, and even though said decree of registration of the title to said premises was void as to his predecessor, Bogart, because obtained without that personal service of notice of the proceedings leading up to said decree, which could alone constitute due process of law, plaintiff's asserted title as the sole and exclusive owner of said premises in fee simple, founded upon said decree, must prevail over the respondent's easement by virtue of the foregoing provisions of the Land Title Law. To give such a broad and far-reaching interpretation to these provisions of said law would be to sweep away all of those ancient safeguards which the person in the open, actual, visible, notorious possession and occupancy of the real property under whatever claim of interest or title had, against being deprived of his right or claim of right therein, without his day in court; and would be to go so far as to declare that such a possessor and occupant of real property under a claim of right, interest, or ownership, however well founded, would be defenseless against the holder or transferee of a registered title under this act who had acquired the same, for a full consideration, but without any examination of the premises or any inquiry as to its actual possession and occupancy by another; and it would even go so far as to compel the conclusion that the purchaser of such a registered title, even with actual knowledge of the possession, occupancy, and claim of ownership of another, could still obtain by such purchase a superior title to the land. It is needless to say that such a destructive interpretation of these provisions of this law should not be adopted unless such a conclusion is found to be inevitable after a most searching scrutiny of the language and intentment of the law, since it is not to be presumed that the Legislature in the enactment of statutes, or the people in the adoption of laws, intend to overturn long-established legal principles, unless such intention is made to clearly appear by express declaration or by necessary implication. In re Garcelon's Estate, 104 Cal. 570, 584, 38 Pac. 414, 32 L. R. A. 595, 43 Am. St. Rep. 134; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746.

A cursory reading of the several sections of the Land Title Law above set forth discloses that in each of these the phrase "good faith" or its equivalent, "bona fide," is employed in relation to purchasers of registered titles. If it were possible to so construe these terms as used in said law as having the same scope and meaning as that given them by the long course of decisions prior to the adoption of this law, the case would be simplified, for the reason that such purchasers of such registered title would still be required to take notice of the actual possession and occupancy of the premises by another, and would still be bound to all that such notice imported, and hence could not be a bona fide purchaser of the premises as against the prior and superior rights and interests of such actual possessor thereof. But the framers of this law evidently intended that such should not be the interpretation to be placed upon these terms. By the provisions of section 34 of this law the only actual possession and occupation of the premises to which the title of the registered owner or his successor is subject is: (1) Of the holder of a lease or agreement for a lease for a period not exceeding one year; (2) of a public highway; (3) of a subsisting right of way or easement created within one year before issue of the certificate of title relied upon, over or in respect to the land; (4) the lien of taxes or special assessments; (5) liens, claims or rights arising under the laws of the United States. The only two of the foregoing exceptions with which we are at present concerned are those relating to leases and easements. It might well be questioned, in passing, whether the selection of these two classes of occupants of premises claimed under a registered title as exempted from its terms does not deprive this law of that uniformity of operation which the state Constitution requires in all general laws. Const., art. 1, § 11. There would seem to be no reason why the actual occupant of premises under a lease for a term greater than one year should not be as much entitled to the protection which his actual occupancy thereunder would otherwise afford as would an occupant under a lease for less than a year; nor why an actual occupant of the premises under a contract of purchase should not be entitled to the same protection as that accorded the occupant under a lease for less than one year; or why a tenant in common or a holder of a life estate in possession, or in fact any owner of any other interest in the fee should not be entitled to rely as safely upon his occupancy of the premises as this section of the act permits the lessee for less than a year to do. Nor does there appear to be any substantial reason why the owner and user of a right of way or other easement in, upon, or over the premises created more than one year before the issue of the certificate relied upon should not be as fully protected as the holder of such easement created within one year before the issuance of such certificate. This phase of the subject has, however, not been adequately presented upon this appeal, and hence will not be finally passed upon at this time, since the decision, we think, can be placed upon other and broader grounds.

To return, then, to the purposes of the framers of this law as disclosed by its express terms, it would appear from a reading of section 36 thereof, above quoted, that except as to the favored classes of occupants above referred to the purchaser of a registered title shall not be held "to inquire into the circumstances under which any previous registered owner was registered," and shall not "be affected with notice actual or constructive of any unregistered * * * interest"; and this section further declares that "knowledge that any unregistered * * * interest is in existence shall not of itself be imputed as fraud." It is thus positively and expressly stated by this section of the law, not only that the actual possession and occupancy of the premises by the holders of interests therein other than those excepted by the earlier section shall not impart notice of the rights of such possessors and occupants, but that even actual knowledge of their said possession and occupancy on the part of the purchaser of a registered title shall furnish no protection against such title. Applying this inescapable interpretation of these sections of this law to the case at bar, it would follow that even though the plaintiff had actual knowledge of the occupant's possession and occupancy of said premises in the exercise of its easement therein, and even though the plaintiff actually knew that the respondent was the owner of such easement by the purchase of the same from the plaintiff's predecessor, Bogart; and even though the plaintiff actually knew that the right and interest of said respondent and its actual occupancy of said premises thereunder antedated the proceedings for the registration of Bogart's title thereto, the plaintiff could still rest serenely upon his registered title as superior to the respondent's right and interest in the premises, and could maintain this suit in ejectment and oust the respondent therefrom. What, then, becomes of the ancient doctrine of bona fides and good faith in the purchases of real property? What of due process of law? Under this section of the law in question as thus interpreted these would no longer exist. It may be contended, however, that under section 37 of said law these ancient meanings and safeguards thus expressly destroyed have still been preserved and restored. That section reads as follows:

"Sec. 37. In case of fraud, any person defrauded shall have all rights and remedies that he would have had if the land were not under the provisions of this act; provided, that nothing contained in this section shall affect the title of a registered owner who has taken bona fide for a valuable consideration, or of any person bona fide claiming through or under him."

It may be pertinently inquired what the term bona fide, as twice employed in this section, is intended to mean. Was it intended that a purchaser having actual knowledge of the full extent of the prior rights and interests in the premises to be purchased could not with such knowledge be a purchaser in good faith? If so, what then becomes of the express terms of the former section declaring that such actual knowledge shall not be imputed as fraud? If not, then these two sections of the law are in open antagonism and confusion. This state of confusion is not relieved, but is rather increased and intensified by section 39 of the act, which declares that—

"No unregistered estate, interest, power, right, claim, contract, or trust shall prevail against the title of a registered owner taking bona fide for a valuable consideration, or of any person bona fide claiming through or under him."

In the effort to relieve ourselves of this confusion we are necessarily brought to the determination of the question whether a purchaser of property which is in the actual, open, exclusive, notorious possession and occupancy of another can be or become a bona fide purchaser of such property, so as to acquire title thereto which shall be superior to the rights and interests of such possessor. In the course of this inquiry it is essential to take note of the important place which the fact of possession has always held under our Anglo-American system of laws in relation to rights in real property. The earliest mode of conveyance of corporeal hereditaments known to the common law was that of feoffment, to which livery of seisin or delivery of possession of the property was essential. This method of conveyance prevailed during all those earlier centuries when writings were infrequent, and persisted down to the time of Charles II, when the first statute of frauds was enacted. Persons out of possession of real estate under these ancient modes of conveyance could not transfer title to the same, and hence, necessarily, possession was the best and most often the only indicia of title which the owner had. From those ancient times down to the present, by the unbroken rule of the common law and by the uniform current of both English and American authority, the actual possession and occupancy of real property imparted to all the world notice of the rights and interests of the possessor. In Holmes' Lectures on the Common Law it is pointed out that possession of property is one of the most important concepts of the common law, having its origin in that instinct which man shares with certain of the lower animals, such as the dog and the seal, and by which he will not allow himself to be dispossessed by either force or fraud of what he holds without trying to get it back again. The learned author and jurist further proceeds to show that the rights of possession and of ownership have the same essential incidents, since, as to both, the use of the property is the main element of its value. For that reason he asserts that—

Under the common law, "the owner is allowed to exclude all and is accountable to no one; the possessor is allowed to exclude all but one and is accountable to no one but him."

This concept of the importance of possession as notice of the rights and interests of the possessor has been firmly engrafted upon our American system of jurisprudence. In Washburn on Real Property, vol. 3, p. 292 (6th Ed.) it is stated that—

"The courts in many states hold that open, notorious, exclusive, unequivocal, and visible possession by a grantee in a deed is to be deemed notice of its having been made."

The courts of California are in the list of those cited by the learned author in support of this doctrine. It was held in a very early period in our judicial history that—

"The fact of open, notorious, and exclusive possession and occupation of lands by a stranger to a vendor's title, as of record, at the time of a purchase from and conveyance by such vendor out of possession, is sufficient to put such purchaser upon inquiry as to the legal and equitable rights of the party so in possession, and such vendee is presumed to have purchased and taken a conveyance from the vendor with full notice of all the legal and equitable rights in the premises of such party in possession and in subordination to these rights." Pell v. McElroy, supra.

And this court in the same case further held that—

"He cannot be regarded a purchaser in good faith who negligently or willfully closes his eyes to visible pertinent facts, indicating adverse interest in or incumbrances upon the estate he seeks to acquire, and indulges in possibilities or probabilities, and acts upon doubtful presumptions, when by the exercise of prudent, reasonable diligence he could fully inform himself of the real facts of the case."

In the case of Scheerer v. Cuddy, supra, this court said:

"Whether the respondent knew of the appellant's possession, or not, is immaterial. It was his duty to know who was in possession of the property before making the purchase, and his purchase without ascertaining the fact must be regarded as the strongest evidence of bad faith on his part. The burden of making the proper inquiry was cast upon him by the mere fact of actual possession on the part of the appellant. If it were allowed that by failing to acquaint himself with the fact of possession on the part of another than the vendor the vendee could avoid the effect of the rule above stated, he could purposely avoid any inquiry on the subject, and thereby evade the rule and its consequences entirely."

[8] In the recent case of Bessho v. General Petroleum Co., supra, the foregoing language from the case last above cited was quoted and approved. It must therefore be taken to be the long and well-settled law of this state that the actual, open, notorious, and visible possession and occupancy of real property imparts notice to those dealing with the title thereto of the rights and interests of such possessor, and that a person attempting to obtain title to such premises with such knowledge, or duty to acquire such knowledge, as such notice imparts, cannot as to such possessor be or become a bona fide purchaser thereof to the extent of being able to assert a better right or title thereto than that which his predecessors had or could have asserted. The appellant herein cites no case in which the Torrens Land Title Law has been given such effect as against the actual possessor and occupant of the property sought to be brought, as to its title, within its terms. The cases of Reeve v. Kennedy, 43 Cal. 643, Hayden v. Hayden, 46 Cal. 332, and Doyle v. Hampton, 159 Cal. 729, 116 Pac. 39, relied upon by the appellant, are not in point upon this question for the obvious reason that in none of the said cases were the rights and interests of possessors of property involved. Even in Australia and its adjacent islands, wherein the Torrens land title system had its origin and earliest development, it has been held that knowledge of existing rights in the possessor and occupant of property sought to be claimed under a registered title would serve to defeat the assertion of a superior right in the holder of such registered title. Merrie v. McKay, 16 N. Z. L. R. 124; Independent L. Co. v. Gardner, 3 Sask. L. R. 140; Conroy v. Knox, 11 Qd. L. J. 112; Biggs v. McEllister, 14 S. O. Aus. L. R. 86; Hunter Torrens Land Title Cases, 355, 366.

Our conclusion therefore is: (1) That the registration of the title to the premises in question by Bogart, under whom the appellant herein claims, was, as to the respondent herein, void, as obtained by fraud and without such service of notice upon the respondent in the actual possession and occupancy of the premises as was required by the terms of the Torrens Land Title Law in order to constitute due process of law. (2) That the respondent was entitled to assert the invalidity of said proceeding in this action, and that its affirmative pleading herein constituted a direct attack upon the decree in such proceeding. (3) That the appellant, as the successor in interest of said Bogart, taking title under said void decree, was not, as to the respondent in the actual possession and occupancy of the premises, a purchaser in good faith of said title. (4) That the provisions of the Land Title Law which purport to entitle the purchaser of a registered title to the premises in the actual possession and occupancy of another to hold the same superior to the prior rights and interests of such possessor, notwithstanding that such registered title is subject to the infirmities shown to exist in the instant case, are obnoxious to the provision of the federal Constitution, which provides that persons shall not be deprived of their property without due process of law.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILLER & LUX, Inc., v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF MADERA COUNTY et al.
(Sac. 3346.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 11, 1922.)

1. Waters and water courses ⇨224—Proceeding to compel irrigation district to comply with law held not to preclude direct attack on de jure existence.

A proceeding to compel an irrigation district to comply with the law does not admit the existence of the district as a corporation, so as to preclude determining its de jure existence in a direct attack to review the validity of the order of the county board of supervisors fixing its boundaries and ordering an election to determine whether or not it should be incorporated.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Attack of validity of irrigation district not limited to quo warranto.

Determination of the validity of the formation of an irrigation district and of an order of a county board approving the same is not confined to a quo warranto proceeding by the Attorney General, notwithstanding California Irrigation District Act, § 72, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1370, § 8, providing all findings of fact or conclusions of such board shall be conclusive unless action is instituted within six months and St. 1921, p. 76, § 1, validating the district in question.

3. Constitutional law ⇨70(3)—Legislature presumed to have made necessary inquiry.

Where the Legislature established the boundary of an assessment district, it is assumed that it took such evidence and made such inquiry as was necessary in order to determine whether or not the property included in the assessment district would be benefited, and its action in establishing the district is conclusive on the court.

4. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Hearing as to fixing boundaries of irrigation district required.

Where the boundaries of an irrigation district to be taxed are to be fixed by some commission or the board of supervisors, a hearing must be afforded property owners as to whether their lands will be benefited so as to warrant assessment thereof and as to the amounts of the assessments made.

5. Waters and water courses ⇨216—Denial of hearing as to validity of assessment for irrigation district unconstitutional.

As California Irrigation District Act, § 69, providing for proceedings by a property owner to contest the validity of an assessment, does not contemplate inquiry as to the validity of the organization of a district, which, by section 4, as amended by St. 1911 (Ex. Sess.) p. 139, can only be attacked by a quo warranto proceeding, and section 72, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1370, § 8, provides findings of fact and conclusions of the board of directors and of the board of supervisors shall be conclusive unless contested by action within six months, the only hearing afforded a landowner to oppose inclusion of his lands within a district is that given by section 38 before the board of directors sitting as a board of equalization, whose valuation, by section 39, is the basis for the ad valorem tax imposed, and any denial of the right to such hearing by the board of supervisors or any statutory provision making the order of the board conclusive on the landowner without such hearing violates both the state and the federal Constitutions.

6. Courts ⇨97(5)—State Supreme Court bound by decisions on federal constitutional questions.

The State Supreme Court is bound by the decision of the federal Supreme Court on federal constitutional questions.

7. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Legislature could authorize formation of irrigation district without preliminary petition.

The Legislature could authorize the formation of an irrigation district without any preliminary petition, or could determine the nature and character of a required petition without regard to the landowners in the proposed district.

8. Waters and water courses ⇨224—Irrigation district not a public corporation which can tax without hearing on benefits.

An irrigation district created by a county board under an act of the Legislature is an assessment district created for the primary purpose of assessing upon private lands benefits to be derived by formation of the district, not a public corporation as to which inhabitants and property owners are subject to taxation for municipal purposes without any hearing as to benefits.

9. Constitutional law ⇨289—Waters and water courses ⇨216—Prohibition of contest by landowner of question of benefit from proposed irrigation district violates due process clauses of federal and state Constitutions.

California Irrigation District Act, § 4, as amended by St. 1911 (Ex. Sess.), p. 139, in giving conclusive validity to the order of the board of supervisors as to formation of a proposed district and depriving a landowner therein of the right to contest the question of whether his land would be benefited would violate the due process clauses of the federal and state Constitutions, unless opportunity for inquiry into the question of benefits is given elsewhere, notwithstanding section 69, which permits contest of the validity of an assessment, but not inquiry into that question.

10. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Limitation of inquiry into act of board of supervisors in forming irrigation district unavailing where board acts without jurisdiction.

California Irrigation District Act, § 72, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1370, § 8, in purporting to limit all inquiry into the action of a board of supervisors in forming an irrigation district, is unavailing to prevent such inquiry where the board has proceeded without jurisdiction.

11. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Decision by board of supervisors as to benefit of irrigation district to landowner conclusive on collateral attack if hearing afforded.

Where proper notice was given to an owner of land in a proposed irrigation district of a hearing as to whether his land would be benefited and he was actually present and made his objections and declined to introduce evidence on the theory that the burden of proof was on the board of supervisors to establish the irrigability of his land and the benefit thereto, a decision by the board pursuant to such hearing is conclusive against collateral attack.

12. Certiorari ⇨68—Not proper to test jurisdictional facts.

Jurisdictional facts are not properly contested by a proceeding for a writ of review; the function of such writ being to bring the proceedings in the inferior court, including the evidence, before the court.

13. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Court bound by facts stated in complaint if any showing made by board of supervisors.

In a proceeding to annul an order of the board of supervisors approving a petition for formation of an irrigation district if any showing whatever is made in support of their action by report of the state engineer as required by California Irrigation District Act, § 2, as amended by St. 1917, p. 752, § 2, and St. 1919, p. 715, § 2, and section 2a, as added by St. 1917, p. 755, § 3, the court is bound by the facts stated in the complaint.

14. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Order of board annulled where no evidence to support.

In a proceeding to annul an order of the board of supervisors approving a petition for formation of an irrigation district, unless there was some sort of evidence or proof as to the allegations of the petition and as to the sufficiency of the signatures thereto, the order will be annulled.

15. Certiorari ⇨68—Some evidence required to prove jurisdictional facts.

In review proceedings, the courts will inquire into whether or not there was any evidence whatever to prove the jurisdictional facts, and in absence thereof will annul the order of the tribunal whose decision is under review.

16. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Certain documents may be considered by board of supervisors in determining jurisdictional facts; "evidence."

Under California Irrigation District Act, §§ 1, 2, as amended by St. 1919, pp. 714, 715, §§ 1, 2, section 2a, as added by St. 1917, p. 755, § 3, containing certain provisions with regard to the character of the evidence upon which the board of supervisors is entitled to act in its order fixing the boundaries of an irrigation district and proposing an election to determine whether such district shall be incorporated, the report of the state engineer, the certificate of acknowledgment, or the affidavit referred to therein can be considered by the board in reaching its conclusion upon the jurisdictional facts, and are "evidence" in the sense in which the term is used in proceedings to review their action.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Evidence.]

17. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Order of board approving petition for formation of irrigation district should be annulled, where no showing in support of petition.

Where the allegations of a petition for a writ of review to annul an order of a board of supervisors approving a petition for formation of an irrigation district were sufficient to warrant its issuance and it appeared from the return that no showing whatever was made before the board in support of the latter petition, the order should have been annulled.

18. Constitutional law ⚡56—Statutory provision depriving superior court of jurisdiction to review action of board of supervisors fixing boundaries of irrigation district unconstitutional.

California Irrigation District Law, § 4, as amended by St. 1911 (Ex. Sess.), p. 139, providing that a finding of the board of supervisors in favor of the genuineness and sufficiency of the petition and notice shall be final and conclusive against all persons except the state upon suit commenced by the Attorney General, is unconstitutional in so far as it deprives the superior court of jurisdiction to review the proceedings of such board, since Const. art. 6, § 5, vests jurisdiction in the superior court in certiorari.

19. Constitutional law ⚡289—Statutory provision, prohibiting certiorari to inquire into whether board of supervisors afforded due process in hearing on proposed irrigation district unconstitutional.

California Irrigation District Law, § 72, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1370, § 8, in so far as it attempts to make the findings of the board of supervisors upon a hearing as to benefits to be derived from a proposed irrigation district conclusive, so as to prohibit inquiry upon direct attack in certiorari into the question of whether or not the supervisors afforded due process of law in exercising their jurisdiction, denies due process of law, which requires a hearing upon the question of benefits and evidence upon that subject.

20. Waters and water courses ⚡216—Validating act unconstitutional in prohibiting certiorari to inquire into jurisdiction of board of supervisors in forming irrigation district.

St. 1921, p. 76, validating the organization of the Madera irrigation district as organized by the board of supervisors of Madera county in so far as it purports to prohibit an inquiry upon certiorari into the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors in making its order fixing the boundaries of the district to be benefited, is unconstitutional, since the curative act cannot cure jurisdictional defects, but only such defects and irregularities as could have been omitted by the Legislature in the first instance.

21. Waters and water courses ⚡225—Validity of order calling election to vote on incorporation of irrigation district may be inquired after district has acted as a corporation de facto.

Where an irrigation district has been exercising the powers of a de facto corporation after the electors of the district have voted for incorporation, it is not too late to inquire by a writ of review into the validity of the order calling the election.

22. Constitutional law ⚡70(3)—Presumption that Legislature considered benefits in passing act declaring irrigation district valid not applied, where Legislature expressly adopts findings of board of supervisors as to benefits.

If St. 1921, p. 76, declaring the Madera irrigation district and all proceedings in the formation thereof valid, be considered as an act creating such district, the conclusive presumption indulged in by the courts to the effect that the Legislature has duly considered the benefits to be derived by the lands included within the district is not applicable when the Legislature expressly adopts the findings of the board of supervisors as to benefits.

23. Statutes ⚡76(1)—Special act as to irrigation district invalid, where same result possible under general law.

Since St. 1921, p. 76, declaring the Madera irrigation district and all proceedings in the formation thereof valid, was passed solely to correct errors in procedure required by a general law, and not for the reason that the district could not be created under a general law, it violates Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 33, prohibiting a special law wherever a general law can be made applicable, when considered as a law whereby the Legislature exercises its own power to define the boundaries of a district by ratification of the act of the subordinate board to which it had delegated the power in the first instance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Petition for writ of review by Miller & Lux, Incorporated, a corporation, against the Board of Supervisors of the County of Madera and others, to annul an order of the board approving a petition for formation of an irrigation district and calling an election. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco (Joseph C. Sharp, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Haven, Athearn, Chandler & Farmer, of San Francisco, A. L. Cowell, of Stockton, and Stanley Murray, of Madera, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. The plaintiff petitioned the superior court of the county of Madera for a writ of review for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of an order of the defendant board of supervisors calling an election for the establishment of an irrigation district, to be known as the Madera irrigation district. A demurrer for want of sufficient facts and alleging lack of jurisdiction was interposed and sustained by the trial court, and judgment was rendered against the plaintiff in pursuance of such ruling on demurrer. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

[1] The respondents moved to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the question involved has become moot. This contention is based upon the fact that since the bringing of this suit the plaintiff has sued the Madera irrigation district in the United States District Court and in doing so has specifically alleged in its complaint therein that the Madera irrigation district is and at all times therein mentioned had been an irrigation district incorporated under the laws of the state of California and under the act known as the California Irrigation District Act (St. 1897, p. 254, as amended). That suit was brought to restrain the alleged improper use of the funds of the district. It is claimed upon the application to dismiss the case at bar that by this action in the United States District Court the plaintiff has accepted the benefits of the judgment in the court below sustaining the validity of the incorporation of this district. It is further claimed that the plaintiff by filing in this court a petition for writ of mandate directed against the secretary of the Madera irrigation district to compel the secretary of the district to permit the inspection of the public writings and records of said district has further acquiesced in and accepted the judgment of the lower court. In a proceeding to enjoin the improper use of the funds of the district or to compel the inspection of its records the plaintiff could not attack the validity of the organization of a de facto corporation and for the purposes of those proceedings was not only entitled to proceed upon the theory that defendant was a corporation, but was compelled so to do. It follows that the proceedings taken by the plaintiff and its officers to compel the Madera irrigation district to comply with the law regulating irrigation districts is not such an admission of the existence of the corporation as would preclude the prosecution of an appeal in this proceeding, involving, as it does, the question of the de jure existence of the corporation in a direct attack by a review of the validity of the order of the supervisors fixing the boundaries of the district and ordering an election by the people of the district to determine whether or not it should be incorporated. The motion to dismiss this appeal should be denied.

We will proceed to a determination of the merits of the appeal. The petition for the writ of review herein alleges that the plaintiff's lands lie within the proposed district. The sufficiency of the petition to the board of supervisors and of the notice of the hearing thereof are not questioned except by the allegations that no evidence was introduced before the board of supervisors in support of the allegations of the petition or to establish the status of the petitioner. The petition alleges some 25 particulars, wherein it is claimed that evidence was essential to give the board jurisdiction to act in fixing the boundaries of the proposed district and ordering an election, and alleges that no evidence whatever was offered upon these matters. It is further alleged that on November 3rd, the date of the hearing upon the petition for the formation of the irrigation district, that the plaintiff filed written objection to the inclusion of its lands within the district upon the ground that said lands would not be benefited by being included within said district and that said lands were not susceptible of irrigation from the same source or by the same system of works as the remainder of the lands within the boundaries of the said proposed irrigation district.

Without mentioning in detail the various matters upon which it is alleged no evidence was introduced before the board of supervisors, it may be said generally that said objection relates to the sufficiency of the signatures attached to the petition, to the publication of the notice of hearing on said petition, and that no evidence was introduced in support of or opposed to the objection of the petitioner that its lands would not be benefited by the irrigation system described in the petition or by the formation of said district.

In Imperial Water Co. v. Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, 120 Pac. 780, it was held that the order of the board of supervisors fixing the boundaries of a proposed irrigation district was a judicial act subject to review by the court upon a writ of certiorari. The law, as originally enacted, provided in section 4 for an appeal to the superior court of the county from the order of the board calling the election. That section was declared unconstitutional in Chinn v. Superior Court, 156 Cal. 478, 105 Pac. 580. See, also, Inglis v. Hopkin, 156 Cal. 483, 491, 105 Pac. 582; Matter of Bonds of San Joaquin Irr. Dist., 161 Cal. 346, 119 Pac. 198.

The Legislature, at an extra session of 1911, amended section 4 of the act (Ex. Sess. of 1911, p. 139, c. 36) to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. A finding of the board of supervisors in favor of the genuineness and sufficiency of the petition and notice shall be final and conclusive against all persons except the state of California upon suit commenced by the Attorney General. Any such suit must be commenced within one year after the order of the board of supervisors declaring such district organized as herein provided, and not otherwise."

[2] It is contended that under this amended section the only way in which the validity of the order and of the formation of the district can be inquired into is in a quo warranto proceeding instituted by the Attorney General. The difficulty with respondents' contention in that regard is that the jurisdiction of this court and of the superior court to entertain writs of review is given by the Constitution (article 6, §§ 4, 5), and this power cannot be taken away by the Legislature.

Camron v. Kenfield, 57 Cal. 550; Farmers' Union v. Thresher, 62 Cal. 407; City of Tulare v. Hevren, 126 Cal. 226, 58 Pac. 530; Pacific Telephone, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 652, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822; Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 186, 149 Pac. 35.

In addition to section 4, the California Irrigation Act, as amended in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 1370), contains certain curative provisions which will be hereinafter more fully discussed. The section is as follows:

"Sec. 72. Contests. No contest of anything or matter herein provided shall be made other than within the time and manner herein specified, and in any such action all findings of facts or conclusions of said board of directors, or of the board of supervisors upon all matters shall be conclusive, unless such action was instituted within six months after such finding or conclusion was made."

Furthermore, the Legislature on May 12, 1921 (page 76), passed an act validating the organization of the Madera irrigation district as formed and organized by the board of supervisors of said county, which act is in the following words and figures, to wit:

"Section 1. Madera irrigation district, in the county of Madera, state of California, as formed and organized by the board of supervisors of said county, and as now existing, or as the boundaries thereof may hereafter be modified according to law, is hereby recognized and declared a valid irrigation district with all the powers and authority vested in irrigation districts, and all proceedings on formation and organization of said district are hereby approved and in all respects declared valid."

Before considering the effect of sections 4 and 72, supra, of the California Irrigation Act and of the validating act, supra, we will first examine the question as to the power of the Legislature over the subject-matter in the light of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and similar provisions in our own Constitution prohibiting the taking of property without due process of law.

[3] Where the Legislature establishes the boundary of an assessment district it is assumed that the Legislature took such evidence and made such inquiry as was necessary in order to determine whether or not the property included in the assessment district would be benefited and its action in establishing the district is conclusive on the court. People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 Pac. 207; Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Drainage District, 182 Cal. 252, 265, 187 Pac. 1041; Los Angeles County Flood Control District v. Hamilton, 177 Cal. 119, 169 Pac. 1028; Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369; Brookes v. City of Oakland, 160 Cal. 423, 427, 117 Pac. 433.

[4] Where the fixing of the boundaries of the district to be taxed is left to some commission or to the board of supervisors it is essential that property owners whose property is to be taxed shall be given a hearing upon the question as to whether or not their lands should be assessed at all, that is to say, whether or not such lands would be benefited by the proposed improvement, and also a hearing upon the amount of the assessment to be charged against the property. Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369, supra; Brookes v. City of Oakland, 160 Cal. 423, 426, 428, 117 Pac. 433, supra; Argyle v. Johnson, 39 Utah, 500, 118 Pac. 487; Book v. Thomas, 61 Wash. 607, 112 Pac. 917; Ellis v. Board of Supervisors, 38 Cal. App. 480, 176 Pac. 709. It is immaterial at what stage of the proceedings this opportunity is given so long as the property owner is afforded the opportunity to contest the question of benefits and the amount of the tax to be assessed against his property. In Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, supra, it was held that the Wright Irrigation Law of California, then under consideration, similar to the present California irrigation law, gave the opportunity to the property owners whose property was sought to be included in the district to contest the question as to whether or not their lands would be benefited, at the hearing before the board of supervisors on the petition for the formation of the district, and that this hearing afforded due process of law to the property owner, and that such opportunity was essential to afford due process of law.

[5] The California Irrigation District Act provides for a hearing before the board of directors sitting as a board of equalization upon the proper valuation of the property within the district (section 38), and upon such valuation so determined an ad valorem tax is imposed upon all the property within the district for the proposed improvements (section 39). The California Irrigation District Act provides (section 69) for proceedings by the property owner to contest the validity of the assessment, but it is evidently not intended that this contest should include an inquiry into the validity of the proceedings for the organization of the district, because by section 4 its validity could only be attacked by a quo warranto proceeding brought by the Attorney General within one year after the organization of the district, and, furthermore, section 72 provides that findings of fact and conclusions of the board of directors and of the board of supervisors are conclusive unless the action to contest the validity thereof is instituted within six months after the findings or conclusions are made, and assessments are usually made more than six months after the district is formed.

It follows that the only opportunity given the property owner to oppose the inclusion of his lands within the district is at the hearing before the board of supervisors at the time noticed for the hearing upon the petition for the formation of the district, and that any denial of such right by the board of supervisors or any statutory provision purporting to make the order of the board conclusive upon the property owner without such hearing having been in fact had is violative of both state and federal Constitutions. Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, supra; People v. Van Nuys Lighting Dist., 173 Cal. 792, 797, 162 Pac. 97, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 255.

In this connection attention should be given to the contention of the respondent with reference to the case of Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, supra. It is contended that this decision by the United States Supreme Court had not been followed by this court, and that it has been expressly repudiated by this court. It must be confessed that this contention finds support in the opinion in the case of Henshaw v. Foster, 176 Cal. 507, 169 Pac. 82, wherein it is said:

"Respondents insist that we are here dealing with a matter directly affecting private property. They call attention to the fact that in Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112 [41 L. Ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56], the Supreme Court of the United States declared the necessity for a hearing 'at some time to those interested upon the question of fact whether or not the land of any owner which was intended to be included would be benefited by the irrigation proposed,' and that the Wright Act was upheld upon the express declaration of the court that an appropriate hearing before the board of supervisors is in that act provided. Notwithstanding any expressions in the Fallbrook Irrigation Case, we are committed to the reasoning of the Madera District Case [92 Cal. 296], which was followed in People v. Ontario [148 Cal. 267] long after the decision in the other case had been made. In the opinion in the Madera District Case the irrigation district was treated as a public corporation to be invested with certain political duties to be exercised in behalf of the state. That a water district such as the one sought to be established in San Diego county is also such a corporation may not be doubted under the authority of that decision. The statute in its scope is even broader than the Wright Irrigation Act and is quite as complex in its details as is that law. To classify a district created under its sanction with a sewer district such as that described in the Brookes Case would be to disregard the distinction pointed out in Wilcox v. Engebretsen, 160 Cal. 288 [116 Pac. 750]."

The author of the opinion then quotes extensively from In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 296, 323, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106. The decision of this court in the Madera Irr. Dist. Case, supra, was rendered before the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Fallbrook

Irrigation District v. Bradley, supra. In the Madera Irr. Dist. Case this court, in affirming the validity of the law and the regularities of the proceedings for the formation of that district, placed its decision upon the ground, among other things, that the property owner was not entitled to notice or an opportunity to be heard in the proceedings to include his property within the irrigation district for the reason that the irrigation district is in effect a "public corporation to be invested with certain political duties which it is to exercise in behalf of the state," and that the Legislature could fix the boundaries of such a district or authorize them to be fixed without any notice to the property owner whose lands were to be included in the district, and that no such notice was required under the due process of law clause of the federal and state Constitutions. The Supreme Court of the United States, however, in the Fallbrook Case after considering our decision in the Madera Irr. Dist. Case, expressly held that a judicial determination of the fact that the property included within the district was benefited by the proposed irrigation work was essential in order to comply with the due process of law requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution. In that regard the court said:

"The Legislature not having itself described the district, has not decided that any particular land would or could possibly be benefited as described, and, therefore, it would be necessary to give a hearing at some time to those interested upon the question of fact whether or not the land of any owner which was intended to be included would be benefited by the irrigation proposed. * * * Upon the question of fact as to benefits, decided by the board, it is held in the Tregea Case that its decision is conclusive. 88 California, 334, 26 Pac. 237, supra. Whether a review is or is not given upon any of these questions of fact (if the tribunal created by the state had power to decide them, and if an opportunity for a hearing were given by the act), is a mere question of legislative discretion. It is not constitutionally necessary in such cases to give a rehearing or an appeal. Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22; Pearson v. Yewdall, 95 U. S. 294. * * *" (Italics ours.)

The Supreme Court of the United States upheld the Wright Act (St. 1887, p. 29, as amended), in the Fallbrook Case and the proceedings thereunder solely upon the ground that such an opportunity to be heard as was required by the federal Constitution was provided for and was in fact given under the statute in question. In dealing with that question the Supreme Court in Fallbrook Case said:

"Third. We come now to the question of the true construction of the act. Does it provide for a hearing as to whether the petitioners are of the class mentioned and described in the act and as to their compliance with the conditions of the act in regard to the proceedings prior to the presentation of the petition for the formation of the district? Is there any opportunity provided for a hearing upon notice to the landowners interested in the question whether their lands will be benefited by the proposed irrigation? * * *

"When the act speaks of a hearing of the petition, what is meant by it? Certainly it must extend to a hearing of the facts stated in the petition, and whether those who sign it are sufficient in number and are among the class of persons mentioned in the act as alone having the right to sign the same. * * *

"In the case of People v. Hagar, 52 California, 171, 182, it was held that the board of supervisors, on presentation of the petition, was to hear and determine the question of jurisdiction, and whether the allegations of the petition were true. An approval and confirmation of the petition and the establishment of the district was held to be a conclusive judgment by the board that the lands mentioned and in question were swamp lands; that the petitioners held the proper evidences of title thereto, and that the lands would be benefited by the reclamation. These jurisdictional facts, it was held, must exist before the district could lawfully be established. * * *

"The parties whose lands are thus included in the petition are entitled to a hearing upon the question of benefits, and to have the lands excluded if the judgment of the board be against their being benefited."

Unless the Legislature decide the question of benefits itself, the landowner has the right to be heard upon that question before his property can be taken. This, in substance, was determined by the decisions of this court in Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 356, and Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578. Such a hearing upon notice is duly provided for in the act. * * *

"Thus the act provides for a hearing of the landowner both as to the question whether his land will be benefited by the proposed irrigation, and when that has been decided in favor of the benefit, then upon the question of the valuation and assessment of and upon his land included in the district. As to other matters, the district can be created without notice to any one. Our conclusion is that the act, as construed, with reference to the objections considered under this third head, is unassailable. * * *" (Italics ours.)

[6] This court is, of course, bound by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court upon the interpretation of the federal Constitution, and no matter how many decisions may have been subsequently rendered by this court opposing the conclusion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Fallbrook Irrigation District Case, we would nevertheless be bound to follow the Supreme Court of the United States rather than our own decisions upon that subject where there is a conflict. We do not find, however, that there is such a conflict.

In People v. Ontario, 148 Cal. 627, 84 Pac. 205, cited in Henshaw v. Foster, supra, the court was dealing with the sufficiency of the proceedings for the annexation of territory to a city, and it was properly held that no hearing upon the question of proposed benefits was required. The decision of this court in Henshaw v. Foster, supra, proceeds upon the theory that the municipal water district therein dealt with had powers in addition to those of an irrigation district and partook of the character of a public corporation invested with political duties in behalf of the state, and upon that basis sustained the law. It is true that the opinion follows the reasoning of the court in the Madera Irrigation District Case, 92 Cal. 323, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106; but in so far as it purports to ignore the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Fallbrook Irrigation District Case, where that decision is applicable, it must, of course, be disregarded. The same is true as to the following obiter dictum in Matter of Bonds of San Joaquin Irr. Dist., 161 Cal. 345, 346, 119 Pac. 198:

"The Legislature having the unquestioned power to provide for the formation of such districts, might do so without giving the property owners any voice in the matter at all and may, without question, do so, by authorizing the presentation of a petition signed by a majority of those who, upon the last equalized assessment roll, appear as owners of the property. In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 320 [27 Am. St. Rep. 106, 14 L. R. A. 755, 28 Pac. 272, 675]; People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373 [103 Pac. 207]."

[7] It is no doubt true as held in that case that the Legislature could authorize the formation of an irrigation district without any preliminary petition whatever, or could determine the nature and character of the petition, if one is required, without regard to the property owners in the proposed district, but the case does not decide, because the point was not involved, that the property owner was not entitled to be heard at some stage of the proceedings upon the question as to whether or not his land is benefited, where the power to fix the boundaries of the district is vested by the Legislature in a subordinate body, and where the formation of the district will impose a burden on all land included in it to pay the cost of a local public improvement to benefit such land.

The principle applied in the Fallbrook Irrigation District Case by the Supreme Court of the United States is well settled and has been constantly adhered to by this court in its decisions. Wilcox v. Engebretsen, 160 Cal. 288, 293, 116 Pac. 750; Brookes v. City of Oakland, 160 Cal. 423, 117 Pac. 433.

[8] The only difficulty in applying the decisions on this subject is to determine whether or not the district created by the subordinate body in pursuance of an act of the Legislature is in its nature a public corporation, the inhabitants and property owners of which are subject to taxation for municipal purposes without any hearing as to the benefits to be derived from the creation and conduct of such a corporation, or is an assessment district created for the primary purpose of assessing upon private lands the benefits to be derived thereby from the public improvements for the purpose the district is formed.

In the present case, however, we are not subject to any embarrassment in such application because that question has been conclusively determined by the Supreme Court of the United States in its holding that an irrigation district organized under the Wright law is such a district as could only be properly formed by notice to the property owners at some stage of the proceedings of the inclusion of their lands within the district and by giving them a hearing before some tribunal having power to decide the matter, to advance, and, if possible, sustain their contention that their lands would not be benefited by the proposed improvement.

[9] In considering the curative provisions of the act in question and the provisions of the validating act, these statutes must be construed in the light of the constitutional power of the Legislature as determined in the Fallbrook Case, and, if so construed, they operate to deprive the property owner of due process of law, they must be to that extent disregarded as void and of no effect. For the foregoing reasons, section 4 of the act as amended in 1911, above quoted, in so far as it would give conclusive validity to the order of the board of supervisors in the absence of notice and hearing and would deprive the property owner at every subsequent stage of the proceedings of any right to contest the question as to whether or not his lands would be benefited, would be violative of the due process of law clauses of the federal and state Constitutions. This defect would not be met by the opportunity afforded to contest the validity of an assessment under section 69, if that section be construed, as we have hereinbefore indicated it should be, to prohibit any inquiry into the question of benefit in contests as to the validity of assessments, unless such opportunity had elsewhere been given.

[10] Section 72 of the act above quoted, in so far as it purports to limit all inquiry into the action of the board of supervisors in forming the district, must also be held unavailing to prevent such inquiry where that board has proceeded without jurisdiction.

The petitioner does not claim that it was prevented from offering testimony to the board of supervisors upon the question of the irrigability of its land or upon the subject-matter of its objection to its inclusion of its lands within the district or that proper notice was not in fact given of the hearing. Its claim is that no evidence was introduced before the board of supervisors of Madera county affirmatively showing that the lands would be benefited by the proposed plan of irrigation or of the publication of notice or of the sufficiency of the signatures to the petition for the formation of the district.

[11] It may be conceded that, where proper notice was given and the petitioner was actually present at the time of hearing, presented its objections thereto, and declined to introduce evidence upon the theory that the burden of proof was upon the defendants to establish the irrigability of petitioner's lands and the benefit of the proposed plan of improvement, a decision by the board after such opportunity had been given to the petitioner would be conclusive upon a collateral attack. But the proceeding herein to review that order is a direct attack.

[12] We now enter upon the question of whether or not upon this proceeding at bar to review the order of the board of supervisors the petitioner can take advantage of the mere failure of proof of the allegation of the petition. Upon this question the defendants contend that the plaintiff has failed to state sufficient facts for the issuance of a writ of review or for the vacation of the order of the board because it has failed to allege the nonexistence of the jurisdictional facts, in that it is not alleged that the petition for the formation of the district was in any respect faulty, or that the signatures thereto were insufficient, or that the notice of the hearing was not published, or that the plaintiff's lands were not irrigable from the common source, or that such lands would not be benefited by the proposed plan of improvement, but that petitioner has contented itself with the mere allegation that no evidence was offered before the board of supervisors to prove these facts. In reply the plaintiff properly calls attention to the fact that the function of a writ of review is to bring before the court for consideration the proceedings before the inferior tribunal, including the evidence, and that the proceedings for a writ of review is not a proper one in which to contest the truth as to the jurisdictional facts. Golden Gate M. Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 187, 191, 3 Pac. 628; Hoffmann v. Superior Court, 79 Cal. 475, 21 Pac. 862; De Pedrosena v. Superior Court, 80 Cal. 144, 22 Pac. 71; Los Angeles v. Young, 118 Cal. 295, 50 Pac. 534, 62 Am. St. Rep. 234. This position is undoubtedly well taken. The court is limited in its proceedings to review the order of the board of supervisors to the record there made, and from that record the jurisdiction of the board to act in the premises must appear.

[13] It is alleged, and by demurrer admitted, that the board of supervisors acted upon the hearing without any evidence upon certain material matters. Whatever the actual facts may be, or whatever may have been in fact considered by the board of supervisors as sufficient to justify their action in the matter, if any showing whatever was made in support thereof by report of the state engineer, as required by law (sections

2, 2a [Stats. 1917, pp. 752, 755; Stats. 1919, p. 715]), or otherwise, we are bound by the facts stated in the complaint herein.

We will proceed to examine the matter from that standpoint, although it would be a much more satisfactory investigation if we had before us the return of the defendants, and were thus assured that the plaintiff's agent had not verified the complaint upon the theory that the supervisors were only authorized to act upon "evidence" within the strict meaning of that term as used in court proceedings.

In Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, 131 Cal. 364, 63 Pac. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 350, it was held that a failure to prove the sufficiency of the signatures to a petition for the creation of a sanitary district was fatal to the validity of the proceedings when presented to the court by a writ of review. It was there said:

"The determination of these questions, upon which the jurisdiction of the board depended, required the exercise of judicial power, and as the statute did not prescribe the character of the proof by which they should be determined, they must be established in accordance with the rules of evidence recognized by the courts and the common law. 'An exception to the rule that the sufficiency of the evidence will not be reviewed is made when the question is whether jurisdictional facts were or were not proved. This exception arises out of the most important office and function of the writ—the keeping of inferior courts and tribunals within proper bounds. If the decision of the inferior tribunal as to the sufficiency of the evidence to establish jurisdictional facts were not reviewable, the writ of certiorari would be of no avail as a remedy against an assumption of jurisdiction. And for the purpose of enabling the reviewing court to determine whether jurisdictional facts were established, it will require a return to be made of the evidence upon which such facts are based.' 4 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 262. This court has said: 'In all cases it is essential that there be proof of a sufficient petition, inasmuch as without it the board could acquire no jurisdiction to act, and its proceedings would be absolutely void. * * * Upon certiorari, though the inferior tribunal is required to certify only matters of record, yet if the jurisdictional facts do not appear of record, it must certify not only what is technically denominated the record, but such facts, or the evidence of them, as may be necessary to determine whatever question as to the jurisdiction of the tribunal may be involved.' [14] However, in the case of Wolfskill v. City Council of Los Angeles, 178 Cal. 610, 174 Pac. 45, this court declined to follow the case of Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, supra, in so far as it held that the only evidence which the board could consider upon such a hearing was evidence which would be acceptable in court. The case still stands, however, as authority for the proposition that there must be some sort of evidence or proof, not only as to the allegations of the petition, but also as to the sufficiency of the signatures thereto. The petition in this case alleges that no such evidence was received.

[15] We have constantly under review proceedings in which various boards and inferior courts are called upon to exercise a special jurisdiction, and it has uniformly been held in such cases, such as proceedings from the Industrial Accident Commission, from the Railroad Commission, from the medical board in cases involving the taking away of the license of a medical practitioner, in the case of proceedings before the real estate board to deprive a real estate agent of his license, and in contempt proceedings, that the courts will inquire into the question as to whether or not there was any evidence whatever to prove the jurisdictional facts, and in the absence of such evidence have annulled the order of the tribunal whose decision was under review. People v. Board of Delegates, 14 Cal. 478, 501; Schwartz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 580; Pacific T. & T. Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822; Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35; Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 Pac. 965; Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 592, 84 Pac. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750; Lanterman v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 472, 172 Pac. 625; Brecheen v. Ray L. Riley (Cal. Sup.) 200 Pac. 1042; Dymert v. Board of Medical Examiners (Cal. App.) 207 Pac. 409.

In Schwartz v. Superior Court, supra, it is said that the jurisdiction of this court on review extended, not "only to the whole record of the court below, but even to the evidence itself, where necessary to determine the jurisdictional facts," citing People v. Board of Delegates, 14 Cal. 479; Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 301; Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 49; People v. Goodwin, 5 N. Y. 568. In Los Angeles v. Young, 118 Cal. 295, 298, 50 Pac. 534, 535 (62 Am. St. Rep. 234), it is stated:

"The common-law writ of certiorari tried nothing but the jurisdiction, and incidentally the regularity of the proceedings upon which the jurisdiction depends. In many cases, therefore, under such writs, the evidence upon which the court acted in determining its jurisdiction was made a part of the record and reviewed under the writ, but the inquiry was always limited to the evidence before the tribunal whose determination was under review. If the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal depended upon a question of fact, that fact was never tried de novo upon its merits, but the inquiry thereupon was limited strictly to the evidence upon which the inferior tribunal acted," citing People ex rel. Whitney v. San Francisco Fire Dept., 14 Cal. 479.

[16] Sections 1 and 2 of the California Irrigation Act as amended (Stats. 1919, pp. 714, 715) contain certain provisions with regard to the character of the evidence upon which the board of supervisors is entitled to act in its order fixing the boundaries of the irrigation district and proposing an election to determine whether such district shall be incorporated. It provides that the equalized assessment roll or rolls of the county for the last preceding year shall be conclusive evidence of ownership and value of land by the signers of the petition and others, and that a certificate of acknowledgment before a notary public or justice of the peace of any state or an affidavit by any person in the presence of whom such petition was signed shall be sufficient evidence of the genuineness of such signature and residence of the petitioners. Upon the hearing of the petition it is provided that the board of supervisors shall hear the same and shall proceed to determine whether or not said petition complies with the requirements hereinbefore set forth and whether or not the notice required herein has been published as required, and must hear all competent and relevant testimony offered in support of or in opposition thereto. The state engineer is required to make a report to the board of supervisors upon the feasibility of the project (sections 2, 2a, supra). Under these provisions the report of the engineer, the certificate of acknowledgment or the affidavit referred to in the statute, can undoubtedly be considered by the board in reaching its conclusion upon the jurisdictional facts (Wolfskill v. Los Angeles, supra) and constitute evidence within the meaning of that term as used in proceedings to review their action. We must assume, however, that no such evidence was presented or considered in view of the allegations of the petition for the writ of review herein.

[17] Upon the allegations of the petition a writ of review should have been issued, and if it appeared from the return, as alleged, that no showing whatever was made before the board of supervisors in support of the petition, the order of the board of supervisors in question should have been annulled, unless other considerations to be next considered require a different conclusion.

[18, 19] The first question to be so considered is the effect of section 72, hereinabove quoted. This section, if given full effect, would prevent any contest with reference to the findings and conclusions of the board of supervisors at the time of the fixing of the boundaries of the district except in the manner specified in the act, namely, in a proceeding brought by the Attorney General of the state. Section 72 and section 4, as amended in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 139). But, as we have already shown, section 4, in so far as it deprives the superior court of jurisdiction to review the proceedings of the board of supervisors, is unconstitutional, and section 72, in so far as it attempts to make the findings of the board of supervisors upon the hearing as to the benefits to be derived by the irrigation project conclusive, if construed to prohibit the inquiry upon direct attack in certiorari into the question of whether or not the supervisors conformed to the constitutional requirements of due process of law in exercising their jurisdiction, upon such direct attack, is also void because due process of law requires a hearing upon the question of benefits and evidence upon that subject. Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, supra; Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, supra. See, also, other cases hereinabove cited on that subject. The Constitution vests jurisdiction in the superior court in certiorari, and hence to review the action of the board of supervisors in fixing the boundaries of the proposed assessment district as at common law (Const. Cal. art. 6, § 5; Camron v. Kenfield, 57 Cal. 550, supra; Farmers' Union v. Thresher, 62 Cal. 407), and this jurisdiction cannot be taken away by the Legislature. See concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Sloss in Pacific Telephone, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, supra, 166 Cal. 690, 691, 694, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822, and cases there cited. See, also, People v. Van Nuys Lighting Dist., 173 Cal. 792, 797, 162 Pac. 97, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 255. See, also, Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, supra, and Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 Pac. 398.

[20] It follows that the curative provisions of the statute in question, in so far as they purport to prohibit an inquiry upon certiorari into the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors in making its order fixing the boundaries of the district to be benefited, are unconstitutional.

[21] The respondents contend that where the district has been exercising the powers of a de facto corporation, after the electors of the district have voted for incorporation, it is too late to inquire into the validity of the order calling the election by a writ of review. There is nothing in this contention. Upon this point respondents quote from a concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Finlayson of the Second District Court of Appeal, Second Division, in the case of Mitchell v. Henry, 31 Cal. App. Dec. 597.¹ This decision, however, dealt with the annexation of territory to the city of Glendale, a city of the sixth class, a proceeding wherein the question of due process of law is not involved. People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 632, 633, 634, 84 Pac. 205, supra. Moreover, the decision of the District Court was vacated by an order of transfer to this court and subsequently decided on other grounds. Mitchell v. Henry, 184 Cal. 266, 193 Pac. 502.

We will next consider the effect of the validating act passed by the Legislature of 1921 (Stats. 1921, c. 75, p. 76). The decisions all agree upon the proposition that a curative act cannot cure jurisdictional defects in the establishment of an assessment district and thus authorize the taking of property without due process of law. People v. Van Nuys Lighting District, 173 Cal. 792, 797, 162 Pac. 97, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 255, supra. This is true whether the curative provisions of the law are found in the statute authorizing the proceedings or in a subsequent statute attempting to validate such a proceeding. See cases cited in People v. Van Nuys Lighting District, supra, 173 Cal. 297, 298, 162 Pac. 97, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 255, and in Oakland Paving Co. v. Whittell Realty Co., 185 Cal. 113, 195 Pac. 1058. See, also Watkinson v. Vaughn, 182 Cal. 55, 186 Pac. 753. It follows that, inasmuch as the defect in the proceedings now under consideration is jurisdictional, and that the validating act would therefore have the effect of depriving the plaintiff of its property without due process of law, the act is clearly unavailing to establish the validity of the incorporation of the Madera irrigation district considered purely from the standpoint of a validating or curative act. This conclusion, however, does not fully dispose of the question involved in determining the effect and constitutionality of the validating act for the reason that the Legislature had the power to directly create an irrigation district of this magnitude (300,000 acres), if there was any reason justifying special legislation for that purpose. Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 33; People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 Pac. 207; Miller & Lux v. Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage District, 182 Cal. 252, 187 Pac. 1041. Furthermore, if the Legislature itself establishes the boundaries of the Madera Irrigation District, the question of due process of law is not involved.

The respondents cite State v. Squires, 26 Iowa, 340, and subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court of Iowa as holding that a validating act, although necessarily special and local, is nevertheless not violative of the general constitutional prohibition against local and special legislation where general laws may be made applicable, for the reason that a general law cannot appropriately be made applicable. Witter v. Board of Sup'rs of Polk Co., 112 Iowa, 380, 83 N. W. 1041; McSurely v. McGrew, 140 Iowa, 163, 118 N. W. 415, 132 Am. St. Rep. 248. These decisions, and others cited are based upon the proposition that a curative act per se cannot well be general in character. These decisions, however, recognize that a validating act cannot cure jurisdictional defects, but cure only such defects and irregularities as could have been omitted by the Legislature in the first instance. The Supreme Court of Iowa cites Sutherland on Statutory Con- struction (section 483) with approval in Witter v. Board of Sup'rs, supra. The author of that text-book places this limitation upon legislative power, and this conclusion is in accord with our own decisions.

We have not so far followed the Supreme Court of Iowa in its conclusion that such a special curative act is not violative of our Constitution (see People v. Van Nuys Lighting District, supra), but even if we go so far, the validating act is void even under the Iowa decisions, as well as under our own. People v. Van Nuys Lighting District, supra. When, therefore, respondents rely upon the Iowa decisions to justify such legislation, as permissible because a general law is not applicable, they are met with the proposition that, considered merely as a curative statute, the act is unavailing to cure jurisdictional defects, while considered as an original exercise of legislative power, it is clearly violative of the constitutional prohibition of special legislation for reasons that presently will be more fully stated. In either event the validating act is unavailing to defeat the plaintiff's effort to secure a review of the action of the board of supervisors.

[22, 23] In considering the constitutionality of the validating act as an act creating the Madera irrigation district, we meet with several difficulties. In the first place the conclusive presumption indulged in by the courts, to the effect that the Legislature had duly considered the benefits to be derived by the lands included within the district is hardly applicable when the Legislature expressly adopts the findings of the board of supervisors as to benefits. In addition, the fact that the Legislature by its validating act adopts the proceedings of the board of supervisors for the establishment of a district to derive its powers from the general law for the incorporation of such districts is conclusive evidence that the district in question might be established in accordance with the general law then in force, if properly followed, and is therefore a legislative declaration to the effect that the validating act was passed solely for the purpose of correcting errors in the procedure required by a general law in that particular case, and not for the reason that the Legislature found it impossible to pass a general law upon the subject, which would authorize the formation of the Madera irrigation district. This validating act, then, is on its face violative of article 4, § 25, subd. 33, of the Constitution, prohibiting a special law in all cases where a general law can be made applicable, when considered as a law whereby the Legislature exercises its own power to define the boundaries of a district by ratification of the act of the subordinate board to which it had delegated the power in the first instance. In this connection we may refer to the discussion in the recent case of Mordecai

v. Board of Supervisors, 183 Cal. 434, 438, 192 Pac. 40.

The motion to dismiss this appeal is denied.

The judgment of the superior court is reversed, with instructions to overrule the demurrer and issue a writ of review requiring the defendants to certify the entire record before them, including the reports, affidavits, admissions of the parties, and any information or statements formal or informal upon which they acted in reaching the conclusions embodied in their orders fixing the boundaries of the Madera Irrigation District, and in determining the sufficiency of the petition for the formation of such district, and that upon return the court proceed to determine whether or not the orders sought to be reviewed should be annulled.

JACKSON v. DOLAN et al. (Civ. 4185.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 30, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 439—Trial court without authority to vacate order granting new trial after appeal therefrom is perfected.

The trial court is without authority to vacate or set aside an order granting a new trial after appeal therefrom is perfected, since the appeal removes from the court's jurisdiction the subject-matter of the judgment appealed from, including all questions going to the validity or correctness of such judgment or order.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 440—Courts have power to correct mistakes in judgments after entry, notwithstanding appeal therefrom is taken.

Courts have power at all times to allow amendments to judgments for the purpose of having the judgment as entered express that which was rendered, so that the record will speak the truth, and the perfecting of an appeal does not impair this power.

3. Motions $\S$ 56(2)—Void order for want of jurisdiction cannot be given force by order nunc pro tunc.

An order nunc pro tunc cannot give force to a prior order void for want of jurisdiction.

4. Sunday $\S$ 30(7)—Entry of order on Sunday held a judicial act, and void as such.

Entry by the clerk on January 2, which was Sunday, of an order granting a new trial, but dating the same December 31, preceding, was a judicial, and not a nonjudicial, act, where the order, if made at all, was made on Sunday, and not on any other day, and, hence, such entry was void.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by L. A. Jackson against E. J. Dolan and Gregory Ashe. From order denying motion to vacate order granting new trial and to amend minutes, plaintiff appeals. Order refusing to vacate order granting new trial affirmed, and that portion of order denying motion for correction of minutes reversed, with directions.

C. L. Brown, of El Centro, for appellant.
Randall, Bartlett & White, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate an order granting a new trial, and also a motion to amend the minutes of the court. The action in which these motions were made was one brought to recover damages for personal injuries received in an automobile accident. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict in the sum of $4,000 was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and judgment was entered thereon on December 15, 1920. Thereafter, on the 17th day of December, 1920, defendants made a motion for a new trial, and the motion was by the court taken under advisement. No action was had on such motion until January 3, 1921, when the minutes of the court show as of date of December 31, 1920, that the motion was granted as to defendant Ashe. The term of office of Honorable Phil D. Swing, the judge who tried the case, and who made the order, expired on January 3, 1921. January 1st and 2d were both legal holidays, so that, for all the judicial purposes of this case, the term of office of the trial judge expired December 31, 1920, the day the order bore date. After the granting of the motion for new trial plaintiff perfected an appeal from such order. Subsequently, on the 22d day of April, 1921, he moved the trial court to vacate and set aside the order granting a new trial, and to correct the minutes of the court so as to show that the order was made on Sunday, January 2, 1921, instead of Friday, December 31, 1920. This motion was denied, and this appeal is from the order denying such motion. The motion was based on affidavits. The affidavit of the clerk of the court who made the entry in the minutes was to the effect that the order was in fact made on Sunday, January 2, 1921, a legal holiday, and that no other order was ever made. This affidavit was not controverted. The affidavit of the attorney for plaintiff shows that, at the time the appeal from the order granting a new trial was taken, and at the time the bill of exceptions was settled and allowed, he did not know that the order appearing in the minute book was made on the day shown therein, and that he did not ascertain true knowledge of such fact until March 11, 1921, and that, in taking his appeal, he relied solely upon information derived from the record.

[1] So far as the motion is directed to the vacation of the order granting a new trial, respondent contends that the trial court, by reason of the appeal, lost jurisdiction to afford any relief in the matter, and that the motion to vacate the order was properly denied. We are of the opinion that respondent is correct in this contention. Conceding that the trial court was without jurisdiction to make the order granting a new trial, the appeal had the effect of removing from its jurisdiction the subject-matter of the judgment or order appealed from, including all questions going to the validity or correctness of such judgment or order. The case, in consequence of the appeal, was transferred to the Supreme Court. The trial court was therefore without authority to vacate or set aside the order granting a new trial. Stewart v. Taylor, 68 Cal. 5, 8 Pac. 605; Rugles v. Superior Court, 103 Cal. 125, 37 Pac. 211; Peycke v. Keefe, 114 Cal. 212, 46 Pac. 78; Merced Bank v. Price, 152 Cal. 697, 93 Pac. 866; Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 342, 139 Pac. 805; 2 Cal. Jur. § 179.

[2] So far, however, as the motion was directed to the correction of the court's minutes to accord with the facts, a different situation is presented.

Assuming, as we must, for the affidavits of appellant are uncontroverted by the ex-judge or any other person, that the order was made as claimed, the trial court certainly had the power, and it was its duty, to have granted this motion. While the court by an appeal loses jurisdiction of the cause for the purposes of the appeal, it does not thereby lose jurisdiction of its records. These remain within its physical custody and control, and it has the right, after an appeal is taken, as before, to correct mistakes appearing upon the face of the record. Courts have power at all times to allow amendments to judgments for the purpose of having the judgment as entered express that which was rendered so that the record will speak the truth. Fay v. Stubenrauch, 141 Cal. 573, 75 Pac. 174; Kaufman v. Shain, 111 Cal. 16, 43 Pac. 393, 52 Am. St. Rep. 139; 2 Cal. Jur. § 182. The taking of an appeal does not impair this right. Buckman v. Whitney, 24 Cal. 267.

[3, 4] The claim of respondent that the entry of the order by the clerk was a purely ministerial act, and could therefore be made upon a nonjudicial day, is without force. The claim here made is that no order was ever made except the one in question. Had a previous order been regularly made, there might be some merit in the contention. There must be some record of the making of such an order. Here there is none. An order nunc pro tunc can never give force to a judgment void for want of jurisdiction on the part of the judge making it. Here the order itself, directing the clerk to enter the decision nunc pro tunc, was a judicial act, and as such could not be performed on a legal holiday. The question of the power of courts to enter orders nunc pro tunc is therefore not here involved.

From what has been said, it follows that the order refusing to vacate and set aside the order granting defendant Ashe a new trial is hereby affirmed, and that portion of the order denying the motion for the correction of the court's minutes to accord with the facts is hereby reversed, with directions to the trial court to determine the true facts, and enter an order accordingly.

PEOPLE v. KOOSISTRA. (Cr. 1010.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 22, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 21, 1922.)

1. Infants ⇐20—Evidence held sufficient to warrant conviction under Juvenile Court Law.

In a prosecution under Juvenile Court Law, § 21, evidence that defendant persuaded a 16 year old girl to disrobe and to pose in a nude condition for the purpose of being photographed held sufficient to warrant conviction.

2. Infants ⇐20—Any conduct by a person which causes minor to become a delinquent may be shown.

In a prosecution under Juvenile Court Law, any conduct on the part of defendant which causes or tends to cause a minor to become a delinquent may be shown, though such conduct may consist of one act or a series of acts.

3. Infants ⇐20—Age may be established by testimony of relative.

The age of a minor may be established by testimony of a relative or other person who is in a position to have personal knowledge of the minor's age.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Harold Louderback, Judge.

Joseph Koosistra was convicted of violation of Juvenile Court Law, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph A. Garry and Walter McGovern, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Defendant, by information, was charged jointly with one John De Young with a violation of section 21 of the Juvenile Court Act (St. 1915, p. 1225). He was separately tried, convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for a period of eight months. This appeal is from such judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information charges that—

Defendants, on or about the 1st day of March, 1921, * * * "did then and there willfully and unlawfully show and exhibit to one Laura Duncan, then and there a female person under the age of 21 years, to wit, of the age of 16 years, various and divers lewd and obscene films, pictures, and photographs, and did then and there induce and persuade the said Laura Duncan to disrobe and to pose and expose her person, in a nude condition, before them, the said Joseph Koosistra and John De Young, and to permit them to photograph her, the said Laura Duncan, while in such nude condition, and to make, and they did then and there make, various lewd and obscene and indecent photographs and pictures of her, the said Laura Duncan, in such nude condition, all of which willful and unlawful acts and course of conduct of Joseph Koosistra and John De Young, as aforesaid, did thereby then and there manifestly tend to and did encourage, cause, and contribute to the said Laura Duncan becoming such a person as is described in section 1 of an act of the Legislature of the state of California entitled 'An act to be known as the Juvenile Court Law,' etc., approved June 5, 1915, to wit, a person under 21 years of age who is leading, or from any cause is in danger of leading, an idle, dissolute, and immoral life."

In support of the offense charged it was proved at the trial that Laura Duncan, the minor mentioned in the information, was of the age of 16 years, and that in company with certain male and female companions she visited apartments maintained by defendants. Upon the occasion of her first visit she met defendant, and was by his codefendant photographed in a group of some 18 persons, old and young. This photograph was introduced in evidence, and it shows several of the women contained in the group, including Laura Duncan, practically in a naked state. She again visited the same premises on at least two subsequent occasions, and was then shown pictures of women in the nude, and was so photographed by defendant in company with her girl companions. Other evidence shows that on at least one occasion Laura Duncan remained on the premises until an early hour of the morning, during which time music and dancing was indulged in by the frequenters of the place.

[1] Appellant contends that as it is no offense to induce and persuade a minor to disrobe and to pose and expose her person in a nude condition, that the evidence is insufficient to warrant his conviction. We do not so consider it. The main purpose of the Juvenile Court Law is to protect young men and women from indulging in vicious practices, and to remove them from immoral and evil influences. It needs no discussion to show that the acts which defendant induced the minor to commit would manifestly tend to deprave the morals of a girl of her immature years, and to promote a general disregard of the rules of morality and decency. It would indeed be difficult to say, considering all the circumstances, that such acts would not strongly tend to cause a person of tender years to lead an immoral and dissolute life. To hold otherwise would be to remove the very safeguard that the law was designed to create for the purpose of protecting the youth of the state from the pitfalls attending immaturity of years. The contention is therefore without merit.

[2] Complaint is also made of failure on the part of the trial court to instruct the jury that they could find the defendant guilty of only one of the acts proven against him. Under the Juvenile Court Law it is permissible to show any conduct on the part of a person toward a minor which either causes or tends to cause such minor to become a delinquent, even though such conduct may consist in the doing of one act only or of a series of acts. People v. Oliver, 29 Cal. App. 576, 156 Pac. 1005.

[3] The further claim that proof of the age of the prosecutrix was not established is also without merit. The jury, it is true, did not have an opportunity of judging her age for the reason that she did not take the stand, she being out of the state, but her sister positively testified that she was 16 years of age. Proof of the age of a person may generally be made by the testimony of a relative or other person who is in such position as to have personal knowledge of such age. Accordingly it has been held that the date of a person's birth might be testified to by members of his family. 2 Jones on Evidence, § 300, p. 651.

Other objections relate to alleged errors on the part of the trial court in ruling upon the evidence and in failing to properly instruct the jury. Misconduct on the part of the district attorney is also assigned as error. These contentions are entirely without merit, and do not require discussion.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte VON GERZABEK. (Cr. 1064.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 20, 1922.)

1. Divorce — 269(11, 12)—Contemner must be given opportunity to show his inability to comply with order of court.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1217, making it the duty of the court to hear any answer which the person charged with contempt may make, it is the duty of the court to give one charged with contempt in failing to make a payment of alimony an opportunity to show that he is financially unable to comply with the order; the burden of proving inability being on the contemner, though the proceeding is quasi criminal.

2. Divorce — 269(10)—Affidavit for contempt must positively state facts showing ability of contemner to comply with order of court.

The affidavit, initiating a proceeding for contempt against a husband who has failed to pay temporary alimony as directed by an order of court, must state the facts tending to show the contemner's ability to comply with the order, and an affidavit, alleging mere conclusions of law and made upon information and belief, is insufficient.

3. Habeas corpus — 27—Proceedings for contempt held without jurisdiction so that writ will lie.

Where the affidavit in a contempt proceeding to punish a husband for failure to pay temporary alimony fails to show on its face a cause of contempt in that it does not aver that the husband is able to comply with the order, it shows a want of jurisdiction on the face of the record rendering the order of contempt void, and a writ of habeas corpus will lie to secure a discharge of the prisoner.

Original application for habeas corpus by Oscar Von Gerzabek, prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco. Writ granted.

Mervyn R. Dowd, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Walker Peddicord, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The petitioner herein alleged that he was confined in the county jail under an order of commitment of the superior court for contempt of the court in failing to comply with a previous order for the payment of temporary alimony and suit money, made in a divorce proceeding then pending between the petitioner and his wife. The proceedings leading up to the entry of the order of commitment are not disputed. It appears that on the 3d day of April, 1922, after proceedings duly taken, the court made an order in the divorce action that the defendant (the petitioner herein) pay to his wife a certain sum for temporary alimony and suit money. On the 9th day of May, 1922, the wife of petitioner filed with the said court her affidavit, charging that the petitioner had failed to comply with this order, and praying that he be cited to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt therefor. Upon this affidavit an order to show cause was issued, and in response thereto the petitioner was brought before the court on the 16th day of May, 1922. Hearing was then had before the court; both parties and counsel for the wife being present, but the petitioner not being represented by counsel. Some testimony was taken as to the amounts which had been paid by the petitioner in compliance with the order, and as to his ability to make further payments. The matter was continued until May 19th, when the petitioner appeared with counsel, and asked permission to present evidence of his inability to comply with the order of the court. This was denied him by the court, and an order was then made that, unless he paid the sum of $50 before the 22d day of May, 1922, he would be adjudged guilty of contempt and confined in the county jail. At said time the court again refused to hear any testimony on the part of petitioner as to his inability to comply with the terms of the order, and stated to the petitioner that if his income was not sufficient to meet these payments he should obtain other employment. Without any further hearing the order of commitment was made.

Petitioner attacks this order as being beyond the jurisdiction of the court upon the ground that he was denied an opportunity of proving his inability to comply with the order, and upon the further ground that there is no showing of petitioner's ability to comply therewith.

[1] As to the first point urged, section 1217, Code of Civil Procedure, makes it the duty of the court to hear any answer which the person charged with contempt may make to the same. When a party is charged with contempt for failure to comply with an order of court, the most effectual answer thereto is a showing of his inability to comply therewith. Through numerous decisions of the Supreme Court the rule has been announced that, even though this is a quasi criminal proceeding, the burden of proof is upon the one charged with contempt to show his inability to comply with the order of the court. Such being the case, the parties should be given every opportunity to meet this burden.

[2, 3] As to the second point, the objection goes to the initiation of the contempt proceeding. The affidavit on the order to show cause which was the basis of the hearing on which the petitioner was committed fails to state any facts tending to show this petitioner's ability to comply with the order of the court. The only allegation in this connection is a plain conclusion of law made upon information and belief, and is wholly devoid of any statement of facts upon which the court could draw the conclusion of this petitioner's ability to comply with the order. The affidavit in a proceeding of this nature must show upon its face a cause of contempt, and if it does not the court is wanting in jurisdiction and the order of contempt is void. Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 280, 284, 63 Pac. 372; Hutton v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 156, 159, 81 Pac. 409. To allege on information and belief that a party is in the possession of "certain funds and moneys and in receipt of an income sufficient to enable him to pay" fails to meet the rule announced in the cases cited.

The prisoner is discharged.

RAMSEY v. CHILSON. (Civ. 3887.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California, May 24, 1922.)

1. Frauds, statute of § 116(5), 144—Owner of lot held not to have conferred authority on third party signing contract of sale without written authority, and not estopped to deny execution of contract so signed.

That the parties were present while a third party reduced a proposed agreement for sale of a lot to writing, that the owner suggested changes in the contract, which were made, and that, thus prepared, it was read to her, and she understood its contents, did not confer authority on such third party, acting in his own name, to sell the property, nor estop the owner from denying her execution of the contract, which was signed by such third party without written authority required by Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5.

2. Estoppel § 52—Not intended to work a gain to a party but to protect from loss.

Estoppel is never intended to work a gain to a party; its office is to protect him from a loss which, but for the estoppel, he could not escape.

3. Estoppel § 52—Rests, not alone upon wrong done, but upon inequity of wrongdoer to take advantage of wrong to injury relying upon wrongdoer's conduct.

An estoppel always rests, not alone upon the wrong done, but upon the inequity of permitting the wrongdoer to take advantage of that wrong to the injury of another relying upon and who is entitled to rely upon the wrongdoer's conduct.

4. Frauds, statute of § 144—Purchaser of lot under contract signed by owner's son without written authority held not misled, and not entitled to rely on owner's acts as showing son's authority to sell.

A purchaser of a lot was not misled as to the ownership, and was not entitled to rely on the owner's acts as showing that her son, from whom he purchased, and who signed the contract of sale in her presence, but without written authority, was authorized to sell, where the purchaser knew she owned the lot, and might have secured her signature to the contract if she were willing to execute it.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Rex B. Goodcell, Judge.

Action for specific performance by S. H. Ramsey against Nellie Irene Chilson. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Halsey W. Allen, of Redlands, for appellant.

W. C. Shelton and James R. Choate, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to enforce the specific performance of a contract whereby it is alleged defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff lot 12, Loma Vista tract, in the city of Redlands. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant has appealed.

The complaint alleges:

That on July 3, 1920, D. A. Chilson was the duly authorized agent of defendant, and that as such agent he entered into a written agreement with plaintiff, a copy of which is as follows:

"7/3/20.

"I, the undersigned, agree to sell to S. H. Ramsey the property at 417 Eureka st. for a consideration of ($2,850.00) twenty-eight hundred and fifty dollars, free of all incumbrances. Having received this day his check for ($100.00) one hundred dollars as deposit on sale. House to be vacated for him inside of three weeks or four.
[Signed] D. A. Chilson."

That said agreement was written and signed by D. A. Chilson in the presence of defendant, who represented that he was her agent and authorized to sell the property. That plaintiff accepted the same, and paid defendant $100 on account of the purchase price of the property—followed by an allegation of a tender of the balance of the purchase price made by plaintiff, together with other allegations necessary in stating a cause of action for specific performance.

By her answer defendant denied the execution of the contract, or that D. A. Chilson was her agent, or that she represented that he was authorized to act for her in selling the property, or that the contract was executed by him at her request, or that plaintiff paid to her any sum on account of the purchase price.

In response to the issues made by the pleadings, the court found:

"That, although the said D. A. Chilson, the said agent of defendant, was not authorized in writing to act as the agent of said defendant in the sale of said property, nevertheless the said defendant is estopped to deny said agency of the said D. A. Chilson, and that the said contract, entered into by the said defendant through the agency of her son, E. A. Chilson, is a valid and binding agreement on her part to sell and convey the said property to the said plaintiff on the above-mentioned terms and conditions; that the said contract between the said defendant and plaintiff was prepared by defendant's son and agent, in the presence of the said defendant, and in the presence of the said plaintiff; that the said contract was read to the said defendant, and the contents thereof understood by her; that the said defendant dictated that the said contract be changed providing for possession of the said premises to be given in four weeks instead of three weeks; that by her conduct the said defendant represented to the said plaintiff that her son was duly authorized to represent her in the sale of the said property."

It is apparent from this mixed finding of fact and law that the court based the judgment upon its conclusion that defendant was estopped from denying D. A. Chilson's authority to sell the property, and not upon the fact that he had authority so to do which could only be conferred by a written instrument, as provided by subdivision 5, § 1624, Civil Code. The only findings of fact upon which to base the conclusion that defendant by her conduct represented that D. A. Chilson was authorized to execute the contract for her, and by reason of which she is estopped from denying such authority, are as follows:

"That the said contract between the said defendant and plaintiff was prepared by defendant's son and agent, in the presence of the said defendant, and in the presence of the said plaintiff; that the said contract was read to the said defendant, and the contents thereof understood by her; that the said defendant dictated that the said contract be changed, providing for possession of the said premises to be given in four weeks instead of three weeks."

[1] Assuming the truth of these findings, they are entirely consistent with the fact that the agreement as prepared was with the intention that, if satisfactory to defendant, she, as owner of the property, would execute it. The fact that plaintiff and defendant were present while a third party reduced a proposed agreement to writing for execution; that defendant, as owner of the lot, suggested changes in the contract, which were made, and as thus prepared it was read to her, and she understood its contents—are not sufficient to either confer authority upon such third party, acting in his own name, to sell her property, nor to estop the owner thereof from denying her execution of the contract. This conclusion is emphasized by the fact that, according to the testimony of both plaintiff and his wife they knew defendant was the owner of the property, and are presumed to know that, without her signature, a contract for the purchase thereof was invalid, and of no binding force, and also knew that the writing of the contract was objected to by defendant, who, according to plaintiff's testimony, said to her son, "I don't believe you ought to do that." Upon the meager facts found to hold that defendant is estopped from denying the execution of the contract by her would be tantamount to a nullification of the statute made for the protection of those who hold estates in land. As was well said by the Supreme Court in Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 85 Am. Dec. 157:

"The doctrine of estoppel in pais should not be too readily extended when the effect of it is to divest men of their estates in lands. It should be remembered that we have a statute which makes a writing essential to the assignment or creation of an estate in real property, and that one of the objects of such statute was to render estates secure."

[2] Moreover, estoppel is never intended to work a gain to a party; its office is to protect him from a loss which, but for the estoppel, he could not escape. Conway v. Supreme Council, 137 Cal. 384, 70 Pac. 223; Scott v. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 26 Pac. 898. In the instant case plaintiff has incurred no loss. As shown by the testimony, the check for $100 was not given, as found by the court, to defendant, but was made payable to and given to D. A. Chilson on account of the purchase price. It was never delivered to defendant, and was never presented for payment, but tendered back to plaintiff, and, upon his refusal to accept it, the same was deposited in court to abide the result of the litigation. It is conceded that Chilson had no written authority, under which, as provided by the statute, he could bind defendant by the contract made in his own name, and both complaint and findings are barren of any facts essential to an estoppel, without which there is nothing upon which the court could base its conclusion. While the court finds that defendant by her conduct represented to plaintiff that Chilson was authorized to act for her, there is nothing, other than as stated, to show the acts by which defendant manifested such conduct. As said in Fritz v. Mills, 12 Cal. App. 113, 118, 106 Pac. 725, 727, "we are left entirely at sea as to what facts the court considered as constituting the estoppel," or exhibiting the conduct of defendant.

[3, 4] Moreover, an estoppel always rests, not alone upon the wrong done, but upon the inequity of permitting the wrongdoer to take advantage of that wrong to the injury of another relying upon and who is entitled to rely upon the wrongdoer's conduct. Williams v. Williams, 170 Cal. 625, 151 Pac. 10. As hereinbefore stated, it appears from plaintiff's own testimony that he knew the property which he was purchasing from D. A. Chilson was owned by his mother, the defendant, whose signature to the contract, if she were willing to execute it, he might easily have secured; hence he was not misled as to the ownership, nor, under the facts found, entitled to rely upon defendant's acts as showing that D. A. Chilson was authorized to sell her property.

The judgment is reversed.

MULCAHY v. YOUNG, Judge of Superior Court. (Civ. 2494.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 30, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 28, 1922.)

1. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 40(4)—Failure to present bill of exceptions within specified time held to cause loss of right to its settlement.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 650, providing that a party desiring to have objections taken at a trial settled in a bill of exceptions may, within 10 days after receiving notice of an entry of judgment in an action tried without a jury, allow, prepare, or draft a bill and serve a copy of it upon the adverse party, and section 1054, providing that a judge may extend the time for the preparation of bills of exception, where the defendant in an action was notified July 28th that judgment had been entered against him, his time for filing a bill of exceptions expired August 7th, although on September 27th an order was made extending the time for filing the bill of exceptions until October 15th, in pursuance of which they were filed October 11th, since the order extending the time entered after the time allowed by law had expired was a nullity.

2. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 53(7)—Burden is on party applying for mandate to compel settling of bill of exceptions to overcome presumption of regularity of order dismissing proceedings involving their settlement.

In an application by a party for a writ of mandate to a judge of a trial court to compel the settling of a bill of exceptions, the burden is on the applicant to overcome the presumption of regularity of an order of the trial court, dismissing a proceeding involving the settlement of the bill of exceptions.

3. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 42—Submission of amendments to bill of exceptions held not an acquiescence, in order of trial court extending time to file bill of exceptions.

Where the 10 days given by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 650, for filing a bill of exceptions had expired and thereafter an order was made by the trial court extending the time for such filing, submitting amendments to the bill of exceptions by the opposing party, with a clause waiving the right to object on account of the order extending the time to file the bill of exceptions, did not amount to an acquiescence in the order so extending the time.

Application by James Mulcahy for a writ of mandate to D. M. Young, as Judge of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Joaquin, to compel settlement of bill of exceptions. Writ denied.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.
Robert H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to settle a bill of exceptions in the case of Pioneer Fruit Company, a corporation, as plaintiff, against the petitioner herein, as defendant.

[1] The petition states that the said fruit company, on the 12th day of January, 1920, commenced an action in the superior court of said county of San Joaquin against James Mulcahy, the petitioner herein, to recover the sum of $705.18; that, upon issue being joined in said action by the filing of answer to the complaint by said Mulcahy, the cause was tried before the court, sitting without a jury; and that, on June 29, 1921, the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law and thereupon and on the same day caused to be entered a judgment in favor of said fruit company and against the said Mulcahy. The petition proceeds:

"That, within the time allowed by law, the defendant in said case duly made, served, and filed his notice of intention to move for a new trial in said case; and that thereafter, on the 23d day of August, 1921, the said defendant duly filed his notice of appeal from said judgment, in said court and cause, with the clerk of said superior court, wherein and whereby the said action and the judgment entered therein was taken to this honorable court for review; and that thereafter and within the time allowed by law and granted by the said superior court, the defendant and your petitioner duly made and served his bill of exceptions in said case on the attorney for the plaintiff therein, and the same was a full, fair, and bona fide transcript of all the proceedings in said case and contained everything your petitioner honestly believed to be necessary for a full, fair, and final determination of said cause on its merits in the said appellate court.

"That amendments to said bill of exceptions were duly proposed and served upon your petitioner within such extension of time as was granted by the said judge of the said superior court, by the said attorney for the plaintiff therein, and that thereafter and within 7 days from the date of such service of such amendments, your petitioner handed said proposed original bill of exceptions, together with the plaintiff's said proposed amendments thereto, to the clerk of the said superior court, to be delivered by him to the said judge, who tried the cause as by law provided, as your petitioner could not accept or agree to said proposed amendments; and that, if the said proposed bill of exceptions and the said proposed amendments thereto have been filed with the clerk of said court, they have been so filed without your petitioner's knowledge or consent, and the act of so filing was unlawful, as the same was not settled.

"That, ever since the said proposed bill of exceptions and amendments were handed to the said respondent judge by the clerk of said court for settlement, and for several months last past, the said judge has kept said bill of exceptions and amendments in his possession and has neglected, failed, and refused to settle the same or any other or different bill of exceptions in said case, and still continues to refuse to settle any bill of exceptions whatsoever in said case; and your petitioner is without remedy in the premises, and has no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law."

The respondent's answer to the petition alleges that the petitioner's notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed on the 23d day of June, 1921, or some 6 days prior to the entry of judgment therein. It is further stated in said answer that no other notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed in said case by the petitioner than the proposed notice filed on said 23d day of June, 1921. It is further alleged in the answer that the notice of the entry of judgment in said case was served on and received by the defendant on the 28th day of July, 1921; that the time for proposing a bill of exceptions expired on the 7th day of August, 1921; that, on the 27th day of September, 1921, the respondent made an order extending the time within which petitioner might prepare and perfect a proposed bill of exceptions in said case to October 15, 1921; that a proposed bill was filed or presented to the respondent herein on the 11th day of October, 1921, and that thereafter the plaintiff in said action proposed or submitted some 18 pages of typewritten amendments to said proposed bill of exceptions; that the said proposed amendments to said bill of exceptions "were proposed without waiving the objection of said Pioneer Fruit Company to said proposed bill of exceptions on the ground that the said bill of exceptions was not served within the time allowed by law, stipulation of counsel, or order of court"; that, on the 5th day of February, 1922, a notice of motion to dismiss proceedings to settle the proposed bill was filed and that said motion was, after a hearing granted on the 8th day of May, 1922.

The answer to the petition further alleges:

"That, after the said motion to dismiss had been presented and duly considered by your respondent, it was apparent that said proposed bill of exceptions was not filed in time required by law or stipulation of counsel or order of this court, and therefore there was no need of fixing any time to settle said proposed bill of exceptions.

[2] There is an apparent conflict between the statement of the facts contained in the petition and the like statement set forth in respondent's reply as to the dates on which the several steps looking to the settlement of the bill of exceptions were taken; but an examination of the petition will readily show that, aside from the legal conclusions therein contained as to said dates, there is not a sufficient showing thereby made to warrant the granting of the relief herein prayed for. The answer of the respondent specifies the dates on which the defendant took the several steps essential to the settlement of a bill of exceptions, and thus clearly shows that the defendant allowed the time within which he could have done so to pass without taking the requisite steps for that purpose. We think that the plain duty of this court, in the absence of a specific showing in the petition sufficient to countervail the specific showing made in the respondent's answer, is to accept the facts as they are stated by the latter. Indeed, the burden was upon the petitioner to overcome the presumption of the regularity of the order dismissing the proceeding involving the settlement of the proposed bill of exceptions, and, to overcome the force of this presumption, it was incumbent upon him to show the existence of the essential facts upon which his right to the relief prayed for may only be allowed. This burden he has not sustained in this proceeding, while, on the other hand, the presumption of the due regularity of the order complained of is supported by the countershowing of the answer, in which, as opposed to the legal conclusions stated in the petition, the several dates on which the several acts were done by petitioner to obtain a settlement of a bill of exceptions in said action are specifically set forth.

The facts stated in the answer show, briefly, to recapitulate: That no valid notice of motion for a new trial was made; that notice of the rendition and entry of judgment was served on and received by the petitioner on the 28th day of July, 1921; that the respondent, on September 27, 1921, made an order extending the time within which the defendant in said action might prepare and present a bill of exceptions to October 15, 1921; that the proposed bill of exceptions was presented to the judge or filed on the 11th day of October, 1921.

It is clear from the above statement that the time for the presentation to the judge of a proposed bill of exceptions expired on the 7th day of August, 1921, which was the last day of the 10 days after the date that petitioner received notice of the entry of judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 650. It is equally clear that the judge's order, extending the time for presenting the proposed bill, was an absolute nullity, inasmuch as it was long after the expiration of the time within which the petitioner was authorized by section 650, supra, to present a proposed bill and within which time he presented no bill. See Code Civ. Proc. § 1054. In other words, the time for the presentation of a proposed bill of exceptions, as prescribed by the section referred to, having expired without his having within said time presented his proposed bill, the de-defendant thereupon lost his right to a settlement of a bill of exceptions, and obviously, the judge's order of September 27, 1921, purporting to extend the time for presenting a bill could not have the effect of reviving the lost or forfeited right. The judge was, under the circumstances, without the authority or power to make the order of September 27th, and his act in doing so was clearly coram non iudice.

[3] It is contended by the petitioner, however, that, by submitting amendments to the bill of exceptions proposed by the petitioner, the plaintiff in said action acquiesced in and ratified the action of the court in making the order of September 27th, extending the time for presenting the bill to October 15, 1921, and that therefore the plaintiff should be held to have waived the right to claim and be estopped from claiming a default against the defendant, petitioner herein, on the ground that the said order was void. Kramm v. Stockton E. R. Co., 22 Cal. App. 737, 744, 136 Pac. 523. In that case though, it appeared that adverse counsel stipulated that an extension of the time might be granted to present a proposed bill of exceptions after the court or judge, without authority or legal right to do so, had extended the time to a certain date and that thereafter said counsel had obtained an extension beyond the time allowed by law to file or present proposed amendments to the proposed bill. In this case, the respondent's answer states (and the statement is not denied) that the plaintiff in said action proposed amendments to the proposed bill "without waiving objection of said Pioneer Fruit Company (plaintiff in said action) to said bill of exceptions on the ground that the said bill of exceptions was not served within the time allowed by law, stipulation of counsel, or order of court."

Counsel for petitioner cite these cases in support of the contention that the plaintiff in said action should be held estopped from claiming a default. Patrick v. Morse, 64 Cal. 462, 2 Pac. 49; Churchill v. Flournoy, 127 Cal. 357, 59 Pac. 791; Horton v. Jack, 115 Cal. 30, 46 Pac. 920. These cases are very much different in their facts from the instant case, to which, therefore, they have no application.

The courts should, it is true, so far as it may be done consistently with the rules of procedure, favor the right of a litigant to resort to and exhaust every legal means for a full, complete, and final determination of rights at issue in an action at law or a suit in equity; but it manifest from this record that the only escape from the consequences of his default, which was open to the defendant, was an application, based upon a sufficient showing, if one could be made, under section 473, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under the facts presented here, however, there was no other course left to the respondent but to dismiss the proceedings involving the settlement of the bill of exceptions presented by the petitioner, and it follows, of course, that there is no other alternative left to this court but to deny the prayer of the petition herein.

Accordingly, the application for a writ of mandate herein must be, and the same is, denied.

Appeal and error $\S$ 627(2)—Failure to file transcript on appeal within specified time held to require dismissal of appeal.

Under rule 2 of the Supreme Court (176 Pac. vii) providing that an appellant in a civil action shall, within 40 days after perfecting an appeal, serve and file a printed transcript of the record, and rule 5 (176 Pac. ix) providing that, if a transcript of the record shall not be filed within the prescribed time, an appeal may be dismissed on motion, where notice of appeal was filed in the office of the clerk of the trial court August 23d and a proposed bill of exceptions to be used on appeal was filed in the office of the clerk of the trial court October 11th, and the proceedings for settlement of the bill of exceptions were dismissed by the trial court on the 8th of the following May, and no other proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953A, providing that, in lieu of settling a bill of exceptions, a party desiring to appeal may have a general transcript made by the clerk of the trial court was instituted, the appeal will be dismissed on motion.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by the Pioneer Fruit Company against James Mulcahy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Appeal dismissed.

G. C. Allen and A. H. Carpenter, both of Stockton, for petitioner.

Robert H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. A motion on notice given has been made to dismiss the appeal herein, on the ground that no transcript or other record on appeal was filed within the time prescribed by rule 2 of the Supreme Court (176 Pac. vii). The motion is supported by the certificate of the clerk of the superior court, certifying the nature of the action and the relief demanded by the complaint, the amount of the judgment appealed from and a statement that the notice of appeal to this court was filed in the office of said clerk on the 23d day of August, 1921. The certificate contains this further statement:

"A proposed bill of exceptions to be used on appeal from said judgment was filed in my office on the 11th day of October, 1921; that the above-entitled court (the superior court) dismissed the proceedings for the settlement of said bill of exceptions on the 8th day of May, 1922; that there is no other proceeding pending for the settlement of the bill of exceptions or for a transcript under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California; that no such proceeding under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure was ever instituted, and the time to institute the same has expired."

See James Mulcahy v. D. M. Young, etc., Civil No. 2494, filed this day, 208 Pac. 321.

Rule 2 of the Supreme Court reads in part as follows:

"The appellant in a civil action shall, within 40 days after an appeal is perfected, except as hereinafter stated, serve and file the printed transcript of the record, duly certified to be correct by the attorneys of the respective parties, or by the clerk of the court from which the appeal is taken. If a proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions which may be used in support of such appeal is pending or may still be instituted, the time aforesaid shall not begin to run until the settled and authenticated bill of exceptions has been filed, or the time in which a proceeding for such a bill of exceptions may be instituted has expired, or such proceeding if instituted has been dismissed by the trial court. * * *

Rule 5 of said court (176 Pac. ix), among other things, provides that, "if the transcript of the record or appellant's points and authorities be not filed within the time prescribed, the appeal may be dismissed on motion, on notice given."

It results from the situation as thus explained that no transcript on appeal in this action has ever been filed in this court. The time having passed for the filing of such a transcript, and none being on file, it is the duty of this court to grant the motion to dismiss the appeal, and such is the order.

PEOPLE v. ANDERSON. (Cr. 1045.)

1. Homicide $\S$ 166(7)—Letter clandestinely received by married woman held admissible as tending to show motive for killing husband.

Where a woman was charged with killing her husband, the admission of a letter clandestinely received by her from another man at a feigned address, concerning a matrimonial venture, with knowledge that the husband was jealous of her, was justified as tending to show a motive for the killing, as suggesting why she desired to get her husband out of the way, and a source for their admitted quarrels, in view of her admission that her husband had seen the letter, and that it made him "sore."

2. Homicide $\S$ 74—Offered instruction defining prudence as synonymous with "cautious" held incorrect.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, an instruction offered by accused, attempting to define the words "without due caution and circumspection" as the equivalent of the words "criminal negligence," and then further defining criminal negligence as the want of attention that a prudent man ordinarily bestows, was incorrect and properly refused; "prudent" differing in meaning from "cautious" which suggests the idea of timidity, with its secondary meaning as overprudent; fearful.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words, and Phrases, First and Second Series, Cautious.]

3. Homicide $\S$ 34—Willful act need not be wantonly and recklessly committed to be involuntary manslaughter.

Under Pen. Code, $\S$ 192, subd. 2, defining involuntary manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being involuntarily, but in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death without due caution and circumspection, the act performed must be one which might and does produce death, but lack of due caution and circumspection need not go to the extent of being wanton or reckless, although it might properly be one that might be defined as culpable.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 829(1)—Not error for court to refuse amplification of charge clearly given.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where the court has fully and clearly stated the law upon a given point, it was not error for it to refuse to amplify thereon.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 772(2)—Error cannot be predicated on the use of the language of the Legislature in instructions.

Ordinarily, the language employed by the Legislature in defining a crime is deemed to be best suited to that purpose, and error cannot be predicated upon its use in instructions.

6. Homicide $\S$ 309(1)—Refusal of mere commonplace instruction not reversible error.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where an offered instruction attempted to expand upon and define "due caution and circumspection," which would have been no more than a mere commonplace, its refusal was not reversible error.

7. Homicide $\S$ 341—Refusal of instruction, where under evidence it could not change result, not error.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where the evidence abundantly warrants the verdict, and there is no reason to believe that a different result would have ensued had an offered instruction concerning due caution and circumspection been given, the refusal of this instruction held not reversible error.

8. Criminal law ⚡829(1)—Instructions, intended to emphasize propositions already given, properly refused.

Instructions, intended simply to emphasize propositions which are covered by the court in its charge to the jury, are properly refused.

9. Criminal law ⚡829(9)—Offered instruction held not prejudicial to accused in view of given instruction.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where the court instructed that every presumption of law was in favor of the innocence of accused, and in order to convict every material fact necessary to constitute the crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, held that an offered instruction that the presumption of innocence remained with the accused until a verdict was reached was properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Josephine W. Anderson was convicted of manslaughter, and she appeals. Affirmed.

L. L. Solomons and Fred C. Peterson, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. The appellant brings this appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of manslaughter and from the order of the court denying her motion for a new trial.

The principal point discussed in the brief of appellant is the contention that the trial court erred in receiving in evidence certain written and oral admissions and confessions made by her to the police officers without other and further proof of the corpus delicti. This point, however, was abandoned on the oral argument, and it will therefore receive no further attention at the hands of the court.

It is insisted that the court erred in admitting in evidence a certain letter addressed to the appellant under her former name of Josephine O'Halloran. The evidence shows that the appellant and her husband—of whose unlawful killing she was convicted—had some differences and quarrels, and that he was jealous of her. The letter was dated on March 7, 1921, and long after her marriage to the deceased. The homicide occurred on October 15, 1921. It was written in reply to a letter addressed by the appellant to the writer and in answer to a matrimonial advertisement. The letter is as follows:

"Dear Madam: In reply to your letter will say that I am forty-three years old, five feet ten inches tall, weigh one hundred seventy-five. Pretty good looking, got a business of my own, good big house and some money in bank.

Now what I am looking for is some good woman, some one I can depend upon to be good. "She must be a Catholic and not a divorced woman.

"Now I have a good many letters, but yours is the only one I have ans. so far. So if you care to write again to me. Have you any family. If you could send a picture of yourself I will do the same so we will have some idea about each other. I am a good person to get along with good disposition, hope you are the same. Please write again."

[1] The appellant admitted to the officer that the letter had been addressed to her under her former name and at her former address. She furthermore admitted that her husband had seen the letter, and that it made him "sore." Her explanation to the officers of the incident was that she and some other women were having some fun answering matrimonial advertisements. The facts that the letter was clandestinely received by a married woman at a feigned address, concerning a matrimonial venture, and with the knowledge that her husband was jealous of her, justified the court in admitting the letter in evidence as tending in greater or less degree to show a motive for the killing. The letter may have suggested why she desired to get her husband out of the way. It was admissible as suggesting a source for the quarrels that admittedly took place between them.

[2] The court instructed the jury quite fully as to the various elements of the crime of manslaughter, and in doing so employed the words "without due caution and circumspection." The appellant offered and the court refused to give an instruction attempting to amplify the meaning of the words "due caution and circumspection." The following quotation from the proposed instruction will show its drift and purport:

"Without due caution and circumspection means the same thing as criminal negligence. The word 'negligence' as used in this instruction means a want of such attention to the nature and probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns as in the omission to do something which a reasonable man guided by those circumstances which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs would do, or doing something which a reasonable and prudent man would not do."

Conceding that this proposed instruction is a correct exposition of the law, it adds nothing to the meaning of the words used by the Legislature in defining the offense. The average juror is quite as much enlightened by one as by the other. All the words employed in the expression "due caution and circumspection" are in common and daily use, and are understood by the average person. "Caution" means care to avoid accident or misfortune, but the definition informs us of little more than the meaning accorded to it by mankind in general.

But the instruction is not wholly correct. It attempts to define the words "without due caution and circumspection" as the equivalent of the words "criminal negligence," and then further defines criminal negligence as a want of the attention that a prudent man ordinarily bestows. This is erroneous. Prudence is not always the same as caution. We quote:

"Cautious" differs in meaning from "prudent." It suggests the idea of timidity and Webster gives its secondary meaning as over-prudent; fearful; timorous. A man is cautious chiefly as the result of timidity, etc. Eggett v. Allen, 106 Wis. 633, 82 N. W. 556; McClafferty v. Philip, 151 Pa. 86, 24 Atl. 1042.

Since this cause was submitted, the Supreme Court has had occasion to consider the meaning of the phrase in question. The District Court of Appeal used the following language:

"If one performs an act in a manner not forbidden by statute, but in a wanton, reckless, and culpable manner, and thereby kills another, he may be convicted under the definition of manslaughter as secondly described." People v. Seiler, 207 Pac. 396, March 28, 1922.

[3] And the Supreme Court, in commenting upon this instruction and rejecting it as inaccurate, says:

"The statute (Pen. C. § 192, subd. 2) defines involuntary manslaughter of this specified character as the unlawful killing of a human being, involuntarily, but 'in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death * * * without due caution and circumspection.' In order to constitute this kind of manslaughter the act may be lawful, but it must be one which might produce death, and which does produce death, and it must be committed without due caution and circumspection. The lack of due caution and circumspection need not go to the extent of being wanton or reckless, although it might possibly be such as would be defined as culpable. * * *" 207 Pac. 399.

The Code (Pen. Code, § 192) provision upon which the instruction is based reads as follows:

"Sec. 192. Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice * * * involuntary * * * in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death * * * without due caution and circumspection."

[4] It is a familiar rule that once the court has fully and fairly stated the law upon a given point, it is not error for the court to refuse to amplify thereon. People v. Quon Foo (Cal. App.) 206 Pac. 1028.

[5] Ordinarily, the language employed by the Legislature in defining a crime is deemed to be best suited to that purpose, and error cannot be predicated upon its use in informations and instructions. An information must set forth the charge "in ordinary and concise language [without repetition], and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." Pen. Code, § 950. And it is usually sufficient if it follows the language employed by the Legislature. People v. Martin, 32 Cal. 91; People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 369, 42 Pac. 894; People v. Carpenter, 136 Cal. 391, 68 Pac. 1027, and many other California cases. The instruction of which appellant complains as being inadequate is given in the very words of the statute. "Negligence," when so great as to be criminal in character, is stated in the proposed instruction as being the equivalent of want of "due caution and circumspection." "Negligence" is a word that has acquired a highly specialized meaning, and whole volumes have been written upon it; but the words "due caution and circumspection" as used by the trial court have their common and ordinary meaning and no other. When these words are stated to the jury they import to them this common meaning without further amplification. The Supreme Court in a recent case says:

"From this it is argued that the instruction must be condemned as erroneous. But the Legislature has the power to declare what the law shall be on the subject. It has done so by this section. * * * However this may be, it cannot be disputed that error cannot be predicated upon an instruction which states the law as the Legislature has fixed it by statute and which is applicable to the case." People v. Fowler, 178 Cal. 657, quoting from page 671, 174 Pac. 892 from page 897.

[6] But an attempt to expand upon and define "due caution and circumspection" would, if successful, be no more when given than a mere "commonplace"; and it is well settled that giving or refusing a mere "commonplace" does not constitute reversible error. People v. Raber, 168 Cal. 316, 143 Pac. 317.

[7] The evidence showing the circumstances of the killing is shown only by the testimony of the appellant herself, there being no other evidence on the point. It is not at all clear that her version of the matter would demand any instruction at all concerning "due caution and circumspection." But at most the refusal of the instruction, even conceding it to be correct, is not, in a clear case like the present, of sufficient importance to justify a reversal. The evidence abundantly warrants the verdict, and there is no reason to believe that a different result would have ensued had the proposed instruction been given.

[8] It is strenuously insisted that the court erred in refusing a proffered instruction on the presumption of innocence. The court, after fully and fairly instructing the jury in general terms on this subject, refused to give a further instruction to the effect that—

This "presumption continues throughout the trial and accompanies you when in your retirement you consider your verdict and will avail to acquit her unless upon examination of the testimony you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt the presumption of her innocence is false."

This instruction correctly states the law, and it might well have been given, but this is far from saying that the refusal to give it constitutes reversible error. The jurors, of course, did not know the purport of the instruction, nor that the court had declined to give it. There arises no inference, therefore, that the jurors understood it to be an incorrect statement of the law. It remains only to inquire whether or not they were correctly and sufficiently instructed upon this point. It cannot be contended that a defendant on trial is entitled to an instruction in any set form of words. Instructions intended simply to emphasize propositions which are covered by the court in its charge to the jury are properly refused. People v. Morrell, 28 Cal. App. 729, 153 Pac. 977; People v. Wilson, 29 Cal. App. 563, 156 Pac. 377.

[9] It may be stated as a general rule that any form of instruction which fully and fairly presents the point at issue meets the requirements of the statute. The refused instruction may be summarized as stating that the presumption of innocence continues with the jury until they agree upon a verdict. It is quite clear that the court gave this instruction in substance in its general charge. Among other charges, the court gave the following to the jury:

"I instruct you that the law raises no presumption whatever against the defendant, but on the contrary, every presumption of the law is in favor of her innocence, and in order to convict her of the crime alleged or of any lesser crime which may be included in it, every material fact necessary to constitute such crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt; and if you entertain any reasonable doubt upon any single fact or element necessary to constitute the crime, it is your duty to give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and acquit her."

Manifestly, this instruction advises the jury that they must acquit the appellant if, at the moment of arriving at their verdict, they entertain any reasonable doubt of her guilt. The condition of mind of the juror bears a close and necessary relation to the moment of time when such condition ripens into a verdict. Any other reading of the instruction would be absurd. Again:

"The fact that the defendant has been arrested and charged with the offense, and that an information has been filed against her creates no presumption whatever of her guilt. It is incumbent upon the prosecution, not only to overcome the presumption of the defendant's innocence, but also the defendant's guilt must be established by evidence sufficiently conclusive to exclude any reasonable supposition of her innocence. The testimony must establish affirmatively her guilt to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt; and, unless the evidence introduced in the case is such that it proves to your entire satisfaction and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty, she is entitled to an acquittal at your hands." And "these two propositions must be established by the prosecution to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt." And further: "In every criminal proceeding under our system of jurisprudence the defendant is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown he is entitled to an acquittal. Reasonable doubt is that state of the case which after an entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence leaves your minds in that condition that you cannot say you feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge." And: "If upon a review and consideration of all the evidence before you, you should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant here is guilty, you may under the information return either of the following verdicts," etc.

In several other places in the charge the court admonished the jury as to reasonable doubt and moral certainty.

There is, of course, no question that the presumption of innocence remains with the party on trial until a verdict of guilty is reached. People v. McNamara, 94 Cal. 509, 29 Pac. 953. If it ceased prior to that moment it would be of no value to a defendant, and would be no more than a mockery and a sham.

When a jury is once told in general terms that it must not convict a defendant unless satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of his guilt, it is unnecessary to go into detail to say to the jury that this principle applies during the deliberations of the jury, for by its very terms it implies as much. No case has been called to our attention that is in conflict with the conclusions at which we have arrived. The cases of People v. Arlington, 131 Cal. 231, 63 Pac. 347, and People v. James, 5 Cal. App. 427, 90 Pac. 561, cited by appellant, are really adverse to her contentions. In each of those cases it was shown that other instructions, having the same general meaning, relieved the case from error.

We find no error in the record. The appellant was fairly tried and properly convicted. This is a proper case for the application of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

Accordingly, the judgment and order denying appellant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

NORTH CONFIDENCE MINING & DEVELOPMENT CO. v. FITCH et al.
(Civ. 2436.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 27, 1922.)

Corporations  298(5)—Director who is attorney may not vote on resolution to settle client's claim, and could not make up a quorum for such action.

A director whose interest in a matter under consideration is adverse to the corporation he represents is disqualified to vote thereon, and under Civ. Code, § 2230, providing that a trustee may not participate in any transaction concerning the trust in which he or any one for whom he acts as agent has an interest adverse to that of his beneficiary, directors of a corporation are trustees thereof, and a director who is an attorney may not vote on a resolution authorizing execution of a note and mortgage in settlement of a client's claim against the corporation, and his presence is not effective to make up a quorum for such action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by the North Confidence Mining & Development Company, a corporation, against C. S. Fitch and Richard Chute. From judgment for part of the relief asked, both parties appeal. On plaintiff's appeal, judgment reversed.

See, also, 208 Pac. 330.

Frank W. Street and Horace M. Street, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. C. Webster, of Sonora, and Richard Chute, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This action was instituted to cancel a promissory note and mortgage for the sum of $9,439.04 purporting to have been given by the plaintiff to defendant Fitch. The court found the note to be valid to the extent of $1,787.89, and enjoined the defendants "from collecting any greater amount thereon," and adjudged the mortgage to be a lien on the lands described therein "to the extent of said sum of $1,787.89, with interest." From this judgment both the plaintiff and the defendants prosecute separate appeals.

Plaintiff corporation was organized with a capital stock of $75,000 divided into 75,000 shares of the par value of $1 each. With the exception of a few shares issued to certain persons to enable them to serve as directors, the defendant Chute owned or controlled all the capital stock up to May 15, 1915. On that day he sold and conveyed 47,156 shares to Ella Kleinecke, but at all times, prior to July 28, 1919, he continued to be president of the board of directors, and controlled all of plaintiff's corporate acts. July 15, 1916, defendant Chute, claiming that the plaintiff was indebted to him in the sum of $9,439.04 for money advanced by him as president, treasurer, and general manager, assigned his claim to defendant Fitch as security for moneys then owing from Chute to Fitch, and the latter still holds said claim and the note and mortgage given in consideration thereof as such security only. Immediately thereafter Fitch commenced an action against plaintiff herein for the amount of the claim. The corporation was duly served, and, on its failure to answer within the time allowed by law, judgment was entered against it July 31, 1916. Mrs. Kleinecke promptly moved to vacate the judgment, and her motion was granted October 6, 1916. April 18, 1917, Mrs. Kleinecke demanded a certificate for the 47,156 shares of the capital stock sold to her by Chute, the same then still standing in the latter's name on the books of the corporation, but her demand was refused. April 21, 1917, a purported special meeting of the board of directors was held, at which the note in suit was attempted to be authorized, and on the same day was executed by Chute as president and E. W. Holland as secretary. May 3, 1919, the same officers executed the mortgage in question to secure payment of the promissory note. This mortgage seems to have been executed without any previous authorization, but at a purported special meeting of the board of directors held May 21, 1919, a resolution was adopted ratifying its execution. Mrs. Kleinecke testified and the court found that she had no knowledge of the execution of the note and mortgage until July 14, 1919. April 25, 1917, Mrs. Kleinecke commenced an action against the plaintiff herein and Chute to compel the issuance to her of a certificate for the 47,156 shares of the capital stock and the transfer thereof on the books of the corporation. Defendant Chute filed an answer in that action, denying that Mrs. Kleinecke was the owner of the 47,156 shares of stock. Judgment was rendered in her favor, and the defendants therein appealed. The judgment was affirmed, and thereupon the certificate demanded was delivered to Mrs. Kleinecke June 27, 1919. July 28, 1919, at a meeting of the stockholders of the corporation, the same being the only meeting of the stockholders since the year 1907, a new board of directors was elected. From the time at which the new board was elected Mrs. Kleinecke has had the control and direction of the affairs of the corporation. This action was instituted October 25, 1919. The complaint alleges, among other things, that the promissory note and mortgage were given without consideration, and that the execution thereof was neither authorized nor ratified by the board of directors at any valid meeting thereof. The board of directors was composed of seven members, and the by-laws provided that four directors should constitute a quorum. At all meetings of the directors at which any action was taken relative to the authorization or ratification of the promissory note or mortgage five directors only were present. Of these five the defendant was one, though he did not vote on any question pertaining to the promissory note or mortgage. Another of these five directors at all such meetings was J. C. Webster, who at all times was and is the attorney for Fitch in his aforesaid suit against the corporation. It appears from the testimony of Mr. Webster that such action is still pending. Mr. Webster testified that at the time the resolution was adopted authorizing the execution of the promissory note he was attorney for Fitch in the matter of the claim for which the note was given. He introduced the resolution authorizing its execution, and was one of the four by whose votes the resolution was adopted.

Admittedly, Chute's adverse interest disqualified him from voting for the adoption of the resolution, and he did not so vote. It is contended that Webster also was disqualified by reason of his client's adverse interest. This contention must be sustained. A director whose interest in the matter under consideration is adverse to that of the corporation he represents is disqualified to vote on such question. For equally cogent reasons such adverse interest of a director's client or principal ought to disqualify, and the Legislature has not left the question in doubt. Section 2230 of the Civil Code, with certain exceptions not pertinent here, provides:

"Neither a trustee nor any of his agents may take part in any transaction concerning the trust in which he or any one for whom he acts as agent has an interest, present or contingent, adverse to that of his beneficiary."

Directors of a corporation are trustees thereof within the meaning of section 2230. Graves v. Mining Co., 81 Cal. 303, 22 Pac. 665; San Diego v. Pacific Beach Co., 112 Cal. 53, 44 Pac. 333, 33 L. R. A. 788; Schnittger v. Old Home, etc., Min. Co., 144 Cal. 603, 78 Pac. 9; Pacific Vinegar, etc., Works v. Smith, 145 Cal. 352, 78 Pac. 550, 104 Am. St. Rep. 42; Highland Park Inv. Co. v. List, 27 Cal. App. 761, 151 Pac. 162; Palo Alto, etc., Ass'n v. First Nat. Bank, 33 Cal. App. 214, 164 Pac. 1124. A director of a corporation "cannot take part in any transaction in which he, or any one for whom he acts, has an interest, present or contingent, adverse to that of his beneficiary." Sims v. Petaluma Gas Light Co., 131 Cal. 656, 659, 63 Pac. 1011, 1012. An attorney is, of course, the agent of his client within the scope of his employment. Carter v. Mining Co., 83 Cal. 222, 23 Pac. 317; Wittenbrock v. Parker, 102 Cal. 93, 36 Pac. 374, 24 L. R. A. 197, 41 Am. St. Rep. 172. From the foregoing it seems clear that Webster was disqualified to vote on the resolution introduced by him. Being so disqualified, his presence was not effective in making up a quorum.

"The same rules which preclude an interested director from uniting with other directors in the creation of an obligation in favor of himself by his vote forbid him from uniting with them in creating such obligation by any act or exercise of his official position, and a meeting at which there is not a majority of the directors, exclusive of such interested director, is not a competent board for the transaction of any corporate business. * * * By reason of the disqualification of Wells from taking any part in passing the resolution for executing the note and mortgage to himself, he could neither vote in favor of the resolution, nor by his presence help to create a quorum by which the other two directors could adopt it. For the purpose of any action upon this resolution he was as much a stranger to the board as if he had never been elected a director, and, although he may have been physically present in the room with the other two directors, he was not for that purpose a component part of the board, any more than would have been any other bystander, and there was not, therefore, a quorum of the board 'present and acting' at the time the resolution was adopted." Curtin v. Salmon River, etc., Co., 130 Cal. 345, 349, 62 Pac. 552, 554 (80 Am. St. Rep. 132).

In discussing the validity of a transaction between two corporations, where the same persons constituted a majority of the directors of each of them, in the case of Sausalito, etc., Co. v. Sausalito Imp. Co., 166 Cal. 302, 306, 136 Pac. 57, 59, the court said:

"The correct doctrine is well stated in O'Connor, etc., v. Coosa F. Co., 95 Ala. 618, 36 Am. St. Rep. 251, 10 South, 291, as follows: 'If the same persons as directors of two different companies represent both companies in a transaction in which their interests are opposed, such transaction may be avoided by either company, or at the instance of a stockholder in either company, without regard to the question of advantage or detriment to either company. Both the corporations are armed with the right to repudiate such a transaction, no matter how fair or open it may be shown to be. * * * The general rule is that such dealings are not absolutely void, but are voidable at the election of the respective corporations, or of the stockholders thereof. They become binding, if acquiesced in by the corporations and their stockholders.'

"If a person entitled to avoid a contract on such ground is informed of the facts upon which his right rests, and thereafter delays taking any steps to avoid or repudiate the transaction until a period equal to the statute of limitations has expired, the presumption is that he has ratified it. Under some circumstances a much shorter time will justify the presumption." Sausalito, etc., Co. v. Sausalito Imp. Co., 166 Cal. 302, 307, 136 Pac. 57, 59.

There are no circumstances in this case to warrant the inference that the voidable transaction has been ratified or that the statute of limitations has run against plaintiff's cause of action, nor is anything in the nature of an estoppel disclosed by the evidence. The plaintiff derived no benefit from the transaction. Neither did the defendants surrender any rights thereby. Their suit on the alleged claim against the corporation is still pending. The default judgment entered therein was set aside on the ground that—

"Said corporation had forfeited its charter prior to the commencement of this action by failure to pay its license tax to the state of California."

The plaintiff therein appealed from the order setting aside the judgment, and it appears that the appeal is still pending. It appears that the corporation was relieved from such forfeiture on the 21st day of April, 1917. In Kehrlein-Swinerton Con. Co. v. Rapken, 30 Cal. App. 11, 156 Pac. 972, where the plaintiff had forfeited its franchise through the nonpayment of its license tax prior to the commencement of the action, it was held to be an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to order the substitution of the names of the plaintiff's directors as trustees for its own name as party plaintiff. A petition in that case to have the cause heard in the Supreme Court was denied. No reason appears why the same rule should not be available to a plaintiff suing a corporation under similar circumstances, nor why an action commenced under such circumstances may not be prosecuted to judgment after the revival of the corporation. To uphold the validity of the promissory note and mortgage in any amount would be to give the defendants a preference over all other creditors of the corporation and to subject plaintiff's land to an unauthorized lien. The cancellation of those instruments will leave the defendants in the precise position they occupied prior to the unauthorized transaction.

Other grounds are urged for a reversal of the judgment, but in view of the conclusion reached it is not deemed necessary to discuss them. The points argued will not probably arise at the retrial of the case.

The judgment is reversed.

NORTH CONFIDENCE MINING & DEVELOPMENT CO. v. FITCH et al.
(Civ. 2442.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 27, 1922.)

Appeal and error §790(2)—Defendants' separate appeal dismissed, where reversal of judgment on plaintiff's appeal necessitated retrial.

Where both plaintiff and defendants had prosecuted separate appeals from a judgment reversed on plaintiff's appeal, leaving defendants with their former remedies available and necessitating a complete retrial of the issues, so that consideration of the questions raised by defendants' appeal for the guidance of the trial court was rendered unnecessary, defendants' appeal will be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by the North Confidence Mining & Development Company, a corporation, against C. S. Fitch and Richard Chute. From judgment for part of the relief asked, both parties appeal. On defendants' appeal, appeal dismissed.

See, also, 208 Pac. 328.

J. C. Webster, of Sonora, and Richard Chute, for appellants.

Frank W. Street and Horace M. Street, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The defendants appeal from the judgment herein adjudging that a certain promissory note and mortgage in favor of defendant Fitch for $9,439.04 are invalid for any amount in excess of $1,787.89, and enjoining the defendants from collecting any greater sum upon said note. The facts are fully set forth in the opinion this day filed deciding plaintiff's appeal (No. 2436 [Cal. App.] 208 Pac. 328) from the judgment holding the note and mortgage valid to the extent of $1,787.89.

Appellants contend that the plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment of cancellation because there is neither allegation nor proof that the plaintiff restored or offered "to restore defendants to the same position they would have been if they had not relied upon the instrument sought to be canceled." As pointed out in the opinion reversing the judgment, the defendants' position has not changed, but they may still pursue every remedy which was available to them at the time of the execution of the note. The reversal of the judgment on plaintiff's appeal necessitates a retrial of all the issues raised by the pleadings as fully as if the case had never been tried. The other points argued on this appeal will not probably arise on the retrial of the case, and no useful purpose would be subserved by a consideration of them in this opinion. It is sufficient to say that there is no merit in any of them.

If the defendants alone had appealed it would be necessary to affirm the judgment, but an affirmation would be inconsistent with the judgment of reversal already given, and would only lead to confusion. By the reversal already had, the questions presented by defendants' appeal become moot questions; their consideration not being necessary for the guidance of the court in the retrial of the case. Under such circumstances the appeal should be dismissed. San Jose Bank of Savings v. Bank of Madera, 121 Cal. 543, 54

Pac. 85; Turner v. Markham, 156 Cal. 68, 103 Pac. 319; Horton v. City of Los Angeles, 119 Cal. 602, 51 Pac. 956; In re Treadwell, 111 Cal. 189, 43 Pac. 584; Read v. San Diego Union Co., 6 Cal. Unrep. 845, 67 Pac. 1; Mendocino County v. Peters, 2 Cal. App. 34, 82 Pac. 1124.

The appeal is dismissed; the respondent to recover its costs on appeal.

KERNS v. SCRIVANI et al. (Civ. 4076.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1922.)

Landlord and tenant — 160(4)—Evidence held to sustain finding that lessee's covenant to surrender premises in good condition was not broken where lessee failed to remove vines.

In an action by a lessor to recover upon lessee's covenant to surrender the premises in good condition, where it was shown that berries were planted when the lease was made, and that the berry vines were not old or unprofitable at the termination thereof, as opposed to lessor's contention that they were detrimental to the premises, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that lessor was not damaged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Benj. K. Knight, Judge.

Action by Mary Kerns against Charles H. Scrivani and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles B. Younger, of Santa Cruz, for appellant.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover damages for the breach of a covenant in a lease requiring that, upon a surrender of the leased premises, the lessee would leave them in as good state and condition as reasonable use and wear thereof would permit.

It is alleged in the complaint that upon the termination of the lease defendants failed to remove certain blackberry vines from the premises, which, it is claimed, were old and unprofitable, and detrimental to the same; that the lessee did not therefore quit and surrender the premises in as good a state and condition as reasonable use and wear thereof would permit, as required of them, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $500. Defendants denied that the berries referred to were unprofitable or detrimental to the premises.

From the evidence it appears that plaintiff leased the lands in question to one B. Scri-vani, who died during the term of his tenancy. Defendants are his children, and they succeeded to this and other property of their ancestor. It appeared in evidence that half of the leased tract was planted to berries at the time of the creation of the agreement, and that this same condition existed at the termination thereof.

The trial court found, in substance, that the vines were not old, unprofitable, or detrimental to the premises. It further found that the berries were on the land prior to the execution of the lease, and that it was not true that defendants did not surrender the premises in as good a state and condition as reasonable use and wear thereof would permit, and, further that plaintiff did not suffer damage in any amount. Judgment was accordingly entered for defendants.

An examination of the record shows that the evidence fully sustains the finding of the trial court. This being so, the judgment is affirmed.

CORISON v. WILLIAMS. (Civ. 3850.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 23, 1922.)

1. Evidence — 80(1)—Law of foreign state regarding adoption will be presumed to be same as this state in absence of showing to contrary.

The law of a foreign state in regard to adoption in 1903 will be presumed to be identical with the law of this state in the absence of a showing to the contrary.

2. Evidence — 397(3)—Adoption papers held not such a written agreement as to exclude evidence of an oral contract.

A petition for adoption, alleging that "declarants desire to adopt the child for the purpose of giving her a home with them, of raising her as if she were their own, making her their legitimate heir and giving her their name," as required by Civ. Code, § 226, did not constitute such a written agreement as to call for the exclusion from evidence of an oral contract by the adoptive parents to leave all their property to the child upon their deaths.

3. Adoption — 20—Natural parents and adoptive parents may make separate agreement concerning future welfare of child.

Civ. Code, § 226, prescribing mode of proceedings for adoption, merely requires an agreement that the adopted child will be treated like an ordinary child, and does not preclude the natural parents and the adoptive parents from making a separate enforceable agreement concerning the future welfare of the child.

4. Adoption ☞7—Only surviving parent can give consent, and not grandparents.

Under Civ. Code, § 224, requiring consent of parents in adoption of minor children, grandparents cannot give consent where a parent is living.

5. Evidence ☞313—Of admissions against interest by one since deceased is weak.

Evidence of admissions against interest made by one since deceased is weak.

6. Evidence ☞78—Evidence willfully suppressed is presumed to be adverse.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 5, evidence willfully suppressed is presumed to be adverse.

7. Appeal and error ☞1011(1)—Findings of trial court based on conflicting evidence are final.

Findings of fact of the trial court, based on conflicting evidence, are final.

8. Specific performance ☞121(7)—Evidence held sufficient to support finding that oral contract was not made.

In an action by an adopted daughter against the executrix of the estate of her adoptive mother, to enforce an oral contract by deceased to leave all her property to plaintiff upon her death, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that the contract was not made.

9. Wills ☞58(1)—Use of term "legitimate heir" in petition held not to constitute agreement to leave property to adopted child.

The use of the term "legitimate heir" in a petition for adoption did not constitute an agreement by the adoptive parents to leave all their property to the child upon their deaths; "legitimate" meaning nothing more than lawful [citing Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Legitimate].

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Gladys Corison against Lydia R. Williams, personally and as executrix of the estate of Grace A. Troy, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur W. Eckman and Wm. B. Himrod, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. P. Adams and W. W. Orme, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. From the time of her birth until in her eighth year plaintiff bore the name of Nina C. Hunt. At the time when she reached the age mentioned she was adopted by Jerome Troy and Grace A. Troy, husband and wife, and acquired the name of Gladys Troy. After arriving at maturity she became, and she is now, the wife of John D. Corison. This action was instituted by plaintiff to specifically enforce an agreement which she alleges was made in her favor by Mr. and Mrs. Troy at the time of her adoption. Both of the Troys were deceased when the action was commenced. Lydia R. Williams was made a defendant personally because Mrs. Troy in her lifetime had conveyed to the former certain of her property, one of the purposes of the action being to set the conveyance aside. Mrs. Troy also made a will in favor of Mrs. Williams. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

The formal adoption of appellant was preceded by certain conversations between the Troys, on the one hand, and her father, David E. Hunt, and her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Fleming, on the other, the mother of appellant, who was a daughter of the Flemings, having died some time before the negotiations looking toward the adoption had commenced. It is alleged in the complaint that these negotiations culminated in an oral agreement that, if they were permitted to adopt appellant through Hunt's consent to the adoption, the Troys "would leave to the plaintiff at their deaths all of the property which they then had, or which they might accumulate, or of which they might become possessed." The trial court found that this averment was untrue, and appellant contends that the finding is without support in the evidence.

[1-3] At the trial the evidence as to the oral agreement went in over respondents' objection, their contention being that the formal adoption papers constituted the only agreement between Hunt and the Troys, and that the oral negotiations between them could not be received, as they tended to vary or add to the terms of the written agreement. That ground is now insisted upon in support of the contention that the disputed finding of the trial court should be upheld. If this position is well taken, the evidence of the oral agreement should have been excluded. Upon that theory the finding would be proper, as the record would in effect show no evidence to support the alleged oral agreement. The adoption of appellant occurred in the then territory of New Mexico, but no claim is made that the law of that jurisdiction concerning adoptions was different from the law of California on the same subject. Counsel on both sides therefore correctly argue the cause upon the presumption that the law of the territory was identical with the law of this state as it stood in 1903, when the adoption was consummated. At that time section 226 of our Civil Code, after directing that adoption should be made pursuant to petition addressed to the superior court, further provided.

"The person adopting a child, and the child adopted, and the other persons, if within or residents of this state, whose consent is necessary, must appear before the judge of the superior court of the county where the person adopting resides, and the necessary consent must thereupon be signed, and an agreement be executed by the person adopting, to the effect that the child shall be adopted, and treated in all respects as his own lawful child should be treated."

The petition for the adoption of appellant alleged, considering only so much of it as may by any possibility bear upon the point now under consideration:

"That said declarants [the Troys] desire to adopt said child for the purpose of giving her a home with them, of raising her as if she were their own child, and making her their legitimate heir, and giving her their name."

The consent of Hunt to the adoption is merely to the effect that "he hereby consents to the adoption of his said child" by the Troys "as set out in their declaration and application herein," and the order of the court sanctioning the adoption casts no particular light on the subject. We cannot indorse the view that these adoption papers constitute such a written agreement between Hunt and the Troys as to call for the exclusion from evidence of an oral contract connected with the subject. It will be noted that section 226, as it stood in 1903—and, in fact, it has not been changed since in that respect—required only as to the matter of contract that the party adopting should execute an agreement "to the effect that the child shall be adopted, and treated in all respects as his own lawful child should be treated." We do not mean to say that promises taking a wider range in a petition for adoption either could or could not be enforced, as the question is not before us. We do say, however, that the petition in this instance shows no more than an attempt to comply with the statute, notwithstanding the use in it of the clause, "making her their legitimate heir," as to which expression we shall have more to say in discussing another point presented by appellant. As the statute required nothing, in effect, but an agreement that an adopted child should be treated like an ordinary child of the adopting person, and as the petition for adoption did not attempt to go beyond the requirement of the enactment, there is no reason why Hunt and the Troys, entirely apart from the terms of the petition for adoption, might not have made an enforceable agreement concerning the future welfare of appellant. Such statutes as section 226 "prescribe precisely what is essential to accomplish adoption without reference to what other understandings may have been had between the parties. If others there have been, they have no place in the articles of adoption as such, which aim only to put the minor in the same relation legally to the adoptive parents as though their offspring." Horner v. Maxwell, 171 Iowa, 660, 153 N. W. 331. See, also, Strakosch v. Connecticut T. & S. D. Co., 96

Conn. 471, 114 Atl. 660. We conclude that the trial court committed no error in receiving evidence of the alleged oral agreement.

[4] Still dealing with the same finding of the trial court, we have now to determine whether there was a conflict of evidence concerning the oral agreement and whether the finding can be sustained upon that theory. No evidence upon the question was offered by respondents, and appellant insists that the trial court was concluded by the evidence presented by her, and that no finding was possible except that the agreement was made as pleaded. When the negotiations for the adoption of appellant were opened by the Troys, she was residing at Raton, New Mexico, with her grandparents, the Flemings, her mother being deceased, as already remarked, and her father being at some distance from Raton under employment with a railroad company. Together with an indication by the Troys of their desire to adopt the child, her grandparents both testified to expressions used in their presence by the would-be adoptive parents, but without the presence of the father, tending to show that if the adoption were consented to they would leave all their property to appellant. Nothing was concluded on the subject, however, nor could there have been, as the grandparents were powerless to enter into an agreement on the subject, the surviving parent being the only one who could give consent to the proposed adoption. Civ. Code, § 224. Moreover, and aside from this state of the law, Fleming testified:

"I talked with Mr. Troy and told him he [Hunt, the father] would come up there and he would talk to Mr. Troy himself and see about it, and I think that is all I told him—that he would come up and he would talk to Mr. Troy himself."

The evidence shows without dispute that Hunt did come to Raton and that he had one or more conversations with the Troys, or with one of them, upon the subject of the proposed adoption, and that both Troy and his wife and Hunt were in court at the time the adoption was consummated. We are pointed to no showing in the record that any witness who testified was present at any conversation between Hunt and the Troys, except that a Mrs. Eaton testified, the italics being ours:

"I heard Grace Troy say in the presence of Mrs. Fleming and Mr. Hunt before the adoption took place: 'I expect to take her in my home and give her my love. I will school her, and I am going to take her to California to live, and after that we will travel, and at the end of my life she is to have all my earthly possessions.'"

Mrs. Fleming, however, did not testify to this statement. Her testimony, on the contrary, contradicts that of Mrs. Eaton, for she said, "I don't think he [Hunt] ever met Mrs. Troy." It is certain that no person who took the witness stand at the trial was present in court with Hunt and the Troys when the adoption was concluded. Hunt was not produced as a witness, nor was his deposition taken, although both appellant and the Flemings knew of his whereabouts. Several witnesses testified to statements made by the Troys, after the adoption was perfected, to the effect that they expected or intended to leave their property to appellant.

[5-8] In determining whether this state of the evidence made it incumbent upon the trial court to find that the oral agreement was consummated, various considerations are to be invoked. In the first place, the Supreme Court has said several times that evidence of oral admissions against interest made by one whose lips are sealed in death is the weakest kind of evidence that could be produced, and that "it is not stating it too strongly to say that evidence so given under such circumstances must appear to any court to be in its nature the weakest and most unsatisfactory." Estate of Emerson, 175 Cal. 724, 167 Pac. 149, and cases cited. If the evidence in the record which is opposed to the contested finding is to be considered in so unfavorable a light, what is to be said of the fact that Hunt was not called as a witness? He was the only living person who could have told of the final agreement between himself and the Troys, if any there was, affecting the future welfare of appellant. The failure to produce his testimony casts the gravest suspicion upon appellant's case. It is to be presumed, under subdivision 5 of section 1963, Code of Civil Procedure, "that evidence willfully suppressed would be adverse if produced," and it has been determined that this factor may be considered wherever it applies, in passing upon the question whether there is evidence to support a particular finding of fact. Estate of Thomas, 140 Cal. 397, 73 Pac. 1059. And this court said in a late case, in which a disputable presumption was alone looked to as sufficient support for a finding of fact:

"It is contended by appellant, however, that the presumption was overcome by testimony introduced by him. There was considerable testimony presented by appellant on the subject, it is true, but we cannot say that it was sufficient to outweigh the presumption. The solution of that question was within the peculiar and final province of the trial court, for the presumption on the one hand and the testimony opposed to it on the other presented but a conflict of evidence. The finding of the trial court on the subject is final. French Bank v. Beard, 54 Cal. 480." Fowler v. Enriquez, 204 Pac. 854.

In the present case, under the presumption which must be indulged pursuant to the terms of subdivision 5, § 1963, Code of Civil Procedure, it is as if the record disclosed testimony of Hunt actually opposed to that produced by appellant, not forgetting the weak and unsatisfactory character of the latter under the pronouncements of the Supreme Court already mentioned. We are satisfied that the disputed finding is supported by the evidence.

[9] It is contended by appellant that she was entitled to recover under the "contract" disclosed by the formal adoption papers, and this because of the use of the term "legitimate heir" in the petition for adoption. The contention cannot be upheld. The word "legitimate" added nothing to the word "heir," for legitimate means nothing more than lawful (5 Words and Phrases [1st Ed.] p. 4090, tits. "Legitimate," "Legitimate Purpose," and see title "Legitimate Heirs"; 3 Words and Phrases [2d Ed.] 88, tit. "Legitimate"); and "the heirs of a person are those whom the law appoints to succeed to his estate in case he dies without disposing of it by will" (Wittenbrock v. Wheadon, 128 Cal. 150, 60 Pac. 664, 79 Am. St. Rep. 32). It is plain to us that the Troys, in using the term "legitimate heir" in the petition for adoption, intended only to put appellant in the same place in their family which a child of their blood would have occupied, or, as we have already said, they were merely employing the petition for the purpose directed by the law; that is, to show that appellant was to "be adopted and treated in all respects as [their] own lawful child should be treated." Civ. Code, § 226.

Judgment affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 22, 1922.)

Appeal and error ¶110—Separate appeal from order granting new trial lies only after jury trial had as matter of right.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended in 1915, a separate appeal does not lie from order granting new trial after judgment on trial before the court without a jury, the amendment contemplating an appeal only from "an order granting a new trial in an action or proceeding tried by a jury where such trial by jury is a matter of right."

Action by John McGoldrick against the Visalia Midway Oil Company, a corporation. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

WORKS, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries, and was tried without a jury, with the result that judgment went for defendant. Upon motion by plaintiff the court made its order granting a new trial of the cause. From this order defendant appeals.

Section 963, Code of Civil Procedure, before it was amended in 1915, provided that an appeal might be taken from "an order granting or refusing a new trial." By the amendment of the year mentioned, the passage of the amendment long antedating the order now appealed from, this language was changed so as to permit an appeal only from "an order granting a new trial in an action or proceeding tried by a jury where such trial by jury is a matter of right." The Supreme Court, in reciting the history of this amendment and of others affecting appeals, has said:

"Separate appeals from orders granting new trials can be had only in those cases where a jury trial has been had as a matter of right." Estate of Waters, 181 Cal. 584, 185 Pac. 951.

HUGHES v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (Civ. 3856.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 30, 1922.)

1. Railroads ☞350(11)—Negligent speed of interurban electric train approaching street intersection held for jury.

Where a pedestrian, plaintiff's companion, was killed at a street intersection by an interurban electric locomotive with two freight cars attached, running down grade along a private right of way in the middle of a broad thoroughfare, and there was evidence that the train's speed was as low as 15 miles an hour, the fact that deceased was thrown 43 feet by the impact, and the train was stopped 255 feet from the point of impact, held not to show as a matter of law that the train was negligently operated.

2. Appeal and error ☞882(12)—Party not entitled to object to instructions given at his request or instructions covering same legal principles.

A party may not complain of instructions given to a jury at his request or to instructions which pertain to a legal question which he requested the judge to submit to the jury.

3. Appeal and error ☞882(12)—In two cases tried together, parties submitting requests, without indicating to which case they were applicable not entitled to object that requests were given in wrong case.

Where two cases conducted by the same attorneys were by stipulation tried together, and one resulted in a directed verdict, a party submitting requests without specifying to which case they were applicable, or indicating that, in the event of a directed verdict in one case, only stated instructions were desired, or without withdrawing requests on direction of verdict in one case, was not entitled to object that the substance of instructions requested in one case was given in the other.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Helen Hughes, a minor, by Florence Hughes, her guardian ad litem, against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred H. McAdoo and Wm. J. Carr, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and W. R. Millar, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action for the recovery of damages for personal injuries suffered by a child under five years of age, who sues by her guardian ad litem. Under stipulation the cause was tried together with an action for damages for the death of one Kate Johnston, an adult who lost her life in the same accident in which plaintiff in this cause was injured. The trial was by a jury. In their main circumstances the two causes of action were intimately related, as the plaintiff child was being led by the hand by the decedent when the accident occurred. The trial judge instructed the jury to render verdict in favor of defendant in the Johnston Case on account of the contributory negligence of the deceased, and that outcome of course followed. As a result of this instruction, then, the case of the minor was alone left to the actual deliberation of the jury, and a verdict was returned favorable to defendant in that action also. Both plaintiffs were represented by the same counsel, but no appeal was prosecuted from the judgment in the Johnston Case. Plaintiff minor, however, appeals from the judgment entered against her.

[1] Appellant contends that she was entitled to have the jury instructed that, as a matter of law, respondent was negligent in the operation of its interurban electric cars which were concerned in the accident resulting in her injuries, which instruction was refused by the trial court. As a basis for the discussion of this question appellant cites

Although "the question of negligence is ordinarily one to be determined by the jury, yet, where the facts are undisputed, and no inference but that of negligence can be drawn from them, the court may determine that negligence is shown as matter of law."

Appellant insists that the present case is within this rule, for the reason that the uncontradicted evidence shows that Miss Johnston, who was alone struck directly by the moving cars, was thrown at least 43 feet by the impact, and that the motorman in charge of the train could only, with all the braking power at his command, bring the cars to a stop at a distance of 255 feet from the point at which she was struck. From this it is argued that the evidence shows conclusively that the train was moving at an unsafe rate of speed, and Young v. Atlantic Ave. R. Co., 10 Misc. Rep. 541, 31 N. Y. Supp. 441, is cited as establishing the rule that courts will take judicial knowledge of the fact that "a trolley car" moving "at an ordinary safe rate of speed can be stopped, emergency or no emergency, in a much shorter space" than 102 feet, the distance which was of interest in that case. For various reasons the opinion cited can be of no value here. There the damage was caused by a single trolley car, apparently an ordinary street car. Here Miss Johnston was struck by an interurban freight train, composed of an electric motor, or locomotive, and two cars. There the trolley car was proceeding up a "very steep" grade. Here the train was running on a down grade. There it was shown by direct testimony that "the car was moving very rapidly." Here there was some testimony that the train was running at as low a rate of speed as 15 miles an hour. It is true that the present case is like the case cited in that the accident occurred at a street intersection in each. There the car was being operated, apparently, along an ordinary city street. Here, however, the train was proceeding down the middle of a broad thoroughfare, along which respondent had a private right of way, except across street intersections, in which ran its double tracks, with ties and rails, exposed "like a steam railroad in the open country," they being thus a prominent feature of the landscape. Under all these circumstances we cannot say that the train was proceeding at an unsafe rate of speed, or that the motorman in charge did not have his train under reasonable control as it approached the intersection at which occurred the tragedy out of which this litigation arose. The instruction was properly refused.

Following immediately upon the discussion of the question of which we have just made disposition, and as a preliminary to the consideration of the next point, it is to be noted that the motorman in charge of the train did not attempt to exercise his control over it by an application of his emergency brakes until within 35 feet of the place at which the accident occurred, his ordinary brakes being already "on" in order to keep the train "from increasing speed." This failure to apply the emergency brakes was due to the contributory negligence of Miss Johnston, which caused the trial judge to direct the jury to render a verdict for defendant in the case instituted to recover damages for her death. We need not recite the facts going to show that Miss Johnston was guilty of contributory negligence. It is enough to say that counsel for appellant, who were also counsel for plaintiff in the Johnston Case, do not question the propriety of the instruction which was based upon that negligence. They do, however, object to certain instructions which went to the jury, and which dealt with the acts of Miss Johnston as affecting the rights of appellant in the premises, the case of the latter being the only one left to the jury after the instruction directing the jury to find for defendant in the Johnston Case. The instructions to which objection is now made were several in number, but their general nature may be shown by a reference to the one of them which appellant evidently regards as among the most drastic and injurious of the lot. It is as follows:

"The railroad track is itself a warning of danger to any one of the age of discretion, and any such person in or about or seeking to cross a railroad track or tracks must give to himself or herself, if possible, an opportunity to know whether or not a car is approaching on any or either of such tracks, and must not only listen, but must also look carefully both before she crosses and as she crosses, and must see and heed that which, by the exercise of such care, can be seen and heard on said tracks, or any of them."

In her assault upon these various instructions appellant calls attention to the rule to the effect that the contributory negligence of Miss Johnston was not imputable to her, a rule which was recognized by the trial judge, as he instructed the jury according to its mandate. Appellant says that, after the giving of the instruction which disposed of the Johnston Case, there was left for the jury under this rule no question involving the law of contributory negligence. Respondent contends, however, that the questioned instructions are to be viewed as statements of rules of law bearing upon the duty of the motorman under the circumstances which confronted him, in view of the fact that Miss Johnston held appellant by the hand during the commission of the acts which, according to the instruction given by the trial judge, amounted to negligence on her part. We need not determine whether this view of respondent is correct.

Counsel for appellant, who were at the time counsel for plaintiff in the Johnston Case, requested the trial judge to give to the jury instructions covering the same questions of law as are embraced in the instruction above quoted and in the others to which appellant makes objection. One of the instructions thus requested was given by the judge with modifications which are immaterial to the point now under discussion. This instruction, as presented to the jury, read, the italics being ours:

"An interurban electric railway, such as the evidence shows the defendant to be, occupies a status somewhat between that of a steam railroad and an ordinary street railway. Whether the rules of caution resting upon a pedestrian about to cross the tracks of an interurban electric railroad are those applicable to the crossing of the tracks of a steam railroad or the tracks of a street railway depends upon the circumstances under which the interurban railroad is operated. Where it is operated under conditions substantially similar to those under which a steam railroad is usually operated then the same rules of caution apply in the case of one as the other. But where the conditions under which the interurban railway is operated approximate those under which a street railway is usually operated, then the rules of caution applicable to the latter obtain. Here the defendant's tracks run along a private right of way immediately between two parallel roadways which constitute a traveled thoroughfare in the city of Glendale. At the intersection of Park avenue and such thoroughfare, on each side of the thoroughfare, were stores. Foot and vehicle traffic passed over the tracks at Park avenue. Freight or work trains were at times run along defendant's tracks at this place. Passenger trains which traveled the tracks of the defendant at frequent intervals sometimes stopped on signal at Park avenue to take on passengers, and sometimes did not. Under such circumstances, a pedestrian crossing the tracks of the defendant at Park avenue is not to be held to that high amount of care which is required of him when crossing the tracks of an ordinary steam railroad running through the country, on which heavy trains of cars are moved at a high rate of speed and cannot be quickly stopped or controlled, but must exercise a greater amount of care than in crossing an ordinary street railway track. A pedestrian crossing the tracks at this point was chargeable with exercising such care as was reasonable under all the conditions and circumstances."

[2, 3] It is a well-established rule, finding expression in many cases, that one may not complain of instructions given to a jury at his request (Emerson v. County of Santa Clara, 40 Cal. 543), or to instructions given which pertain to a legal question which he himself has asked the trial judge to submit to the jury (38 Cyc. 1788, 1789). Under all the circumstances it is plain to us that this rule applies in the present instance. By their stipulation that the two cases might be tried together counsel subjected the case of appellant to all the vicissitudes which might attend the consideration by the jury of the Johnston Case, granting, which counsel must have believed to be true, that the latter case would get to the jury. In requesting instructions counsel for appellant could have saved appellant's right to object to the instructions now assailed by taking any one of at least three courses: (1) They could have specified their requested instructions as bearing respectively upon either appellant's case or the Johnston Case. If both cases had gone to the jury, that body could have applied the instructions accordingly. If the instructions had been so framed, also, the trial judge would have been charged, in directing a verdict in the Johnston Case, with the duty of refraining from giving to the jury all instructions requested as bearing alone on appellant's case, provided that as a matter of law they actually had no application to that case. (2) In requesting the various instructions counsel could have indicated that, in the event of a direction to find for defendant in the Johnston Case, they desired certain indicated instructions—that is, those in their judgment not applying to appellant's case—not to go to the jury at all. Considering the state of the evidence, counsel might well have anticipated such a termination of the Johnston Case. (3) When the jury were given the direction as to the Johnston Case, counsel might have arisen in their place and have withdrawn any or all of the instructions offered by them. This direction was given before the judge began the reading of what may be termed the instructions proper, including those given at appellant's request and those now assailed. Counsel having taken neither of these three courses, nor any other course which might operate as the equivalent of either of them, appellant may not now urge objection to any of the instructions now questioned by her.

Appellant contends that the instructions of the court as to proximate cause were confusing and erroneous "because to the jury they could only mean that the jury must find the negligence of defendant the sole and exclusive proximate cause to entitle plaintiff to recovery." We have examined the instructions thus attacked, and find no error in them, especially in view of the fact that appellant requested no instructions under which the jury might have determined that appellant was injured because of the concurring negligence of Miss Johnston and respondent.

HERR v. JOHNSON. (Civ. 2473.)

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 706(5)—Evidence held to warrant finding that truck driver attempted to unlawfully pass bicycle rider at intersection.

In an action for injuries received in the collision of an automobile truck with a bicycle, evidence held to warrant a finding that the truck driver attempted to unlawfully pass plaintiff on his bicycle at a street intersection.

2. Damages $\S$ 132(1)—\$3,000 held not excessive for fractured skull of 59 year old man.

Where plaintiff, who was 59 years of age, received a fracture of the skull, which resulted in some permanent injuries, in addition to other injuries, a verdict of $3,000 was not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by G. B. Herr against F. E. Johnson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Howe & Hibitt and O. F. Meldon, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Martin I. Welsh and Ray T. Coughlin, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. In this case a verdict was rendered in favor of the respondent for damages for personal injuries arising out of a collision of an auto truck driven by an employee of the appellant, with a bicycle ridden by the respondent upon Thirtieth street in the city of Sacramento.

On the evening of May 21, 1920, the respondent, a man 59 years of age, was traveling on his bicycle along the westerly side of said street in a southerly direction. At the same time the motor truck was moving on the same street in a like direction. When the respondent reached the intersection of Fourth avenue and said street, he turned at right angles toward the left, intending to proceed in an easterly direction. The driver of the truck approached and attempted to pass the respondent while the latter was traveling on the intersection of said street. If the respondent had continued to travel in a southerly direction, it is probable that the collision would not have occurred. But just as the respondent had commenced to turn to the left, the driver of the truck drove his machine against the bicycle in such a manner that the right fender of the truck struck the rear of the bicycle.

[1] The appellant insists that the driver of the truck was not trying to pass the respondent, but that the respondent for some unexplained reason suddenly turned his bicycle to the right and rode directly into the path of the truck. The actual collision, however, took place very close to the center of the street intersection. The jury was fully justified in concluding that the driver of the truck was attempting unlawfully to pass the respondent on a street intersection.

[2] The jury awarded a verdict in the sum of $3,000. The appellant claims that this sum is excessive, but in view of the extent of the respondent's injuries, we cannot concur in this view. In addition to other injuries, the skull of the respondent was fractured, and some permanent injuries seem to have resulted therefrom.

Other points made by the appellant do not require extended examination. The ruling of the court in admitting the shoes in evidence was proper.

We find no error in the record, and accordingly the judgment of the court is affirmed.

MILLER CO., INC., v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 3820.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 19, 1922.)

1. Justices of the peace $\S$ 138(10)—Allegations of petition for writ against appeal proceedings in superior court held to prevail over unofficial entry in justice docket.

Where petition for writ of prohibition against appeal proceedings in the superior court alleged that respondent had appealed from a justice court decision in favor of petitioner, and set forth a copy of the justice's docket showing an entry reciting, "June 16—Notice of exception to bond and requiring sureties to justify filed," but alleged that this notice was filed June 15, and that a cash deposit in lieu of bond was made June 21, held, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 978a, the docket entry was not paramount to the allegation, since under section 911 such entry as that referred to was not provided for and it is therefore not official, but merely the statement of an individual.

2. Prohibition $\S$ 20—Petition held not to adopt unofficial entry in justice's docket set forth as exhibit.

Petitioner prayed for writ of prohibition against proceedings upon appeal in the superior court, on the ground that appeal sureties had not justified within the time required under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 978a, after petitioner's exception to their sufficiency, and alleged that in the justice court the case was tried on a certain day and judgment rendered, etc., "all of which will more fully appear by a copy of the transcript of said justice's court * * * hereunto annexed" as an exhibit and "made a part hereof," held, upon demurrer to the petition, that the inclusion of the docket was not an adoption by the petitioner of an unofficial entry therein containing the date of petitioner's notice of exception to the sureties at variance with allegations in his petition.

Petition by the Miller Company, Incorporated, for a writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, and Hon. Charles S. Crail, Judge thereof. Upon filing of petition an alternative writ was issued. Upon general demurrer the case was then heard upon the question whether a peremptory writ should issue. Demurrer overruled, and writ granted.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

F. D. Macomber, of Santa Monica, and Fogel & Beman, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, J. Petitioner is plaintiff in an action pending before respondent superior court. That action originated in the justice court and was tried there, with the result that judgment went in favor of petitioner. The defendant in the action prosecuted an appeal to respondent superior court and petitioner made a motion to dismiss the appeal; the motion being denied. Petitioner contends that the motion should have been granted, and by its petition seeks to prohibit respondents from taking further proceedings in the action. Upon the filing of the petition an alternative writ of prohibition was issued and the matter is now before us upon the question whether a peremptory writ shall go forth. Respondents have interposed a general demurrer to the petition, and the question is therefore to be settled upon the face of the latter pleading.

The petition alleges that in due time after the filing of his notice of appeal and undertaking on appeal by the defendant in the action mentioned petitioner served and filed a notice that it excepted to the sureties on the undertaking, and required them to justify. It is averred that this notice was filed June 15, 1921. The next allegation is that the defendant in the action never gave petitioner notice of justification of the sureties on the undertaking, and never gave notice that a new undertaking had been filed, and "that on the 21st day of June, 1921, without any notice to plaintiff or its attorneys, defendant deposited" with the justice of the peace an amount in cash in lieu of undertaking. According to these allegations, then, it will be observed, the deposit of cash with the justice was made six days after the filing of the notice requiring a justification of the sureties on the undertaking. Petitioner contends that this situation is fatal to the appeal, as section 978a of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to appeals from justice courts, provides as to undertakings on appeal that—

"The adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking, and unless they or other sureties justify before the justice or judge within five days thereafter, upon notice to the adverse party, to the amounts stated in their affidavits, the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given."

[1] Respondents, in arguing the point made by petitioner, call our attention to the fact that a copy of the docket of the justice in the action is attached to the petition as an exhibit. On this copy appears the entry, under the year 1921:

"June 16—Notice of exception to bond and requiring sureties to justify filed."

If this statement is to control the allegation of the petition that the notice was filed June 15, the deposit of cash in lieu of undertaking was in time, for it will be remembered that the deposit was made June 21. Respondents insist that the entry in the docket is paramount to the allegation, but we think the contention cannot be sustained. Section 911, Code of Civil Procedure, requires every justice to keep a docket, but it also designates the entries to be made by him in the book, and such an entry as that made by the justice in the present instance is not among them. The act of the justice in making the entry was not therefore an official act. It could have no more effect than the voluntary statement, not made under oath, of an ordinary private individual. In truth, that in reality is all it was. We are convinced that the allegation of the pleading that the notice was filed on June 15 is uncontradicted and conclusive, and that the deposit of cash in lieu of undertaking was one day too late. The appeal should have been dismissed by respondents.

[2] Before concluding we should remark that the inclusion of the copy of the docket of the justice as an exhibit to the petition was not brought about in such a manner as to amount to an adoption by petitioner of the assertion contained in it to the effect that the notice was filed June 16. The exhibit was imported by means of an allegation to the effect that the cause was tried by the justice on a certain day, and that judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff on the next day for certain damages, interest, and costs, "all of which will more fully appear by a copy of the transcript of said justice's court as certified to the superior court, and hereunto annexed and marked" as an exhibit "and made a part hereof."

The demurrer is overruled, and a peremptory writ of prohibition will issue as prayed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

Albert Sichofsky was convicted of grand larceny, and from the conviction, and overruling of motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, he appeals. Affirmed.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Lorrin Andrews, of Los Angeles, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. [1] In an indictment containing four counts defendant was charged: In the first count, with the larceny of $3,000, the property of O. M. Justice; in the second, with the embezzlement of the same $3,000; in the third, with the larceny of $4,500, the property of S. Levin; and, in the fourth, with the embezzlement of the same $4,500. He was acquitted of the embezzlement charges and was convicted of the two larceny charges. A separate judgment was entered upon each conviction. From those judgments, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he now appeals. He also appeals from an order denying his motion in arrest of judgment, but, as that order is not appealable, the appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

It was the theory of the prosecution that, though defendant obtained possession of the moneys with the consent of the owners, their consent was obtained through deceit practiced by defendant, and that therefore the larceny was perpetrated by means of fraud and trickery. The case as disclosed by the witnesses for the people is, briefly, as follows: Defendant, posing as a Polish count who had but recently arrived in Los Angeles from the republic of Mexico, represented to the complaining witnesses, Levin and Justice, both of whom were physicians practicing their profession in the city of Los Angeles, that he had some friends in Mexico who held a lease on a parcel of valuable oil property at Huntington Beach; that his Mexican friends wanted to dispose of their lease; that it could be obtained through a Mexican who lived upon the land, and who would execute the necessary documents; that defendant's friends in Mexico wanted him to sell the lease for them; that it could be purchased for $7,500, but that, if the complaining witnesses wished to buy it, they must act quickly. It finally was agreed that Dr. Levin would contribute $4,500 toward the purchase of the lease, and that Dr. Justice, the other complaining witness, would contribute the balance of the purchase price

--$3,000. Defendant told Drs. Levin and Justice that they ought to give him the $7,500 in cash, to be paid by him to his Mexican friends, as money would impress the Mexicans, and there were many persons trying to buy the lease. It was agreed that the purchase money would be given to defendant as the agent of the prosecuting witnesses, and also as the representative of defendant's Mexican friends. As the result of many conversations, extending over a period of several days, defendant and the two doctors met, on the evening of November 15, 1920, at Dr. Levin's office in Los Angeles, where, after some preliminary conversation, Dr. Justice took from his pocket and handed to defendant $3,000 in currency, and Dr. Levin took from his safe and delivered to defendant $4,500 in currency. Defendant put the two amounts in his inside coat pocket, and agreed with his two unsuspecting victims that he would procure the lease, signed by the Mexican who lived upon the property, that he would conduct the Mexican and his wife to a bank at Huntington Beach, that he would deposit the money in that bank, taking a receipt therefor, and that the money should remain in escrow with the bank until such time as the title could be examined by an abstract company. Shortly after the moneys were intrusted to him, defendant fled the state. He later was arrested and brought back. There are many other circumstances which need not be related tending to show that defendant was not acting in good faith. Needless to say, the gullible victims of the pseudo count's winning ways have seen neither the lease nor the money which they so guilelessly intrusted to their magnetic friend.

Appellant contends: (1) That the state courts, for reasons presently to be stated, are without jurisdiction of his person; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict; (3) that, if any offense was committed, it was embezzlement, not larceny; (4) that, if the crime of larceny was committed, there was but one larcenous taking, not two, and that therefore there should have been but one verdict of guilty and but one judgment of conviction; (5) that defendant's right of cross-examination was unduly curtailed.

The facts upon which appellant bases his contention that the court was without jurisdiction to try him are as follows: He was arraigned in the superior court for Los Angeles county on December 6, 1920. His trial in that court was commenced on April 7, 1921, and continued until April 13, 1921, on which date he was convicted on the larceny charges. He is a citizen of Poland, and, prior to his trial in the state court, had been indicted by the federal grand jury, charged with entering the United States from the republic of Mexico without having a duly viséed passport. See Ex parte Sichofsky, 273 Fed. 694. To that charge he entered a plea of guilty in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, and on March 22, 1921, was sentenced by that court to confinement in the federal penitentiary at McNeil's Island for the term of three years. The United States District Court then made an order staying execution of its sentence for a period of 15 days and directing the United States marshal to take Sichofsky to the court room of the superior court for Los Angeles county at such times as his presence in the case there pending against him should be required, and to keep him in custody for the purposes stated in the order. Pursuant to that order appellant was taken by the United States marshal to the superior court for Los Angeles county, and was there tried, convicted, and sentenced.

[2] There is no merit in the claim that the court a quo did not acquire jurisdiction of appellant's person. It probably is true, as appellant contends, that, after the sentence by the federal court, and until the end of his term and discharge, no state court could assume control over his body without the consent of the United States (Ponzi v. Fessenden, 257 U. S. —, 42 Sup. Ct. 309, 66 L. Ed. —); but there is no force in the contention that in this case the United States Attorney General, and he only, could give such consent on behalf of the United States. Here execution of the sentence imposed by the United States District Court had not commenced when that court ordered a stay of execution and directed that Sichofsky be taken to the state court at such times as his presence there should be required in the case there pending against him. As was said by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals on Sichofsky's appeal from an order discharging the writ of habeas corpus, "there was no point of time, therefore, at which the jurisdiction of the appellant was lost" by the United States District Court. Sichofsky v. United States, 277 Fed. 762. This being so, the United States District Court was the sole agency possessing authority to give consent, on behalf of the United States, to the assumption by the state court of control of the body of appellant. When, therefore, appellant was produced in the state court, and was personally present there, with full opportunity to make his defense, jurisdiction of his person was had by the superior court exactly as if he had been brought before that court by its own officer. Ponzi v. Fessenden, supra.

[3] The evidence was amply sufficient to sustain the verdict. The testimony indicates that, from the beginning, appellant had undertaken to obtain the money from Levin and Justice, ostensibly to use in paying for the purchase of the lease, but really to convert all of it to his own use. The theory of the prosecution that appellant, by trickery and deceit, fraudulently caused the prosecuting witnesses to believe that they were parting with the possession of their moneys for a valuable oil lease, to be purchased with the moneys which they credulously intrusted to appellant, is fully sustained by the evidence, which shows a bald scheme to deceive two unsuspecting physicians by drawing them into the snare set for them.

[4] That the evidence shows this to be a case, not of larceny, but of embezzlement, is the next point made by appellant. The circumstances all show that neither of the complaining witnesses intended to part with the ownership of the money at the time when it was delivered to appellant. At the time when the money was delivered each complaining witness intended that appellant should receive it for him, and that it should be carried by appellant to the bank at Huntington Beach, and there be deposited in escrow until such time as the abstract company should certify to the title to the lease, when, if the title should be found to be in appellant's supposed Mexican friends, it was to be paid to the latter as the purchase price of the lease. Had all this been done as intended, the moneys delivered to appellant would have remained in law the properties of the complaining witnesses, respectively, until final delivery to the supposed owners of the lease. It follows, therefore, that it was the intention of each complaining witness that the title to the money delivered by him to appellant should remain in such complaining witness, and that, as a consequence, it was subject to larceny as his property, and that the crime could not be that of obtaining money by false pretenses. People v. Tomlinson, 102 Cal. 23, 36 Pac. 506. Not only did the title not pass, but appellant's possession of the money was not received honestly. Had he received the possession honestly, the offense would have been embezzlement, not larceny. People v. Tomlinson, supra. But, as it is, the possession of the money of each complaining witness was obtained through fraud and deceit. It therefore follows that its fraudulent appropriation by appellant to his own use, he having had from the beginning the intention to obtain it for that purpose, constituted, in law, an act of larceny. People v. Delbos, 146 Cal. 734, 81 Pac. 131; People v. Schwartz, 43 Cal. App. 697, 185 Pac. 686. As was said in People v. Tomlinson, supra, there must often be, on the facts, a very narrow margin between cases of larceny and embezzlement, because the character of the crime depends upon the secret intention of the parties, which is often difficult to ascertain; but, so far as the law is concerned, the principles upon which the question of guilt or innocence is to be determined are plain.

[5, 6] Where one honestly receives the possession of goods upon a trust, and, after receiving them, fraudulently converts them to his own use, it is a case of embezzlement. But, where the possession has been obtained through trickery or deceit, with the intent at the time the defendant receives the goods to convert them to his own use, and the owner of the goods parts merely with the possession, and not with the title, the offense is larceny. It was a question for the jury to decide whether appellant obtained possession of the money fraudulently, with the intent at the time he received it to convert it to his own use, and whether the complaining witnesses intended to part with the ownership at the time of delivery. By its verdict the jury has decided these matters adversely to appellant's contention; and, as there is ample evidence to sustain the jury's conclusion, we may not disturb it.

[7] It next is contended that, if appellant was guilty of larceny, there was but one larcenous taking, notwithstanding $3,000 was received by defendant from one complaining witness and $4,500 from the other. The rule generally adopted is that, where several articles are stolen at the same time and from one place, the offense may be charged as one crime and in a single count, even though the ownership is in different persons. Whether in such cases the person stealing the property of different owners at the same time and place may be prosecuted and punished as for separate and distinct offenses is a question upon which the authorities are in conflict. The author of the note to Hughes v. Commonwealth, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723, says that the weight of authority holds that the person stealing from different owners at the same time may be punished for separate and distinct offenses. However, we do not find it necessary to pass upon this question. So far as our researches have gone, the cases wherein it has been held that there is but one larcenous taking and but one crime where several articles belonging to different owners are stolen at the same time and place are all cases where the thief took the articles without the owner's consent. The reason for the rule that there is but one crime where articles belonging to different owners are stolen at the same time and place is that in such cases there is but one act of taking; and, if the caption constitutes but a single act, there is but one offense. 17 R. C. L. p. 54. Where articles stolen from different owners are located at different places, as, for example, where they are located in different rooms of the same house, each asportation with intent to steal constitutes a different offense, although the thefts may all have been committed in rapid succession and in pursuance of a formed design to steal. State v. Maggard, 160 Mo. 469, 61 S. W. 184, 83 Am. St. Rep. 484; State v. Emery, 68 Vt. 109, 34 Atl. 432, 54 Am. St. Rep. 878. See, also, Hudson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 151, 35 Am. Rep. 732. On the same principle it is held that, where the thief takes articles from off the persons of different owners, the several captions do not constitute a single act, even though they be committed at practically the same time, as, for example, where the thief holds up a stage coach and robs the several passengers. In re Allison, 13 Colo. 525, 22 Pac. 820, 10 L. R. A. 790, 16 Am. St. Rep. 224; State v. Bynum, 117 N. C. 752, 23 S. E. 219. In the Allison Case the Colorado court is careful to distinguish between the felonious taking of articles from the stage and the felonious taking from the person of each of the several passengers traveling on the stage. In that case the court employed this language:

"Relator was not tried for robbing the stage; each of the indictments charged him with robbing a different individual passenger upon the stage. And no doubt can be entertained but that these various robberies were distinct offenses, although committed at the same place and in rapid succession. They constituted separate acts."

[8] A fortiori, the takings from several owners do not constitute a single act where, as in the instant case, the larceny is perpetrated by means of fraud and deceit practiced upon each owner. In a case such as this, a case where each of the complaining witnesses voluntarily delivered his money to the defendant with the understanding that it should be used by the latter in accordance with the representations which he previously had made to each owner, it is necessary, in order to make the act of taking larcenous, that the defendant, by his previous fraudulent deceptions, should have caused each owner to intend to part with the possession of his property, and not with the title thereto. The previous fraudulent representations cannot be separated from the actual captions and asportations. The misrepresentations give color to the acts of taking, and determine their larcenous character. In this case the representations which were calculated to deceive and ensnare these two physicians extended over a period of several days. They were not always made in the presence of both prosecuting witnesses. Sometimes the fraudulent representations were made to Dr. Levin without the presence of Dr. Justice, and sometimes they were to Dr. Justice without the presence of Dr. Levin; so that, when each of these gentlemen handed his money to appellant, the latter's previous conduct, the conduct which gave color to his captions and asportations and to his subsequent felonious conversions, and determined their character to be larcenous, was made up of separate and distinct representations. We hold, therefore, that the taking and conversion of each sum of money was a separate and distinct transaction, and that there were two larcenies.

[9] There is no merit in appellant's claim that he was unduly restricted in his cross-examination of the people's witnesses. His examination of these witnesses proceeded at great length. It covers a very great number of pages of the record on this appeal. Much of it is trivial and frivolous. In the exercise of that discretion with which it is vested, the trial court very properly sought to confine the examination to such questions as would tend, in at least some degree, to throw light upon the matters under investigation, and to see that the trial was not needlessly prolonged by useless cross-examination. Though not always successful in these efforts, its laudable endeavor to avoid a useless prolongation of the trial by sustaining objections to questions that could have aduced naught but frivolous trivialities was not an abuse of sound discretion. While the right of cross-examination, where it is being used in good faith for the purpose of eliciting the truth from a reluctant, evasive, or interested witness, should be allowed with great liberality, the court may always restrain the examination whenever it becomes apparent that time is being needlessly consumed by a tedious or frivolous questioning of the witnesses.

The appeal from the order denying the motion in arrest of judgment is dismissed. The judgments and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. THOMAS. (Cr. 634.)

1. Indictment and Information $\S$ 91(3)—Information charging that manslaughter was committed "feloniously" held sufficient.

An information, charging that manslaughter was committed willfully, unlawfully, and "feloniously," was sufficient, since "feloniously" means of, or pertaining to or having, the quality of felony.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Felonious—Feloniously.]

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Charging that manslaughter was committed feloniously held harmless.

Though an information charging that manslaughter was committed feloniously might have been erroneous, it was not such error as to cause reversal, in view of Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½.

3. Homicide $\S$ 234(1)—Evidence held sufficient to identify accused.

In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter evidence held sufficient to identify accused as the one who committed the crime.

4. Homicide $\S$ 34—Involuntary manslaughter is of two kinds.

Involuntary manslaughter consists either of the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection.

5. Homicide — 163(1)—Good reputation of accused for peace and quiet not involved, where act charged was involuntary.

Where accused was charged with involuntary manslaughter, his good reputation for peace and quiet was not involved, and evidence on that point was inadmissible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

H. E. Thomas was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Henry P. Andrews, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. The appellant was convicted of the crime of manslaughter committed in the city of Sacramento on the evening of December 21, 1921. It is charged in the information that he "willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously" committed the act.

[1] The appellant insists that, as the offense was feloniously committed, it must therefore have been malicious. Since manslaughter is an unlawful killing without malice, he argues that the information does not charge that offense. But manslaughter is clearly a felony, and to charge that the crime was "felonious" is no more than to charge that it constituted manslaughter. One of the approved definitions of the word "felonious" is given by Merriam's Webster as follows: "Felonious—Of, or pertaining to or having the quality of felony."

In the ordinary information for murder, the crime is charged as committed "feloniously, and with premeditation and malice aforethought." It is universally held that an information so charging will justify a conviction of the crime of manslaughter. This is based on the assumption that the lesser crime is included within the greater. In this case we have an information which clearly charges all the elements of manslaughter; and the appellant insists that it charges even more. So far as it exceeds the necessary requirements for manslaughter, it merely charges, to that extent, the acts necessary to constitute the crime of murder. If, therefore, an information that charges the offense as committed with malice aforethought will sustain a conviction of manslaughter, it follows that an information which charges all the elements of manslaughter and at least some of the elements of murder, will support a conviction of the lesser crime. It is held in People v. Pearne, 118 Cal. 155, 50 Pac. 376, that the addition of more elements in charging the crime makes it none the less a crime.

[2] Moreover, if a more strict interpretation of the word "felonious" could be justified, it is sufficient to say that the appellant was not misled by the use of the word, and that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution should be invoked.

There is no pretense that the prosecution has omitted from the information any element necessary to charge the crime of manslaughter. The information is sufficient.

[3] The principal point urged in behalf of a reversal is the lack of sufficient evidence to identify the appellant as the person who committed the crime. He is charged with having run over and killed a human being while driving his auto along the streets of Sacramento on a dark and very stormy night. The evidence shows without conflict that the car which struck the deceased was driven north from L street along Sixth toward J, and that the accident happened while the car was moving at a speed of from 8 to 15 miles per hour at the north margin of Sixth and on the wrong side thereof. The lights of the car were very dim, and a very heavy rain so obscured the vision through the wind shield that the driver could only imperfectly see the roadway.

The driver did not stop to render any assistance, but kept on his way toward the north. Earl Duchow was the chief witness for the people. Without his prompt and efficient action it seems probable that the driver would have escaped. Mr. Duchow immediately impounded an auto standing at the curb and pursued the fleeing car. He states that at no time did it pass out of his sight, and that when about a block from the scene of the accident the driver turned off his lights, and thence drove in the dark. The witness followed the car in a devious course along Sixth to H, thence to Eighth or Ninth, thence north to about C, then east to Eleventh, thence south to about E, at which point the witness was enabled to recognize the number of the fleeing car. It was discovered later the same evening that this was the number of appellant's car, and guided by this, he was arrested and charged with the offense of which he was later convicted. There is no dispute that appellant's car is the one that struck the deceased. Appellant himself admits this, and in so doing he virtually admits the whole case. This admission was made in the course of the trial and in the following words:

"District Attorney: The defense will stipulate that the number of the car which struck the deceased was also the number of the car registered in the name of the defendant.

"Mr. Andrews. We admit that, your honor."

58 Cal. App. 115

VAN WAGENER v. MacFARLAND et al.
(Civ. 3954.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 16, 1922.)

[4] But even if this admission was inadvertent or the record erroneous and the error not heretofore discovered, still the evidence of the identity of the appellant is abundant. His car was a Ford delivery truck, and therefore much easier to follow and identify than a touring car. When arrested that evening he denied that he had been at any time that night in the vicinity of Sixth and K. On the trial he admitted that he drove up Sixth from L to I that evening. He admitted going northward and eastward for some blocks, and then, without stopping to execute any mission, he turned about and drove into the southern part of the city, where his garage is located. Apparently he did not know that he was pursued or his number ascertained until the moment of his arrest. He admits that the night was dark, that his lights were burning very low, owing to the slow motion of the car, and that the rain was so heavy that he "couldn't see anything." He asserts that he felt no impact with any object, that he does not know whether or not he was on the wrong side of the street, and that he did not turn off his lights. That the appellant committed the crime of involuntary manslaughter seems to admit of no question.

"Involuntary manslaughter is of two kinds:

"1. In the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony; and

"2. In the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection."

Appellant was driving his car on the wrong side of a prominent street intersection in a large city at one of the busiest hours of the evening, and practically unable to see where he was going. The acts of the appellant resulting in the death of the deceased were committed without due caution and circumspection.

[5] The court refused to hear evidence of the good reputation of the appellant for peace and quiet. This was proper. People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 137; People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 214; People v. Cowgill, 93 Cal. 596, 29 Pac. 228. The act charged was involuntary, and therefore involved no element of peace or quiet. The appellant was permitted to show that he was a careful driver.

The objection to the form of the judgment is untenable. The judgment conforms strictly to the requirements of the statute. Even if the form of the judgment were open to cavil, the only result would be that the case would be remanded for a further sentence.

The judgment and order denying appellant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

1. Schools and school districts $\Leftarrow$ 22—Act declaring school districts which have existed for five years to be duly incorporated held retrospective.

St. 1905, p. 243, providing that school districts acting as such for a period of five years under the laws of this state are declared to be duly incorporated, is retrospective in its effect, and affords no aid to school districts organized after its passage.

2. Schools and school districts $\Leftarrow$ 36—County board held to have authority to annex territory within city of sixth class to school district outside of city.

Under Pol. Code, § 1576, providing that every incorporated town, except towns of the sixth class, shall constitute a separate school district, the county board of supervisors has the power to annex the territory within a city of the sixth class to the territory outside of the city for school purposes only.

3. Schools and school districts $\Leftarrow$ 28—Irregularly organized district held to have a de facto existence.

Where a city of the sixth class was carved out of a school district, but no separate school district was maintained, trustees were elected jointly by the residents of the city and those of the remaining portion of the district, the schools were maintained as before the incorporation of the city, and all the residents of the district acquiesced, such district had a de facto existence.

4. Schools and school districts $\Leftarrow$ 24(2)—Regularity of proceedings creating school district cannot be attacked by individual.

The regularity of the proceedings by which a district was created can be questioned only by the state, and cannot be attacked by an individual, whether the attack is made in defense of a tax levied to pay existing bonded indebtedness, or whether it be by injunction to prevent the issuance of bonds after an election has been held within the territory affected.

5. Certiorari $\Leftarrow$ 28(3)—Lies to annul irregular proceedings creating school district.

Where a school district has been created by irregular proceedings before a de facto character has attached, certiorari will lie at the instance of a citizen to secure the annulment of the proceedings as being taken in excess of jurisdiction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County;
H. A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by J. H. Van Wagener against J. B. MacFarland and others, as Supervisors of the County of Kern, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sherwood Green, of Madera, for appellant. J. R. Dorsey and R. B. Lambert, both of Bakersfield, and M. G. Gallaher, of Fresno, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff brought this action to secure an injunction restraining the defendants from issuing and causing to be sold bonds in the amount of $360,000 of the Conley school district, county of Kern. The relief prayed for was denied. Plaintiff has appealed. The questions involved arise upon the judgment roll.

The regularity and manner in which the bond election was conducted are not claimed to have been invalid. The whole contention advanced by appellant concerns the matter of the organization of the Conley school district, particularly as to portions which it insisted were not regularly annexed thereto. Prior to November, 1910, Conley school district was composed in part of an unincorporated town called "Moron." The latter, in the month mentioned, after proceedings regularly had, was incorporated as a city of the sixth class under the name of "Taft." In February, 1920, the board of supervisors of Kern county passed a resolution purporting to annex to Conley school district the territory within a district called "Signa," which latter had been duly formed in November, 1919, but had conducted no schools up to the time of the annexation resolution. From the date of the incorporation of the city of Taft until the commencement of this action no separate school organization was caused to be made within the municipality, but the inhabitants of that territory continued to regard themselves as still being within Conley school district. Schools were conducted by that district, trustees were elected generally, some from within the city of Taft and some from the outlying territory. The school organization of the Conley district was not disturbed in any manner whatsoever by reason of the incorporation proceedings. (However, the board of supervisors in September, 1911, upon recommendation of the county school superintendent, made a resolution which in terms directed that the territory within the city of Taft be annexed to Conley school district.) In like manner, after the attempted annexation of the Signa school district, the inhabitants of that district acquiesced in the order of annexation, as did the remainder of Conley school district. Plaintiff expressly alleged in his petition:

"That since the respective orders of the board of supervisors of Kern county in respect to the annexation of the territory in the city of Taft and of the territory in Signa school district to Conley school district, the territory within said city of Taft and within Signa school district, as incorporated as aforesaid, has at all times been regarded and treated by the school board of said Conley school district and by the taxing officers of said Kern county, and by the public generally, as constituting portions of said school district and the children therein have attended the school of said school district."

Appellant questions the validity of the order of annexation of the Signa district for lack of compliance with statutory formalities. He also claims that the board of supervisors in no event had authority to annex the territory of a municipality to a school district made up of unincorporated territory—this because of the provisions of section 1576, Political Code, as the same existed at the times material to the controversy, and which provided that—

"Every city or incorporated town, * * * unless subdivided by the legislative authority thereof, shall constitute a separate school district. * * *"

Respondents concede that there were irregularities in the attempted annexation of the Signa school district, and that the authority of the supervisors to annex territory within the municipality of Taft to the Conley school district may be subject to question. They look largely to certain curative acts of the Legislature as validating the attempted annexation proceedings. The case will be considered, therefore, with the question as to the irregularity of the two annexation proceedings as admitted.

[1] Attention is first called to an act of the Legislature passed in the year 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 243), which provides that school districts, acting as such for a period of five years under the laws of the state, are "declared" to be duly incorporated. An examination of this act leads to the conclusion that it was retrospective only in its effect. It was adopted prior to any of the proceedings referred to in this case; hence affords no aid to respondents. The second act is one of 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 106), which provides in part as follows:

"Where the board of supervisors of any county have purported to establish a school district of any kind or class situated within such county and such district has acted as a school district for a period of one year previous to the taking effect of this act, all acts and proceedings taken * * * are * * * legalized, validated and declared sufficient."

This act was passed before the annexation of the "Signa" territory, but after the incorporation of the city of Taft and the making of the alleged order annexing the municipality to Conley school district. Appellant argues that this act has no reference to annexation proceedings, but relates wholly to the establishment of new districts. It has been held that curative acts are remedial in their nature, and that they will not be construed within the narrow limits of the letter of the law, but rather be given liberal effect to promote the general object sought to be accomplished. Kramm v. Bogue et al., 127 Cal. 122, 59 Pac. 394. The argument to the last point is one which nevertheless suggests room for debate, but in view of what is hereinafter stated it will be unnecessary to announce a definite decision upon that point. There are two further remedial statutes, both passed by the Legislature in 1921, one of which expressly validates defective proceedings for the change of boundaries of a school district, the second of which validates proceedings for the establishment of such districts, each containing the proviso that the district affected shall have acted as such for a period of one year previous to the taking effect of the law. These acts became effective on July 29, 1921. They are both found on page 457 of the Statutes of 1921. Another curative act (Stats. 1921, p. 456) was intended to validate bonds of school districts where the proceedings resulting or to result in the issuance of such bonds are faulty in any particular. It is not denied by appellant in his reply that the curative act relating to cases where boundaries of a school district have been changed would have the effect of validating the annexation of the "Signa" territory; hence no further consideration need be given to that question.

[2] Appellant insists, however, that as to the alleged annexation of territory within the city of Taft to the Conley school district, the board of supervisors was without any jurisdiction whatsoever; hence that their action in that regard was not a matter attended by irregularity merely, which curative acts might make good, but that it was wholly void. Under provisions of section 1576, Political Code, the board of supervisors of Kern county possessed the power to annex the remainder of the school district outside of the corporate limits of Taft to the city district for school purposes; in other words, we have a situation where precisely the same territory might have been properly included within the same school district and governed in precisely the same way by a board of school trustees, with the exception only that the district would bear the name of "Taft" instead of "Conley." The law, as it related to the government of schools embracing territory comprised within municipal limits of cities of the sixth class, at the times here concerned was different than that where the city was of higher grade in point of classification.

"Under the code system the city territory, with its inhabitants, constitutes a mere 'school district' * * * and hence is a corporate body or quasi municipality, distinct from the municipal corporation or city, and in no way different from the country district in nature or function." Board of Education v. Board of Trustees, 129 Cal. 599, 62 Pac. 173.

The court there was referring to cities of the sixth class, and called attention to the fact that as to other classes of cities the law was different, and that as to the latter there were city boards of education, which constituted a department of the general city government.

[3] It will be remembered that from and after the incorporation of the city of Taft as a city of the sixth class no separate school district organization was attempted to be maintained. The school trustees for the Conley district were elected jointly by the inhabitants of the city of Taft and those resident in the remaining portion of the district named. The schools continued to be maintained as before the incorporation proceedings were had, and full acquiescence was made, so far as appeared, by all of the inhabitants until this action was brought on December 21, 1921. Hence, if in no better right, the district has at all these times had a de facto existence.

[4] The proposition that the regularity of the proceedings by which a public corporation of a municipal character has been called into existence cannot be questioned at the suit of an individual citizen or taxpayer is too well settled to admit now of any debate. The reason upon which this holding is founded is far-reaching and admits of no exception. In theory, public corporations of any character whatsoever, exercising governmental functions, do so by reason of a delegation to them of a part of the sovereign power of the state. Where they are claiming to act and are actually functioning without having complied with the necessary prerequisites, they are usurping franchise rights as against paramount authority, to complain of which it lies only within the right of the state itself. The attack by the individual is unauthorized, whether it is made in defense of a tax levied to pay existing bonded indebtedness, or whether it be by injunction to prevent the issuance of bonds after an election has been held within the territory affected, authorizing such securities to be issued.

[5] It may be conceded that, upon the attempted establishment by irregular proceedings of such a corporation and before a de facto character has attached, certiorari will lie at the instance of a citizen or taxpayer to secure the annulment of such proceedings, as being taken in excess of jurisdiction, but we have here no such case. On the general subject that the organization of municipal corporations is immune from attack by an individual or in a collateral way, reference may be made to Coe v. City of Los Angeles, 42 Cal. App. Rep. 479, 183 Pac. 822, where a number of California decisions are cited, and to that list can be added Coler et al. v. Dwight School Township, 3 N. D. 249, 55 N. W. 587, 28 L. R. A. 649; People ex rel. Scraf-ford v. Board of Supervisors, 41 Mich. 647, 2 N. W. 904; People ex rel. Quisenberry v. Ellis, 253 Ill. 369, 97 N. E. 697, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 589; Blackwell v. Newkirk, 31 Okl. 304, 121 Pac. 260, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 441; Kuhn v. City of Port Townsend, 12 Wash. 605, 41 Pac. 923, 29 L. R. A. 445, 50 Am. St. Rep. 911; Arapahoe Village v. Albee, 24 Neb. 242, 38 N. W. 737, 8 Am. St. Rep. 202; State v. Bailey, 106 Minn. 138, 118 N. W. 676, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, 130 Am. St. Rep. 592, 16 Ann. Cas. 338; Topeka v. Dwyer, 70 Kan. 244, 78 Pac. 417, 3 Ann. Cas. 239; People v. Ellis, 253 Ill. 369, 97 N. E. 697, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 589.

In some cases it has even been held that the state itself, by long recognition of a de facto municipal organization, may be estopped from attacking the regularity of the proceedings by which it was formed. People ex rel. Attorney General v. Alturas County, 6 Idaho, 418, 55 Pac. 1067; State ex rel. Young v. Harris, 102 Minn. 340, 113 N. W. 887, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533, 12 Ann. Cas. 260. In the case of Hamilton v. County of San Diego, 108 Cal. 273, 41 Pac. 305, the court sustained the acts of a school district having a de facto existence only, and in the course of the discussion laid emphasis upon the fact that the de jure district, to wit, municipality, within the limits of which the de facto district was situated, had "abdicated its functions, at least not attempting to discharge them within those limits." And the court went on to say:

"There was acquiescence not merely by the San Diego school district but by the county and state in the assumption of such corporate prerogatives by the new district; the county officers levied and collected taxes in its behalf, and there was apportioned to it, and it expended school moneys of both the county and state in like manner as other school districts in the county."

The plaintiff there was denied the right to maintain an action to recover back taxes paid to the de facto district. There is a close analogy between plaintiff's position and that of a litigant before a de facto judge. It is clearly established that the parties affected by the acts of such an officer cannot question their validity or object to the proceedings. As was said in Mayor and City Council of Nashville v. Thompson, 80 Tenn. (12 Lea) 344:

"He [the de facto judge] may be removed from office and his powers terminated by proper proceedings but until that is done his acts are binding. * * * The jurisdiction and authority of an officer de facto, although he may be ineligible to the office, cannot be questioned or inquired into in this manner, and * * * his authority is complete, and his official acts valid and binding until he is removed in the manner prescribed by law."

And also in the Matter of Danford, 157 Cal. 425, 108 Pac. 322, where the court said:

"The fact, if it had been a fact, that the judge presiding at the trial was an alien and therefore ineligible, made him none the less a de facto officer. His right to hold the office could be questioned only in proceedings regularly instituted for that purpose. It could not be attacked collaterally by motion to set aside his official acts. People v. Sassovich, 29 Cal. 480; People v. Hecht, 105 Cal. 621."

The reason is found in the rule of public policy which is as fully applicable where a public agency of governmental nature like a school district is concerned as where the proceedings of a judicial tribunal are in question. It follows as a necessary conclusion that the bonds referred to may be legally issued, and that when sold they will represent binding obligations against all of the property of the de facto district. Other questions presented in the briefs of counsel all turn upon the decision of the propositions already discussed, and require no separate consideration.

GALUSHA v. MESERVE et al. (Civ. 3899.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 19, 1922. Rehearing Denied July 14, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1922.)

1. Time $\S$ 9(4)—Publication of first notice on October 6th for sale on December 1st held sufficient under deed requiring publication once a week for eight weeks.

Where the trustee, under a trust deed requiring notice of sale to be published once a week for eight weeks, published the first notice on October 6th for a sale on December 1st, such publication was sufficient, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 12, and Civ. Code, $\S$ 10, declaring that, in computing time by days, the first day is to be excluded and the last day included.

2. Corporations $\S$ 383—Recitals in first published notice of sale with corporate seal affixed held to imply authority of board of directors.

If corporate action by the board of directors of a corporation trustee was necessary to authorize a sale under a deed of trust, such action may be implied by recitals in the first published notice of sale with the corporate seal attached.

3. Corporations $\S$ 384—Postponement of sale under deed of trust by a corporation trustee held a routine matter, not required to be attested by corporate seal.

Where a sale by a corporation trustee under a deed of trust was authorized by the board of directors, the postponement of the sale was a routine matter, and did not have to be attested in writing with the corporate seal attached.

4. Mortgages ⚡369(2)—Validity of trustee's sale cannot be attacked on ground that the debtor was not allowed further time to pay debt.

That the debtor, under a deed of trust authorizing a sale of the property upon default in the payment of the debt, informed the trustee at the time of the sale that he was making arrangements to obtain money with which to pay the debt did not obligate the trustee to grant a postponement of the sale, nor could the debtor attack the validity of the sale because he was not allowed further time in which to pay the debt.

5. Mortgages ⚡335—Trust deed held admissible in action to set aside sale.

In an action by a debtor to set aside a trustee's sale under a trust deed authorizing a sale upon default in payment of the debt, the trust deed was admissible though the creditor did not file in the recorder's office a notice of election to sell the property in satisfaction of the debt, since the instrument was made before the amendment of 1917 to Civ. Code, § 2924, became effective.

6. Mortgages ⚡335—Notice to debtor under trust deed that interest would be due at a certain time did not waive right to declare principal and interest due upon default in payment of interest.

Where a trust deed provided that the creditor might declare both principal and interest due and payable upon default in payment of the interest, the giving of notice to the debtor by the trustee that interest would be due and payable at a certain time did not waive such right.

7. Appeal and error ⚡673(2)—Objection that debtor under trust deed was under protection of moratorium act at time of sale is without merit where no reference was made to any act.

An objection by a debtor under a trust deed given to secure a debt that the sale thereunder was invalid because he was within the protection of a moratorium act is without merit where no reference was given to any act in force at the time, and the court's attention was not directed to anything in the record showing the contents of the moratorium affidavit referred to in the brief.

8. Mortgages ⚡8—Trust deed given to secure a debt held not a mortgage.

A deed of trust, running to a trustee and not to the creditor, given to secure a debt, and authorizing the sale of the property upon default in payment of the debt, is not a mortgage, and a foreclosure suit and sale will not lie, since St. 1897, p. 138, providing that a trust deed in the nature of a mortgage shall be deemed to be a mortgage, and subject to the same rules as a mortgage, has been superseded by St. 1915, p. 1932, which has no such provision.

CONREY, P. J. Action to obtain a decree declaring void a purported sale of real property by a trustee under a trust deed, to set aside the sale, and permit the plaintiff to redeem. Judgment in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appeals.

The deed of trust was made by the plaintiff to Title Guarantee & Trust Company, a corporation, to secure the payment of a stated indebtedness to the defendant Cora D. Meserve. It was provided therein that on default in payment, the trustee was empowered to sell the property—

"in order to accomplish the objects of these trusts, in the manner following, namely: The party of the second part, or its successors or assigns, shall first publish notice of the time and place of such sale, with a description of the property to be sold, at least once a week for eight successive weeks in some newspaper published in the city of and county of Los Angeles, Cal., and may from time to time, for one day or several days, postpone such sale by publication, by republishing the notice of sale in the same newspaper, with date of the postponement attached thereto, in one issue only, prior to the day of the postponed sale."

Default having been made by the plaintiff on a payment due from him, the trustee published notice of sale to be made on December 1, 1917. This publication was made at regular weekly intervals beginning with the 6th day of October. On the 1st day of December, at the time and place stated in the notice of sale, the sale was, upon request of the plaintiff, postponed to the 8th day of the same month, and notice thereof was published in the manner provided for in the trust deed. On December 8th, in accordance with said postponement and notice thereof, the trustee made sale of the property to the defendant Cora D. Meserve, which sale was followed by a deed of conveyance in due form.

[1] The first point relied upon by appellant is based upon his claim that the publication of notice was not made for fully eight weeks before the advertised date of sale. Therefore he contends that no right of sale existed on the 1st day of December, that the continuance to December 8th was void, and that the sale was void as in excess of the powers conferred by the deed of trust. It is provided by section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure and by section 10 of the Civil Code:

"The time in which any act provided by law is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last, unless the last day is a holiday, and then it is also excluded."

Appellant contends that, under this rule for the computation of time, there was no jurisdiction to sell until 56 days (8 weeks) had elapsed between the first day of publication and the day of sale, excluding both of those days. There is no merit in this contention. It is not supported by the decision in Secombe v. Roe, 22 Cal. App. 139, 133 Pac. 507, to which he refers. The trustee's sale in that case took place on the twenty-second day after the day of first publication of the notice of sale, whereas the trust deed required publication at least once a week for four consecutive weeks. This court held that—

"When the stipulation in the deed of trust was that the publication was to be once a week for four weeks, it meant four weeks of seven days each, or that twenty-eight days shall elapse from the date of the first publication to the date when authority was given to make the sale, and that a sale made within less than twenty-eight days from the first publication was without authority upon the part of the trustee."

But in the present case the sale was not made within less than 56 days from the first publication. This is made very clear by the Supreme Court in Cosgriff v. Election Commissioners, 151 Cal. 407, 91 Pac. 98, where the rule of computation of a given period of time which must elapse before the date of a stated event to occur is plainly set forth. Having first observed that, under the statute there in question, fractions of days were not to be considered, and that by consequence "every day, and every part of that day is, by this rule, one day before every part of the succeeding day," the court said:

"Manifestly, on that theory, the 5th day of November would be one day before the 6th day of that month, and not less than one day before, since the number 5 is one less than 6. So, by counting the consecutive days backward from November 6th, it will be found that October 17th was twenty days, and if twenty days, then not less than twenty days, before November 6th. This is what is contemplated by section 12 of the Political Code, declaring that in computing time by days, the first day is to be excluded and the last day included. Excluding November 6th, the first day, we find October 17th to be the twentieth day, or the last day of the period, and as it is to be included in the count, it must be counted as part of the period. Thus, it makes the full number of twenty days before the day of the election, and it cannot be 'less than twenty days before' that day."

So in the case at bar the trust deed requires that before making the sale the trustee shall first publish notice "at least once a week for eight consecutive weeks." Since the sale was noticed for December 1st, that day must be excluded from the computation. November 30th was the first day before December 1st, and October 6th was the fifty-sixth day, which last-mentioned day must be included. There was a publication for 8 complete weeks before the day of sale.

[2, 3] We find no merit in the objections to the validity of the deed of conveyance by the trustee, wherein appellant suggests that the published notice of postponement of the sale does not show the corporate seal of the trustee or any resolution of the board of directors of the trustee authorizing such postponement. Assuming, without deciding, that corporate action through the board of directors was necessary to authorize the sale, such action is implied by the recitals contained in the original notice and the corporate seal affixed thereto. The postponement of the sale was a routine matter appropriately conducted by the officer of the corporation through whom the sale was made.

"It is no longer held to be necessary that the ordinary everyday transactions of a corporation be evidenced by a writing attested with the corporate seal." Smith v. Jaccard, 20 Cal. App. 280, 286, 128 Pac. 1023, 1025.

[4] The fact that at the time of the sale appellant informed the trustee that he was making arrangements to obtain money with which to pay the debt did not obligate the trustee to grant a further postponement of the sale. The creditor having become entitled to enforce payment of the note, the debtor has no valid ground on which to attack the validity of the sale merely because he was not allowed further time in which to pay his debt.

[5] The court did not err in receiving in evidence the trust deed, thereby overruling the plaintiff's objection that the beneficiary of the trust had not recorded in the office of the county recorder a notice of her election to cause the property to be sold to satisfy the obligation. The amended section 2924, Civil Code (St. 1917, p. 300), by its terms applies only to instruments made after the amendment became effective; that is to say, after July 27, 1917. The trust deed in this case was made by the plaintiff on March 15, 1917.

[6] Prior to the commencement of the trustee's publication of notice of sale, the creditor had elected to declare the whole sum of principal and interest due and payable by reason of nonpayment of interest due on September 15, 1917. At least, it is so recited in the trustee's notice of sale, and in the trustee's deed to the purchaser; and the deed of trust made by the plaintiff provided for such election to be declared "without notice." The fact that on September 5, 1917, the bank in which the note was placed for collection notified the plaintiff that the stated amount of interest would be due and payable at the bank on September 15th was not a waiver of the right to elect to declare the whole sum of principal and interest due and payable on default in the payment of that interest. Appellant makes this claim upon the ground that the interest demanded "overlapped the time of the date first stated for the attempted sale of the property by about 15 days." Nevertheless, since the payment was not made, the right of election followed as a consequence of the default.

[7] Appellant claims that the deed should have been rejected because at the time of the sale he was within the protection of a moratorium act. As he has not given us a reference to any moratorium act in force at that time, and does not direct our attention to anything in the record showing the contents of the "moratorium affidavit" referred to in his brief, we assume that the point is without merit.

[8] We are unable to agree with the contention of appellant that the trust deed was a mortgage, under which there could be no sale without foreclosure. The instrument is a typical trust deed, running not to the creditor, but to a third party as trustee. "It has no feature in common with a mortgage except that it was executed to secure an indebtedness." On such an instrument a suit for foreclosure and sale will not lie, for the contract of the parties is that upon default the trustees shall sell, and there is no equity of redemption to foreclose. Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256, 73 Am. Dec. 651; Herbert Kraft Co. v. Bryan, 140 Cal. 73, 80, 73 Pac. 745. Appellant argues that his contention is sustained by section 60 of the act for the certification of land titles, enacted in 1897. Stats. 1897, p. 138. That section reads as follows:

"A trust deed in the nature of a mortgage shall be deemed to be a mortgage, and be subject to the same rules as a mortgage."

But, under the decision just cited, the trust deed in question was not an instrument in the nature of a mortgage. Moreover, that act appears to have been superseded by the initiative act covering the same subject, adopted November 3, 1914. Stats. 1915, p. 1932; Deering's Gen. Laws (1915 Ed.) Act 1049; Sackett v. Morse (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 742, 744; Cooper v. Buxton (Cal. Sup.) 199 Pac. 6. The section above quoted was omitted from the present law. Sections 67 to 69 of the two acts, which are identical in their terms in these sections, apply only to instruments filed in the registrar's office concerning registered lands.

Numerous other points presented by appellant are omitted from discussion because they depend upon appellant's theory that the notice of sale was insufficient, and that the trust deed was a mortgage. The record does not sustain the claim of appellant that the amount due from him was less than the amount stated in the notice of sale, or his further claim that the judgment in this action was entered in a name other than the name of the plaintiff. It is true that the clerk's certificate to the judgment roll is entitled "Meserve v. Meserve." But it identifies the judgment by the judgment book number and page. This judgment as contained in the judgment roll bears the correct title.

The judgment is affirmed.

SAN JOAQUIN BRICK CO. v. MULCAHY.
(Civ. 2355.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 23, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 21, 1922.)

1. Pleading $\S$ 148—Cross-complaint held insufficient as not based on transaction involved in plaintiff's pleading.

In an action for merchandise sold and delivered and for services performed, a cross-complaint, merely alleging that plaintiff was indebted to defendant in a specified sum "on an open and current account for moneys advanced to cross-defendant at its special instance and request," was insufficient under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 442, in that it did not show on its face that the items involved related to the transaction upon which the action was brought.

2. Pleading $\S$ 411—Pleading by defendant held to be treated as a cross-complaint in view of evidence not objected to.

Though a pleading filed by defendant and designated as a cross-complaint was insufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 442, for the reason that it did not show on its face that it was based on the transaction involved in plaintiff's complaint, it would be treated as a cross-complaint or counterclaim where plaintiff interposed no objection to it at the trial, and defendant's evidence, received without objection, showed that most of the items set forth in the alleged cross-complaint referred to the transactions on which the suit was brought.

3. Pleading $\S$ 412—Failure to deny cross-complaint waived, where judgment not demanded until after trial.

Though plaintiff did not file a denial to defendant's cross-complaint or counterclaim, and the parties went to trial without objection as to the state of the pleadings, defendant was not entitled, after the completion of the trial, to a judgment on the cross-complaint on the ground that allegations of the cross-complaint were not denied, since defendant's pleading must be treated as setting up a counterclaim, which would be deemed to be denied under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 462.

4. Judgment $\S$ 256(1)—Findings which fail to dispose of defendant's cross-complaint or counterclaim will not support a judgment for plaintiff.

Where in an action for goods sold and delivered and for services plaintiff filed a bill of particulars and defendant filed a cross-complaint or counterclaim, findings of the court which clearly disposed of the items in the bill of particulars, but which make no specific reference to the matter set up in defendant's pleading, will not support a judgment for plaintiff.

5. Trial — 404(2)—Finding of court held not a finding of fact, but a conclusion of law.

In an action for goods sold and services in which plaintiff filed a bill of particulars and defendant filed a cross-complaint or counterclaim for an amount greater than the plaintiff's claim, a finding by the court that, "Upon the aforesaid amount said defendant is entitled to a credit, by way of cash paid, and goods returned, as shown by the said bill of particulars," in a specified amount, was not a finding of fact, but a conclusion of law.

6. Trial — 395(2)—Finding by court held not sufficient as allowance of credits to defendant.

In an action for goods sold and for services in which plaintiff filed a bill of particulars and defendant filed a cross-complaint or counterclaim, a finding by the court that, "Upon the aforesaid amount said defendant is entitled to a credit, by way of cash paid and goods returned, as shown by the said bill of particulars," in a specified sum, was insufficient to dispose of defendant's claim, as it fails to actually allow defendant any credits.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin Brick Company, against James Mulcahy. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and remanded with directions.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.

Lafayette J. Smallpage and Smallpage & Rex, all of Stockton, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover from the defendant the total sum of $1,078, alleged to be the balance due to the plaintiff from defendant for merchandise sold and delivered to and services performed for the latter by the former.

The complaint is in four counts, in the first of which it is alleged that the plaintiff sold and delivered to and performed certain services for the defendant, and in each of the remaining counts it is alleged that, on the day named therein, the plaintiff sold and delivered to the defendant certain merchandise.

The defendant filed an answer, in which he specifically denied each of the material allegations of the complaint, and also at the opening of the trial, and by leave of the court, filed what is termed by the document itself a cross-complaint, in which, after the formal averments, it is alleged:

"That, within four years last past, said cross-defendant became, and still is, indebted to cross-plaintiff in the sum of $2,053 on an open and current account for moneys advanced to cross-defendant at its special instance and request."

That cross-defendant has not paid to cross-plaintiff said sum of $2,053, or any part thereof, and that "the whole thereof is now unpaid and due and owing to cross-plaintiff from said cross-defendant." The prayer is that plaintiff take nothing by reason of this action, and that cross-plaintiff have judgment against cross-defendant for the sum sued for in his cross-complaint.

The plaintiff made no objection to the filing of the cross-complaint, but reserved the right, with the consent of counsel for the defendant, to ask the court for and to be granted a reasonable time within which to answer said pleading and "a reasonable continuance," if necessary for that purpose. But the plaintiff did not ask for time to file an answer to the cross-complaint, and neither answered the same nor demurred thereto, nor was there any suggestion by the court or counsel that the averments of the cross-complaint should be deemed denied.

Ordinarily, failure to answer a cross-complaint which states a cause of action for affirmative relief entitles the cross-complainant, upon demand therefor, to a judgment by default for the relief so prayed for. In this case the trial was had in the month of February, 1921, and judgment entered for the plaintiff on the issues made by its complaint and the answer of defendant thereto on the 4th day of April, 1921. Written demand by defendant to the clerk of the court for the entry of default on his cross-complaint was filed and so made on the 9th day of May, 1921, and the clerk refused to enter the default.

Upon demand of the defendant, made prior to the trial, the plaintiff delivered to the former a bill of particulars, showing the several items of which the account upon which the action is based was made up. The bill contained, in addition to the debits, certain items of credit on account of payments made by the defendant.

At the trial the defendant was the first witness called by the plaintiff, and his examination was founded entirely on the bill of particulars; counsel for the plaintiff taking up each item in said bill, calling the attention of defendant thereto, and asking him, in effect, whether it was or was not correct. The correctness of some of the items was verified by the defendant, while there were others which he disputed. The assistant manager of plaintiff was also put on the stand, and gave testimony in support of the correctness of the account. Then defendant, in his own behalf, and in support of the alleged cross-complaint, testified that he had returned or sold to the plaintiff the following articles: 45,000 bricks at $10 per thousand; 200 sacks of cement at 60 cents per sack; 100 yards of sand at $1 per yard; 3,000 sacks at 5 cents each; 4,000 pressed brick at $40 per thousand. The defendant further testified that he performed two days' work with truck at $15 per day, and that he made a cash payment of $753 on July 3, 1918, and a cash payment of $1,000, the same having been made by check, dated September 7, 1918. These items totaled, approximately, the sum claimed by defendant in his purported cross-complaint. The 4,000 pressed bricks referred to by defendant were purchased by him from a person other than plaintiff, and never sold to the latter by defendant. None of these items was, so defendant testified, included in the bill of particulars, nor, so he further stated, was he allowed any credit by plaintiff therefor in its account with him, as indicated by the bill of particulars.

The court, in its findings, took up each item set out in the bill of particulars, and found in accordance therewith, referring in each instance to the part of the bill where the particular item was noted, for illustration, as follows:

"That on the 20th day of September, 1918, plaintiff, at the request of defendant, sold and delivered to him 7,000 common brick (set forth on page 3, line 8, of said bill of particulars)" —and, as stated, so proceed the findings to the end. The court then made this finding (No. 5):

"That within four years last past plaintiff, at the request of said defendant, sold and delivered merchandise unto said defendant and performed services therefor, to the reasonable value of $7,716.20; that the items of merchandise so sold and delivered are correctly set forth in the bill of particulars filed herein by plaintiff, and the reasonable value of said articles so delivered is as set forth in said bill of particulars. That upon the aforesaid amount said defendant is entitled to a credit, by way of cash paid, or goods returned, as shown by said bill of particulars, in the sum of $7,509.25, leaving a net amount due and unpaid of $206.95. That in addition, there should be allowed a credit of $30 for the services of defendant rendered plaintiff, at the latter's request, in the hauling of certain brick."

No specific finding was made as to any of the items of credit embraced (in general language) within the averments of the purported cross-complaint, and which defendant testified that he was entitled to be allowed, and which he further stated were not included or noted in the bill of particulars.

Judgment for the sum of $1,070 was awarded plaintiff, and from this judgment the defendant appeals under the alternative method.

[1] Upon its face the so-called cross-complaint filed by the defendant does not appear to be a cross-complaint, since it is not thereby shown that the relief therein asked relates to or depends upon "the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought." Code Civ. Proc. § 442. It will be noted, however, that the defendant's testimony disclosed that the larger portion of the claim declared upon in said pleading involved items relating to the transaction upon which the action was brought. The only item in his claim which might be said not to relate to the said transaction was that involving the sale of the 4,000 bricks to the plaintiff by the defendant at $10 per thousand.

While it has often and very properly been held that a cross-complaint is wholly unnecessary, and that it is not error to strike it from the files on motion, where the relief demanded can be had upon the denials and averments of the answer, it has never been held, so far as we are advised, that in such case it is improper for the defendant to file such a pleading where he seeks affirmative relief. Martin v. Molera, 4 Cal. App. 298, 301, 87 Pac. 1104; Nelson v. O'Brien, 139 Cal. 629, 73 Pac. 469; Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 261, 22 Pac. 195; Wilson v. Madison, 55 Cal. 8.

[2, 3] In this case we think that, in view of the evidence, the so-called cross-complaint, in so far as its averments refer to the transaction upon which the action is brought, may properly be treated as a cross-complaint, or, in view of all of its averments or the several claims referred to by said pleading, may be treated as a counterclaim. Viewed as a cross-complaint, it was, of course, the duty of the defendant to answer it or suffer the consequences of a default for failure to do so. But, the default having been demanded after the case had been tried, the claim of the defendant that he was entitled to a default is wholly untenable, inasmuch as counsel for the defendant evidently tried the issue made by said pleading upon the theory that such an issue had regularly been tendered by the pleadings in the case. In other words, counsel offered and the court received evidence in support of the claims to which said pleading referred, and counsel for the plaintiff cross-examined the witness (the defendant), giving such testimony without objection from counsel for the latter. We may therefore assume that the court and the attorneys treated the pleading in question as one involving nothing more than the setting up of a counterclaim, and in this view the new matter so stated was, of course, deemed to be denied. Code Civ. Proc. § 462; Melander v. Western Nat. Bank, 21 Cal. App. 462, 467, 132 Pac. 265, and cases cited therein.

[4] But, whether the pleading referred to is a cross-complaint or amounted only to the setting up of a counterclaim, the defendant was entitled to have the claim thus set forth disposed of by the court. It will be observed that, if the court had accepted the testimony of the defendant given in support of the allegations of the so-called cross-complaint, he would be entitled to a judgment in the sum, approximately, of $1,000, or a trifle more than the amount of the judgment awarded to plaintiff.

As above explained, the court specifically made its findings with reference to the items contained in the bill of particulars furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant. While this was wholly unnecessary, and, ordinarily, the reference thus made to the items contained in said bill would carry with it no legal significance, and, indeed, could be treated as surplusage and properly as entitled to no notice, yet it becomes significant here because it is thus clearly disclosed that the court made no allowance of credits to the defendant and considered none except such as were included or noted in the bill of particulars. The defendant testified, as seen, that the several items of credit to which he claimed to be entitled were not noted in or embraced within the bill of particulars. But, even if it be admitted that the findings should not be considered by the light of the court's reference therein to the bill of particulars, it still remains true that the court should have specially found on the several items constituting the claim set up by the defendant, whether they were set up by way of a cross-complaint or as a counterclaim. In other words, the decision as evidenced by the findings should be so clear as to leave no ground for doubt that it embraced a consideration and disposition of said claim.

As stated, the findings are not only not clear upon that proposition, but it is quite manifest, from the findings, that the court did not find on the items of credit or claims referred to. These, of course, constituted material issues in the case.

"It is, of course, well settled that if any material issue is left unfound, it is a ground for a reversal of the judgment." Hayne on New Trial and Appeal (Rev. Ed.) p. 1317; Math v. Crescent Hill Gold Mines Co., 31 Cal. App. 636, 641, 161 Pac. 140.

[5, 6] Furthermore, an examination of the findings will readily show that the purported finding made by the court as to credits to which the defendant was entitled is not a finding of fact, but a conclusion of law. The only instance in which the court in its findings refers to credits which should be allowed the defendant is to be found in finding V, above quoted herein. Thus it will be noted that the court merely stated, after finding that the plaintiff furnished certain materials and performed certain services, totaling a certain specified amount:

"* * * That, upon the aforesaid amount said defendant is entitled to a credit, by way of cash paid, or goods returned, as shown by the said bill of particulars, in the sum of $7,509.25."

It will thus be perceived that, while the court states that the defendant is entitled to certain credits upon the account, it does not actually allow the defendant any credits.

But the important objection to the decision is, as first above shown, that the court failed to find on a material issue.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with direction to the court below to allow the plaintiff, if it be so advised, to answer the so-called cross-complaint, and the defendant, if he be so advised, so to amend his answer as to include therein any counterclaim he may be able to set up, including those as to which he filed the so-called cross-complaint.

MANASSE et al. v. FORD et al. (Civ. 2477.)

Landlord and tenant §92(1)—Purchaser from lessor not required to sell premises to lessee, under provision of lease giving lessee option to purchase.

Where a three-year lease dated May 6, 1919, contained a provision giving lessee the option to purchase during the term, but provided that, unless this option was exercised by November 6, 1919, after giving lessee 30 days within which to purchase at the offered price, lessor could sell the premises subject to the lease and all its covenants, and where subsequent to November 6th, but prior to the end of the term, lessor gave the required notice, and, lessee having failed to purchase, sold the premises, purchaser was under no obligation to convey to lessee on payment of the stated price in view of the general rules for the construction of contracts in Civ. Code, §§ 1641, 1643, 1648, 1650, 1652.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by A. J. Manasse and another against F. F. Ford and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions to render judgment for plaintiffs.

Fee & Ring, of Madera, for appellants.

John W. Maloy, of Madera, for respondents.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. The facts of this controversy may be very briefly stated. The predecessor in interest of the plaintiffs, on May 6, 1919, leased to respondent Ford for a term ending May 5, 1922, certain real property situated in the city of Madera. The terms of the lease itself are not in controvery, but, in addition to the proper provisions for demising the premises, there is contained in the lease an option in favor of said Ford to purchase the property at any time during the term at a price of $9,500. The trouble arises over the following proviso modifying said option:

"Provided, however, that if, at any time after November 6, 1919, the lessee not having theretofore elected to purchase the same, the lessor shall receive a bona fide offer from any other person and shall be minded to accept the same, the lessor shall then serve personally on the lessee a notice in writing of the price and terms of such offer from such other person and of the intention of the lessor to accept the same; and the lessee shall have the right for thirty days thereafter to purchase the said real property at and for the price and on the terms specified in said notice and at a price not exceeding said above mentioned $9,500; and provided further that if the lessee shall not within said period of thirty days elect to purchase the said property, the lessor may then sell the same to such other purchaser subject to this lease and this lease, the conditions, restrictions and covenants thereof shall then be in full force and effect and binding upon the lessee and the purchaser of the said property."

The lessor found a bona fide purchaser for the sum of $9,500 and he thereupon gave to respondents the written notice required by the terms of said proviso. They failed for more than thirty days to purchase the property, and thereupon and on April 9, 1921, the lessor sold the entire property to appellants for said sum of $9,500 and they now hold the title thereto. Notwithstanding the plain provisions contained in said proviso, the respondents claim the right to purchase the property from the appellants. They base this contention upon that clause of the proviso which reads as follows:

"The lessor may sell the same subject to this lease and this lease, the conditions, restrictions and covenants thereof shall then be in full force and effect and binding upon the lessee and the purchaser of the said property."

The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the respondents and found, in effect, that they continued after the sale to have the same rights of purchase of the property as though the proviso had never been incorporated in the lease. The court, in so doing, however, disregarded one of the leading statutory canons of interpretation. This is that some effect must be given to each and every provision of a contract, if this can be done without doing violence to the language used by the parties.

"The whole of a contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other." Civ. Code, § 1641.

"A contract must receive such an interpretation as will make it lawful, operative, definite, reasonable, and capable of being carried into effect, if it can be done without violating the intention of the parties." Civ. Code, § 1643.

"However broad may be the terms of a contract, it extends only to those things concerning which it appears that the parties intended to contract." Civ. Code, § 1648.

"Particular clauses of a contract are subordinate to its general intent." Civ. Code, § 1650.

"Repugnancy in a contract must be reconciled, if possible, by such an interpretation as will give some effect to the repugnant clauses, subordinate to the general intent and purpose of the whole contract." Civ. Code, § 1652.

There is no repugnancy in the terms of the contract, but if there were an effort should be made to give some effect to every part of it. Moreover, it must receive such an interpretation as will avoid absurdities and particularly such an interpretation as will not serve to excise any of its provisions.

The lease in question consists of two very distinct parts. One of these is the lease proper. This portion demises the leasehold estate and deals with the terms, method of use, rentals, etc. The other portion consists solely of an option to the respondents to purchase the property and modifications thereof. Confusion will be avoided in construing the terms of the option if this distinction is kept well in mind.

The option portion of the lease gives and reserves the following rights:

(a) An indefeasible option to the respondents to purchase the property at any time up to November 6, 1919, for the sum of $9,500.

(b) A right in the lessor, at any time after said November 6, 1919, to receive a bona fide offer for the property from a third person and at any price—notice of such offer to be given to the respondents.

(c) An option in the respondents to purchase the property within the next ensuing thirty days at the price stated in such offer, but not exceeding $9,500.

(d) If not accepted by the respondents within said period of thirty days, then a right in the lessor to sell to such third person at the stated price.

(e) If no such sale be made to a third person, then the option to purchase for $9,500 remains with the respondents to May 5, 1922, the end of the term.

Respondents contend, however, that there should be added another to the foregoing options, to wit:

(f) An option in the respondents, notwithstanding such sale to a third person, to come in at any time during the term of the lease and purchase the property from such third person for $9,500 without interest.

Such construction does violence to the manifest intent of the parties. If the contract had the meaning ascribed to it by the respondents, then there would follow the extraordinary result that the entire proviso would be stricken from it. This is so, for the reason that without any notice to or conference with the respondents, the lessor had at all times the unqualified right to sell the property at any time during the term, whether before or after November 6, 1919, and at any price—subject, of course, to the terms of the option and lease.

Confessedly, he could do this, and if he could do it, then the proviso conferred upon him or reserved to him not the slightest additional right, if we are to believe the theories of the respondents. This point is demonstrated when we recall that the lessor gave the 30-day notice in the spring of 1921 and thereafter sold the property for $9,500. According to the respondents, he sold it subject to the terms of the continuing option. But he could have done all this without reference to the terms of the option. It is thus seen that, if the 30-day notice had no effect, the proviso is bodily excised from the lease. It will be noted, too, that the lessor could have sold it for any price, great or small.

It is not to be believed that the lessor reserved to himself the right to entertain a bona fide offer from a third person, when at all times he had such right without any reservation. Had the respondents' view been correct they would not have reserved to themselves the right during the 30 days to purchase the property at a price not exceeding $9,500, since, at all times, they had that right, without any reservation.

Should it be asked why the proviso should contain a provision that, notwithstanding a sale to the third person, the sale should be subject to the terms of the lease for the balance of the term, the answer is found in the fact that the main option to the respondents to purchase for $9,500 provides that a sale to them under the option shall terminate the lease; hence the wisdom of the affirmative declaration in the proviso that a sale thereunder did not terminate it. The obvious intent being that the respondents should not be deprived of the possession during the entire term of the lease. But, viewed from a wider angle, it is seen that the parties cannot have contemplated that the respondents should still have the right of purchase after a sale under the terms of the proviso. Such view would lead to some results that verge closely upon the absurd. The property was sold on the 9th day of April, 1921, for a price of $9,500. The lease itself expired on May 5, 1922. The rental was fixed at $240 per annum. In that view, the parties must have contemplated that the purchaser would pay out $9,500 to reap about $250 as rent, lose about $700 in interest, carry the property for over a year with the chance of depreciation, and then, in the event of appreciation, be under the duty of selling it to the respondents for $9,500 without interest. People do not ordinarily do business in that way. It cannot be understood from the contract that the parties had in mind such a farcical procedure.

The provision for an offer to the respondents and a subsequent sale to a third party meant, in truth and in fact, an actual and indefeasible sale.

The confusion that has arisen between those terms of the contract which demise the leasehold estate and those which relate to an option to buy and receive title to real property constitute the entire foundation for the defense of the respondents in this action. Said defense is based upon the following clause in said proviso:

"Subject to this lease and this lease, the conditions, restrictions and covenants thereof shall be in full force and effect and binding upon the lessee and the purchaser of said property."

It is clear that the parties had no thought that this provision continued in force the very options that the proviso itself had extinguished. To say that this provision was necessary because the other parts of the proviso had provided for a sale and then that such sale was in effect invalid because of this provision is but to reason in a circle.

The intent was to reserve to the lessor the unqualified right after November 6, 1919, to make an absolute sale of the property. This he did, and the resultant conveyance conveyed to the appellants an indefeasible title to the property.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court is directed to render judgment on the findings in favor of the appellants in conformity with their prayer for relief.

HORTON v. WHIPPLE, County Auditor.
(Civ. 2491.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 19, 1922.)

Schools and school districts — 53(1)—County superintendent held to have no power to appoint board of enlarged district.

Where the county board of supervisors annexed 17 elementary school districts to the high school district of a city of the fifth class, as authorized by Pol. Code, § 1734b, as added by St. 1921, p. 722, such enlarged district became a union high school district, and under Pol. Code, §§ 1730, 1731, it was the duty of the county superintendent to call an election to elect a board of education of five members from the district at large, and under section 1731 the county superintendent had no power to appoint the members of the board except to fill vacancies.

Petition for writ of mandate by A. W. Horton against T. F. Whipple, Auditor of the County of Butte. Writ denied.

W. E. Duncan, of Oroville, for petitioner.
G. H. Harlan, of San Rafael, as amicus curiæ.

J. R. Robinson, Dist. Atty., and J. Oscar Goldstein, both of Chico, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate requiring respondent to issue a warrant on the county treasurer of Butte county for the amount of petitioner's claim against Chico high school district; the claim having been duly approved by certain persons alleged to constitute the high school board of such district and the county superintendent of schools of said county having regularly issued his requisition in favor of petitioner for the amount of such claim.

Prior to August 24, 1921, Chico high school district was a city high school district embracing all the territory within the city of Chico, a municipal corporation of the fifth class, and also certain additional territory annexed thereto for high school purposes. While it is not directly alleged, it may be inferred from the pleadings and the statements of counsel for the respective parties that the high school and elementary school districts were coextensive, and both were governed by the city board of education, elected by the electors of the district. August 24, 1921, the board of supervisors of Butte county, pursuant to the provisions of section 1734b of the Political Code, as added by St. 1921, p. 722, adopted a resolution annexing 17 elementary school districts to Chico high school district. No election was thereafter held in the high school district for members of a high school board, but the city board of education of Chico continued to act as the high school board of the enlarged district. April 24, 1922, the county superintendent of schools appointed the persons who approved petitioner's claim, as stated, members of the high school board of the enlarged district. The board so appointed and the city board of education are both attempting to act as the high school board. The question for determination is which board is authorized to conduct the affairs of the district.

At the outset it may be observed that any attempt to apply literally all the various provisions of the school law would lead to hopeless confusion. As said in Chico H. S. Board v. Supervisors, 118 Cal. 115, 122, 50 Pac. 275, 277:

"We have found it difficult to harmonize all the different clauses relating to the school system so as to give effect to the whole, and were we inclined to cavil, abundant cause might be found therefor in some of our school legislation."

Many laws, general in character, seem to have been designed to govern high school districts of a particular kind without reference to the relation of such laws to other laws covering the same subject-matter. Other provisions which, from the nature of the subject-matter thereof, ought to have been general in their application are limited to proceedings under the particular laws in which they are embraced.

Petitioner relies on sections 1731 and 1732 of the Political Code. Section 1732 provides:

"Whenever the number of school districts in a high school district is increased from one to two or more, the superintendent of schools having jurisdiction of such high school district shall, within fifteen days thereafter, call an election as provided in section seventeen hundred thirty, and thereafter the high school board shall be elected and organized as provided in sections seventeen hundred thirty and seventeen hundred thirty-one."

Sections 1730 and 1731 provide for the election at large of five trustees in union and joint union high school districts. If petitioner's contention thus far stated be correct, then it follows that, upon the annexation of the several elementary school districts to the Chico high school district, the latter ceased to be a city high school district, governed by the city board of education, and became a union high school district, under the control of a high school board of five trustees to be elected at large. The next step in petitioner's argument is that, after the annexation, the enlarged district was without a governing board, and that therefore the county superintendent was authorized under the following provision of section 731 to appoint the new board:

"Vacancies on the board shall be filled by appointment by the superintendent of schools having jurisdiction over the high school district, the appointee to hold office for the remainder of the unexpired term."

The primary question for determination then is whether the provision of section 1732 authorizing the county superintendent to call an election is applicable to the enlarged district. If he was not authorized to call such election he had no power to appoint. If it be conceded, however, that it was his duty to call the election, it does not necessarily follow that he had authority to appoint.

In all school legislation, unless section 1732 be an exception, there is a manifest purpose to place schools in municipalities, up to and including those of the fifth class, under the control of the school officers thereof, even though the school district may include territory outside of the municipality. Section 795 of the Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, p. 93, as amended St. 1891, p. 28) relating to elementary schools in cities of the fifth class, provides:

"From and after the organization of each of such cities, the same shall constitute a separate school district, which shall be governed by the board of education of such city; provided the board of supervisors may include more territory in such school district than that included in such city, and in that case such outside territory shall be deemed a part of such city for the purpose of holding the general municipal election, and shall be an election precinct by itself, and its qualified electors shall vote only for the board of education, and said outside territory shall be deemed to be a part of said city for all matters connected with the school department, and the annual levying and collecting of the property tax for the school fund."

Section 1576 of the Political Code contains similar provisions, and further provides that—

Such outside territory "shall form one or more election precincts, as may be determined by the legislative authority of said city or incorporated town."

Section 1726 provides:

"In every high school district formed and existing in an incorporated city or town * * * the board of education * * * of such incorporated city or town * * * shall constitute the high school board."

Section 1729 provides:

"A union high school district which lies contiguous to or adjoining a high school district of an incorporated city or town in any county, may be annexed to, consolidated and merged with said high school district of such incorporated city or town; * * * and such merged, consolidated and combined district shall take the name and thereafter be known by and under the same name as the high school district of such incorporated city or town. * * * Whenever a union high school district shall be annexed to, consolidated and merged with a high school district of an incorporated city or town as hereinabove provided, the governing power and control of such union high school district shall thereafter be merged and vested in the board of education or board of school trustees of such incorporated city or town."

Section 1734a, as added by St. 1919, p. 396, relating to the annexation of elementary school districts to high school districts, provides:

"Whenever an elementary school district is annexed under the provisions of this section to any high school district having the same boundaries as a single elementary school district, except a city high school district, such high school district shall thereafter constitute a union high school district, and shall be governed by a high school board elected according to the provisions of sections one thousand seven hundred thirty and one thousand seven hundred thirty-one of the Political Code. * * * Whenever one or more elementary school districts are annexed under the provisions of this act to a city high school district, such annexation shall be for high school purposes only. Such territory shall be deemed a part of said city for the purpose of holding the general municipal election at which any member of the board of education is to be elected, * * * the qualified electors of which shall vote only for the board of education, and such territory shall be deemed to be a part of said city * * * high school district for all matters connected with the high school thereof."

Under the provisions of sections 1729 and 1734a, large numbers of school districts might be annexed to a city high school district, and in such case the provisions of section 1732, authorizing the county superintendent to call an election, taken literally, would be applicable, but the Legislature, in sections 1729 and 1734a, was careful to provide that the city board of education should constitute the high school board, thus recognizing the value of unity of control in city school systems.

If section 1732 be held applicable in cases such as this, then great inconsistencies will result. Assuming the soundness of petitioner's contention, if a union high school district shall be hereafter annexed to the enlarged district under the provisions of section 1729, the school will continue to be a union high school, over which the city board of education will have no control; if, however, such union high school had been so annexed prior to the annexation here in question, the control thereof would continue to be vested in the city board, for in that case the high school district having been already composed of more than one elementary district, the latter annexation would not have increased the number of districts from "one to two or more." Composed of the same identical elementary districts, in the instances mentioned, the management of the high school would be vested in the one board or the other, depending upon the order of annexation. Upon the annexation under section 1734b of a single small elementary district to a populous city high school district, to which no elementary district had theretofore been annexed, the control of the high school would pass to another board, composed, perhaps, of different persons, while, upon the annexation, under the same section, of any number of school districts to a small city high school district, to which an elementary district had theretofore been annexed, the city board of education would retain control. Without questioning the power of the Legislature to provide for such inconsistent results, an intention to so provide should not be imputed unless imperatively necessary. It may be that under the provisions of section 1727, upon the petition of "a majority of the heads of families, or a majority of the electors residing in each of two or more contiguous school districts," one of them being a city school district, such districts can be formed into a union high school district, over which the city board of education will have no control. Such high school district, however, can be formed only by affirmative action of a majority of the heads of families or a majority of the electors of the city school district, whereas such heads of families or electors have no voice in the annexation provided for by section 1734b.

Petitioner urges that the provisions of sections 1729 and 1734a, which place a city high school district, enlarged by the annexation thereto of a school district or a union high school district, under the control of the city board of education, are not general in their application, but limited to the cases therein mentioned. Those sections, however, are indicative of the general legislative policy to place every high school district of which a city, except one of the sixth class, forms a part under the control of the city board of education. Prior to the enactment of section 1734b, it is clear that the provisions of section 1732 had no application to a city high school district where enlarged by the annexation of outside school districts thereto. It is not to be presumed that by the enactment of section 1734b, which is silent as to the governing board of the enlarged district for which provision is made, the Legislature intended to depart from the uniform course theretofore pursued of placing the control of city high school districts in the boards of education thereof.

While those provisions of section 1732 hereinbefore quoted, taken literally, are sufficiently comprehensive to include city high school districts, the other parts of the section indicate that such was not the intention. That section provides for three contingencies: (1) An increase in the number of school districts in a union high school district; (2) a change from a district high school to a union high school; (3) a change from a union high school to a district high school. In the first contingency, no change is made in the governing board. In the second, a new high school board must be elected. In the third, the management of the high school is vested in the trustees of the elementary school district. The changes provided for may be brought about by annexation of elementary school districts to or their exclusion from high school districts or by the division or consolidation of elementary districts included in high school districts. It is thus seen that there may be a full application of all the provisions of section 1732 without reference to city high school districts. Manifestly the first provision can have no application to such a district. Throughout the school law the governing board of a city school district is designated as either the "board of education" or the "board of education or board of school trustees of such incorporated city or town." The omission to employ such designation in section 1732 and the use of the term "school trustees" therein indicate that it was not intended to make that section applicable to city high school districts.

Neither the term "city school district" nor "city high school district" is mentioned in that section, the words "school district" and "union or joint union high school district" being used.

It is contended that, since the city board of education has control of the elementary schools of the city, with which schools the outside districts have no concern, it would be violative of sections 11 and 21 of article 1, section 25, of article 4, and section 12 of article 11, of the state Constitution to permit electors of such outside districts to vote for members of the city board of education. While it is not necessary to decide the question thus raised, the only question involved here being whether the county superintendent was authorized to call an election for or to appoint members of the high school board, it may be remarked in passing that elsewhere in our laws electors are permitted to vote for officers, with a part of whose duties such electors have no direct concern. Thus boards of supervisors have control of roads outside of municipalities and levy taxes on such outside territory for the construction and maintenance of such roads. Electors within municipalities vote at elections for supervisors and, in many counties, they may elect a majority of the members of the board, though property inside of the municipality is not taxed for such road purposes. It is also contended that section 1734b is unconstitutional. If so, the county superintendent was without authority to appoint the high school board. If the section is constitutional and the views herein expressed are sound, then equally he was without authority to appoint. Others who are not represented in this proceeding are interested in and entitled to be heard on the question of the validity of the law, and such question ought not to be passed on here, when not necessary to a decision of the issues presented.

If it be conceded that, by the annexation, Chico high school district was transformed into a union high school district, and that the provisions of section 1732 thereupon became applicable, it does not appear by what authority the appointment of a high school board was made. Section 1730 provides that when a union high school district has been established the county superintendent shall call an election for the "purpose of electing a high school board," and that at such election "one member shall be elected to hold office from the day of receiving his certificate of election until the first day of May, next succeeding; two members shall be elected to hold office from the day of receiving their certificate of election until the first day of the second succeeding May; and two members shall be elected to hold office from the day of receiving their certificates of election until the first day of the third succeeding

May." By section 1732 the county superintendent is authorized, upon an increase in the number of school districts in a high school district from one to two or more, to call an election for a high school board as provided in section 1730. The duty of the superintendent, in a proper case, is plain, to call an election as the law provides. It does not appear by what authority he may appoint members of the high school board instead of calling an election as the law requires.

The petition is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by T. E. K. Cormac and another against Margaret Murphy. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Wal J. Tuska, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Sapiro and Levy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant in an action brought to recover the sum of $500, alleged to be due plaintiffs for legal services rendered by them in connection with the settlement of the estate of the deceased son of defendant.

On September 10, 1920, plaintiffs, who are practicing attorneys at law, with offices located in San Francisco, received a letter dated August 19, 1920, from Patrick O'Leary, a solicitor residing at Bantry, county of Cork, Ireland, concerning the estate of Jeremiah J. Murphy, deceased, which estate was then pending probate in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. In that letter it was, among other things, stated that Murphy died in San Francisco, leaving an estate, consisting of money and shares of stock of undetermined value; that Murphy was survived by a mother and brother residing in Ireland, for whom O'Leary was acting, and a sister residing in the United States; that the public administrator had taken charge of the assets of said estate. Continuing the letter said:

"What the money and shares amount to I do not know, but I want you to make inquiries and let me know, and if you are open to act in the matter for the deceased's next of kin in this country, you are hereby empowered to do so, and in case you require a power of attorney from them you can let me have form and I will have it executed by them. In the meantime, I will be pleased to hear from you as to what you think the estate is worth," etc.

Plaintiffs replied to that letter on the day on which it was received to the effect that the matters referred to in said letter would receive their immediate attention. They also sent inclosed in their reply a form of power of attorney, with the request that it be executed pursuant to the printed instructions inclosed; also forms of interrogatories for the purpose of establishing heirship.

On September 11, 1920, the day following the receipt of the O'Leary letter, plaintiffs served and filed in the estate of Murphy a notice of appearance in accordance with the provisions of section 1380 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They had, in the meantime, investigated the record and files of said estate, and had made report thereof to O'Leary. Later they sought for and located in Oakland a cousin of the deceased, by whom they expected to establish heirship. This witness was produced and examined by plaintiffs on October 28, 1920, at the time the petition for the final distribution of said estate was heard and granted. During the course of the administration of said estate the public administrator recognized and dealt with plaintiffs as the attorneys representing the heirs residing in Ireland. Other than the letters above mentioned the record does not disclose that there was any further correspondence between the parties. The form for the execution of the power of attorney and the printed interrogatories which were mailed by plaintiffs to O'Leary as above stated were never used, nor were they returned to plaintiffs. However, on October 29, 1920, the defendant Margaret Murphy, as sole heir to the residue of said estate, which consisted of approximately $1,300 in cash, executed a power of attorney, appointing Eugene W. Levy as her attorney in fact. Said power of attorney was mailed to Levy from Dublin, Ireland, on November 6, 1920, and was later filed as a part of the record of said estate. The public administrator refused to pay the distributive share of the defendant to Levy, however, unless plaintiffs were paid for their services. Levy declined to approve such payment, and plaintiffs thereupon commenced this action, and levied upon the distributive share of Margaret Murphy remaining in the hands of the public administrator.

Plaintiffs claim that they are entitled to compensation for their services, first upon the ground that the O'Leary letter, dated August 19, 1920, constituted a valid contract of employment, and that "coming from one solicitor to another—especially from a distant country—justifies the solicitor appealed to to enter upon the performance of all duties in connection with the case his services are sought in."

[1-3] There is an entire absence of proof, however, showing that O'Leary had any authority from Margaret Murphy to employ plaintiffs or that she expressly or impliedly assented thereto. Under such circumstances the defendant is not bound, we think, by the contents of the O'Leary letter. It has been repeatedly and consistently held that an attorney has no general authority by virtue of his retainer to employ counsel or assistants at the expense of his client without previous authority or assent of the client. Porter v. Elizalde, 125 Cal. 204, 57 Pac. 899; Davis v. Mackay (Cal. App.) 194 Pac. 738; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Clarke, 106 Fed. 794, 45 C. C. A. 635; Paddock v. Colby, 18 Vt. 485; Young v. Crawford, 23 Mo. App. 432; Mechem on Agency, § 813; Weeks on Attorneys, § 246. The evidence on that point, although somewhat meager, shows, we believe, quite the contrary. From a letter written on February 21, 1921, by one MacGrath, solicitor and land agent of Dublin, Ireland, to Levy, and read into the record at the request of plaintiffs, it would appear that a son of Margaret Murphy merely requested O'Leary to obtain information concerning his brother's estate, for which service O'Leary was paid a nominal fee. Such was apparently the extent of O'Leary's authority. It was not incumbent upon the defendant, as contended by plaintiffs, to show affirmatively that such authority was not in fact given. The burden was upon the plaintiffs to show that it was, which, as above stated, they failed to do.

Respondent contends that the letter itself did not constitute a contract for the employment of plaintiffs as attorneys to represent defendant in the settlement of said estate, but that it was merely a request for certain information concerning said estate, and that the employment of plaintiffs was necessarily incomplete until the power of attorney mentioned in the letter was executed and returned to plaintiffs, which as we have already seen was not done. Whether or not the effect of the O'Leary letter and the reply thereto by plaintiffs was sufficient in law to constitute a valid contract of employment makes little difference here, for the reason that O'Leary is not the party sought to be charged. Margaret Murphy is the party sued, and, as has already been pointed out, there is no evidence in the record to show that she ever authorized the employment of plaintiffs. Therefore upon that ground she is not liable for the payment of plaintiffs' services.

[4] The second point urged by plaintiffs is that defendant is liable upon the theory that—

"A voluntary acceptance of the benefits of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising from it, so far as the facts are known, or ought to be known to the person accepting." Section 1589, Civ. Code.

It is clear to us, however, that this rule is not available to plaintiffs for the simple reason that there was no evidence offered or received showing that Margaret Murphy ever knew or was in a position to know of the employment of plaintiffs or of the services they were performing in the matter of the settlement of said estate.

In the case of Porter v. Elizalde, supra, it is said:

"It is undoubtedly in general the rule that when one knows that another is rendering him services, and tacitly assents thereto, if nothing more appears the law will imply a provision on his part to pay for such services. The rule is not uniform or absolute, however, but will be recognized or refused according to the circumstances of the particular case in which it is invoked (see Moulin v. Coulumbet, 22 Cal. 508), and when it appears that the services were rendered under an expressed employment by an agent, or by a third person who assumed to act in the interest of the one in whose behalf they were rendered, the authority of that person and the terms of the employment become important factors in determining the liability or the right of recovery. The mere silence of the party will not be held to constitute such assent or acquiescence in the acts of the agent as to amount to a ratification or adoption of these acts, without also considering the circumstances under which the silence existed."

The evidence here shows that it took three weeks for the letter from O'Leary to plaintiffs to reach San Francisco. Within six weeks after the letter arrived final distribution of the estate was granted. Mrs. Murphy was a very old lady, living 80 miles inland, in a disturbed part of Ireland, into which the railroads were not operating, and it appears that it was a matter of risking one's life to make a trip into that part of the country. It is quite evident, we think, from these, and other circumstances appearing from the record, that Mrs. Murphy was in total ignorance of the transactions that were taking place in the settlement of her son's estate. That being so, she cannot be held liable for the payment of plaintiffs' services under the rule contended for.

Appellants seem to lay stress upon the fact that the defendant failed to show a revocation of the proposition of employment made in O'Leary's letter, and it is argued that, in the absence of such revocation, a presumption arises that O'Leary was authorized to employ the plaintiffs. The answer to these contentions is that there was no evidence showing that Mrs. Murphy ever knew of the contents of the O'Leary letter or that he had in fact written any letter at all. Even conceding that such presumption as appellants contend for might arise, it would at best, in view of the other evidence to the contrary in the record, merely raise a conflict, in which event the conclusions of the trial court must prevail. Rice v. Carey, 170 Cal. 748, 151 Pac. 135.

[5] Neither is there any presumption of employment, such as to bind the defendant, arising, as plaintiffs contend, from the fact that plaintiffs are licensed attorneys and as such appeared in this proceeding for the defendant.

An attorney's contract of employment must be proved like any other contract of employment, and if there is shown a lack of authority on the part of one of the contracting parties there is no valid contract. We are satisfied that the conclusions reached by the trial court are correct and are fully supported by the evidence, and the judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

FOUCHT et al. v. HIRNI, County Auditor.
(Civ. 3836.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 18, 1922.)

1. Counties ⇐61—Act allowing additional assistant to county officer in emergency did not create public office.

Pol. Code, § 4041c, as added by St. 1921, p. 220, providing for the employment of an employee by the board of supervisors to assist a county officer in an emergency, did not contemplate the creation of a public office.

2. Officers ⇐1—"Office" and "employment" distinguished.

An "office" is based upon some law which defines the duties appertaining to it, and which fixes the tenure, while an "employment," as distinguished from an office, is based upon a contract with the employee defining his duties, fixing his compensation, and determining the period of employment, and a duty or employment which arises out of contract, and which is dependent for its duration and extent upon the contract, is not an office, and one so employed is not an agent, but a servant, of the person employing him, although the employers may be public officers, and the employment in and about a public work.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employment; Office.]

3. Counties ⇐63 — Emergency assistant to county treasurer not a deputy.

A deputy has power to do any act which his principal may do, and to do the act in his principal's name, while an employee appointed by the supervisors under Pol. Code, § 4041c, as added by St. 1921, p. 220, as an assistant to the county treasurer, not being authorized to act in the name of the officer whom he was employed to assist, nor having power to exercise the duties of the office in the name of its incumbent, was not a deputy.

4. Constitutional law ⇐48—When reasonably possible, construed to be valid.

Statutes should when reasonably possible be so construed as to render them valid and give them force and effect.

5. Officers ⇐100(1)—Payment of wages to one employed by supervisors to assist county treasurer in counties where lump salary not paid did not increase treasurer's compensation.

Pol. Code, § 4240, subd. 5, provides that the salary of county treasurers in counties of the eleventh class shall be $2,800, and one deputy's at $1,800, and section 4290 provides that the salary shall be in full compensation, and section 4024 that every county officer may appoint as many deputies as may be necessary, and where under section 4041c, as added by St. 1921, p. 220, an assistant was appointed to a county treasurer of the eleventh class, such appointment did not increase the treasurer's compensation in violation of Const. art. 11, § 9, providing that compensation should not be increased after the treasurer's election, or during his term of office; such treasurer's compensation not being in a "lump sum" from which his deputies' and assistants' salaries were to be paid.

6. Statutes 72—Act allowing assistants to county officers not invalid for want of uniformity.

Pol. Code, § 4041c, as added by St. 1921, p. 220, providing that supervisors may provide for and allow assistants to county officers in emergency, did not lack uniformity of operation as required by Const. art. 1, § 11, in that it was immediately effective as to the appointment of assistants to county officers whose salaries and the salaries of whose deputies were fixed, while not effective as to county officers whose salaries were fixed in a lump sum from which all deputies' and assistants' salaries were to be paid.

7. Statutes 71—Law applying to persons or things within a class "uniform" if applied to all of class alike.

A law which applies equally to all persons or things within a legitimate class does not violate Const. art. 1, § 11, which requires laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Uniform.]

8. Statutes 89—Act not commencing operation synchronously in all counties not invalid.

Notwithstanding Pol. Code, § 4041c, as added by St. 1921, p. 220, relating to the appointment of assistants to county officers in emergency did not, by reason of two different systems for compensating county officers, go into effect synchronously in all counties, such fact did not violate Const. art. 11, § 4, declaring that the Legislature should establish a system of uniform county governments; it being intended only that the several county governments throughout the state should be of a similar political structure, that is, that each should be governed by the same class of officers, etc.

9. Statutes 100(2)—Act relating to appointment of assistant to county officer, held not in conflict with constitutional provision for general and uniform laws as to county officers.

Pol. Code, § 4041c, as added by St. 1921, p. 220, relating to the appointment of an assistant to a county officer in an emergency, did not create a public office, and so is not in conflict with Const. art. 11, § 5, providing that the Legislature by general and uniform laws shall prescribe the duties and fix the terms of office of all county officers and regulate their compensation in proportion to duties, etc.

10. Statutes 100(2)—Act providing for assistant to county officer in emergency not local or special.

Pol. Code, § 4041c, as added by St. 1921, p. 220, providing for the appointment of an assistant to a county officer in an emergency, being uniform in operation, was not invalid within Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 28, providing that the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws creating offices or prescribing the powers or duties of officers in counties, cities, etc.

11. Counties 24—Act providing for assistants to county officers in emergency not invalid as delegating to supervisors power to control and appropriate county funds.

Pol. Code, § 4041c, as added by St. 1921, p. 220, authorizing the boards of supervisors to provide for emergency assistants to county officers and fix their compensation, does not give boards power to control and appropriate county funds, and so violate Const. art. 11, § 13, providing that the Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, etc., power to make, appropriate, etc., or in any way interfere with any county money, property, or effects, etc., or perform municipal functions.

Mandamus by W. A. Foucht and another against W. J. Hirni, County Auditor, to require respondent to issue a warrant to petitioner for services. Writ granted.

W. W. Middlecoff, of Visalia, for petitioners.

Bradley & Bradley, of Visalia, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel respondent, as auditor of Tulare county, to issue to the petitioner Foucht a warrant for $182, claimed to be due the latter as compensation for certain work done by him in assisting the county treasurer under a contract of employment made by him with the board of supervisors pursuant to section 4041c of the Political Code—a new section added in 1921. Stats. 1921, p. 220. Respondent, who has demurred to the petition, attacks the constitutionality of this Code section upon a number of grounds; and whether this new law is constitutional or not is the sole question presented for our consideration. Though the petition is presented by Foucht and the county, the two appearing as joint petitioners, in our discussion of the case we shall treat the matter, for the sake of brevity, as though Foucht were the sole petitioner.

Section 4041c reads:

"Whenever in the judgment of the board of supervisors of any county it is necessary for the expeditious transaction of the business of any county office, the board by unanimous vote may provide for and allow additional assistance to any county officer. In any such case the board of supervisors shall fix the amount of compensation of such additional employees and shall limit in advance the period of time for which assistance is allowed. The powers granted to the supervisors under the provisions hereof shall not be so exercised as to result in increasing the compensation of any county officer after his election or during his term of office."

Prior to the adoption of this section, one Henry Newman had been elected treasurer of Tulare county, then and now a county of the eleventh class. At the time of Newman's election the law respecting the compensation of the county treasurer in counties of the class to which Tulare county belongs and the treasurer's power to appoint deputies was as follows: By subdivision 5 of section 4240 of the Political Code it was and is provided:

"In counties of the eleventh class, the officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law, or by virtue of their office, the following salaries: * * * The county treasurer, two thousand eight hundred dollars per annum, and one deputy at one thousand eight hundred dollars per annum."

Section 4290 of the Political Code declared then, as it still does, that—

"The salaries and fees provided in this title shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers named in this title either as officers or ex officio officers, their deputies and assistants, unless in this title otherwise provided, and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries provided in this title, unless in this title otherwise provided."

Ever since 1907 section 4024 has provided that—

"Every county * * * officer * * * may appoint as many deputies as may be necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of the duties of his office."

The circumstances of petitioner's employment are as follows: Prior to November 8, 1921, the date of his employment, valid county warrants were presented to the treasurer, but, for want of funds, were not paid. From the time of their presentation these warrants bore interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable by the county. Pol. Code, § 4105. On November 8, 1921, there remained unpaid of such warrants a large number, the total sum due thereon amounting to something like $400,000. At the date of petitioner's employment there was sufficient money in the county treasury to pay all of these interest-bearing warrants. Accordingly the county treasurer, pursuant to section 4106 of the Political Code, gave notice in a newspaper that he was ready to pay the warrants. Thereupon it became necessary for the treasurer to estimate the accrued interest on all of these unpaid warrants before payments could be made. At that time the county treasurer had in his office but one deputy—the only deputy for whom a salary was provided by law. Pol. Code, § 4240, subd. 5. Under these circumstances, the expeditious transaction of the business of the county treasurer's office and the convenience of the public necessitated, in the judgment of the board of supervisors, that additional assistance should be provided and allowed the treasurer for the purpose of estimating the interest on these warrants. Thereupon the board, on November 8, 1921, provided for and allowed additional assistance to the county treasurer for the purpose of estimating the interest on these unpaid warrants. This it did by adopting unanimously a resolution whereby the petitioner here was employed by the board to assist the county treasurer in estimating the accrued interest on the interest-bearing warrants. The resolution fixed petitioner's compensation at $7 per day for the period of 26 days. Petitioner accepted the employment and performed the services for the period mentioned. In due time he presented to the board of supervisors his claim for such services. The claim, which was in proper form, was allowed by the board. Respondent, who, as we have said, is the county auditor, refuses to draw a warrant on the county treasurer authorizing payment of petitioner's claim, although there has at all times been ample money in the proper fund for that purpose. Hence this proceeding.

In support of his claim that section 4041c is unconstitutional and the employment of petitioner unauthorized, respondent contends: (1) That the employment of petitioner to assist the county treasurer worked an increase in the latter's compensation subsequent to his election and during his term of office, in violation of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution; (2) that this Code section is inconsistent with that uniformity which is required by section 11 of article 1 and by section 4 of article 11; (3) that it contravenes section 5 of article 11, which requires the Legislature to regulate the compensation of county officers in proportion to duties; (4) that it is a local or special law, and hence violative of subdivision 28 of section 25 of article 4; and (5) that it involves an unlawful delegation of power, in contravention of section 13 of article 11.

It is not possible for any Legislature, however farsighted it may be in anticipating future conditions, to foresee and provide against those occasional and extraordinary conditions of public business which inevitably must arise in many of the counties of the state from time to time between legislative sessions. Such emergencies, when they do arise, cannot be successfully taken care of by inflexible strait-jacket legislation, rigidly fitted to those conditions which are known to and can be perceived by the Legislature when the law is passed. To meet such unforeseen, abnormal situations as they present themselves, a law possessing the requisite elasticity and conformability, such as section 4041c, for example, is necessary. The section in question seems to be the result of an honest and enlightened endeavor on the part of the Legislature to deal equitably and fairly with a vital problem; and in any consideration of respondent's attacks upon this law we must never lose sight of the fact that, to justify the judiciary in declaring invalid such a statute, passed by a co-ordinate branch of the government, its conflict with the Constitution should be clear and positive.

[1] The solution of some of the questions presented by respondent's argument against the constitutionality of section 4041c depends upon whether the section contemplates the creation of an office or the mere employment of an employee or servant of the board of supervisors. At the outset, therefore, it is essential to consider whether, in employing assistance under this new Code section, the supervisors create a county office. We are satisfied that they do not.

"A public office," says our Supreme Court in Coulter v. Pool, 201 Pac. 120, "is ordinarily and generally defined to be the right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, the tenure of which is not transient, occasional, or incidental, by which for a given period an individual is invested with power to perform a public function for the benefit of the public."

* * * The most general characteristic of a public officer, which distinguishes him from a mere employee, is that a public duty is delegated and intrusted to him, as agent, the performance of which is an exercise of a part of the governmental functions of the particular political unit for which he, as agent, is acting. There are other incidents which ordinarily distinguish a public officer, such, for instance, as a fixed tenure of position, the exaction of a public oath of office, and, perhaps, an official bond, the liability to be called to account as a public offender for misfeasance or nonfeasance in office and the payment of his salary from the general county treasury."

Measuring the provisions of this Code section by the foregoing definition, it seems evident that it does not contemplate the creation of a public office, but provides only for the employment of a mere employee or servant of the board of supervisors to assist a county officer whenever an emergency arises—such an emergency as, in the judgment of the board of supervisors, makes it necessary in the expeditious transaction of the county's business that additional assistance be provided. The instant case affords a good illustration of the nature of the employment under the power vested in the several boards of supervisors by this Code section. Here petitioner was temporarily employed, under contract, at a fixed per diem, to assist in expediting a part of the business of a county office by making certain interest calculations.

No oath of office or official bond is exacted from the person who is employed by the board of supervisors under section 4041c. There is no fixed tenure of office. On the contrary, the period of employment contemplated by the section is temporary and transient. The employment is but incidental and occasional. It begins and ends with the emergency which furnishes its reason and justification.

[2] An office, as a general rule, is based upon some law which defines the duties appertaining to it and which fixes the tenure. The county engineer act which was before the court in Coulter v. Pool, supra, was such a law. There the Legislature attempted to create an office; for the statute purported to define the duties of a county engineer and to fix his term at four years. An employment, as distinguished from an office, is, as a rule, based upon a contract with the employee, defining his duties, fixing his compensation, and determining the period of his employment. As a general rule, a duty or employment which arises out of a contract, and which is dependent for its duration and extent upon the terms of the contract, is not an office. One so employed is not an agent of the state; he is the servant or employee of the person or persons employing him, although the latter may be public officers and the employment may be in and about a public work or position. McDaniel v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 444; White v. Alameda, 124 Cal. 95, 56 Pac. 795; Patton v. Board of Health, 127 Cal. 388, 59 Pac. 702, 78 Am. St. Rep. 66; People v. Wheeler, 136 Cal. 652, 69 Pac. 435; City of Tampa v. Kaunitz, 39 Fla. 683, 23 South. 416, 63 Am. St. Rep. 202; 29 Cyc. 1366. In City of Tampa v. Kaunitz, supra, the Supreme Court of Florida held that a person employed by a city council under a contract to assist the assessor in making an assessment is not a public officer, but merely an employee of the council.

[3, 4] Nor can the person employed under this new section be regarded as a deputy by reason of such employment. His employment by the supervisors does not authorize him to act in the name of the county officer whom he is employed to assist. He has no power to exercise the duties of an office in the name of its incumbent. A deputy, by the very act and authority which constitutes him such, has power to do any act which his principal may do, and to do the act in his principal's name. Not so, however, as to an assistant employed by a board of supervisors under this section of the Political Code. Take the present case, for instance. The petitioner here was employed to assist the county treasurer by making and tabulating certain arithmetical calculations. That is, he was employed to compute certain interest charges against the county. But this did not interfere with the county treasurer's right to exercise sole control of his office. All the political functions of that office remained vested in the county treasurer, who would continue to exercise them himself, when present, and in his absence they would be exercised by the deputy treasurer in the name of and as the act of his principal. In accordance with the maxim, "Ut res magis valeat quam pereat," statutes should, when reasonably possible, be so construed as to render them valid and give them force and effect. Section 4041c is readily susceptible of such a construction that an assistant employed thereunder shall not be deemed to be vested with any power the due exercise whereof can, by any possibility, displace any of the authority or power of the county officer whom he is employed to assist, or interfere with the performance by such officer of the functions with which the law has clothed him. The county officer and his deputy or deputies will continue to exercise all the discretionary power that appertains to the office, the assistant employed by the supervisors simply standing by and doing what he is told to do in helping or aiding the county officer or his deputies. The county officer continues as before to exercise and in his own person to represent the sovereign power of the state. The servant of the board, temporarily employed under a contract to assist the county officer in performing certain of the duties appertaining to the office, does not in his own person represent any sovereign power. Ventura County v. Clay, 112 Cal. 65, 44 Pac. 488, a case cited by respondent, is not in point. There the person who was employed by the supervisors was not employed to assist the tax collector; he was employed to perform the functions of the tax collector. He entirely supplanted that county officer in the performance of a part of the duties appertaining to the office of tax collector. Instead of assisting him, he actually displaced the county tax collector, with the result that in that case the board of supervisors, contrary to law, undertook to create a county office. That is not the case here.

Nor is there any substantial ground for respondent's fear that the person employed to assist the county officer might be deputized by the latter, with the result that such officer might thus secure, in effect, one more salaried deputy than he is allowed by statute. If the assistant employed by the supervisors were made a deputy by the county officer, it would not be by reason of any authority therefor conferred by section 4041c. Nor would such deputy be entitled to receive, as deputy, any compensation under that section of the Political Code. Any wage paid him under his employment by the board of supervisors would be solely for the work done by him as an employee of the board employed temporarily to assist the county officer during an emergency when the expeditious transaction of the business of such county office necessitates such extra assistance. We may not assume that the supervisors will continue the employment longer than the emergency which makes it necessary, nor that they otherwise will abuse the power vested in them by this Code section.

[5] Concluding, as we do, that plaintiff was but an employee, and not an officer, and that section 4041c, under which he was employed, contemplates, not the creation of a public office, but a temporary and occasional employment under contract in times when the county is confronted with emergent situations, we now approach the questions suggested by counsel's attacks upon the constitutionality of this Code section.

There is no merit in the claim that plaintiff's employment to assist the county treasurer increased the latter's compensation in violation of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution, which provides that the compensation of a county officer "shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office." The Legislature, by appropriate legislation and for the purpose of regulating the compensation of all county officers in this state in proportion to duties, has classified the counties by population, as is required by section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution. In thus regulating their compensation, the Legislature has adopted a twofold plan or scheme for compensating county officers. That is to say, some county officers are allowed a gross sum out of which to compensate themselves for their own personal services and likewise to pay the expenses of their offices, such, for example, as clerk hire and the salaries of their deputies. This method we shall designate as the "lump sum" system of compensation. Other county officers, the county treasurer of Tulare county, for instance, are allowed fixed amounts for their own personal salaries and separate and distinct amounts for deputy hire or other expenses. Thus in Tulare county it is provided that the county treasurer shall receive as compensation for his own services $2,800 per annum, and, in addition, is allowed one deputy at a fixed salary of $1,800 per annum, both payable out of the county treasury. The result is that, in addition, to the 58 classes of counties which have been classified by population for the purpose of regulating compensations in proportion to duties, we have the county officers throughout the state divided into a twofold classification based upon the method whereby they receive their compensations, those in one class receiving their compensation under the "lump sum" system, and those in the other class receiving as compensation for their personal services fixed and definite salaries. In thus classifying county officers by these two methods of compensation, the Legislature has kept within the limits of its constitutional powers, because "under either rule a compensation proportionate to duties may be secured." Tulare County v. May, 118 Cal. 303, 308, 50 Pac. 427, 429.

In counties where the "lump sum" system prevails, any increase after the election of a county officer of the gross amount allowed him for the compensation of himself and deputies necessarily would work an increase in his compensation during his term of office, in violation of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution. Such increase in the gross amount allowed for the compensation of the principal and his deputies would indirectly add to the sum allowed the principal as compensation for his own personal services, as is clearly pointed out by the Supreme Court in Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161, particularly in the concurring opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Beatty. But where, as in the instant case, the principal is allowed a fixed salary for his own services, and his deputies or assistants are likewise allowed fixed salaries, the principal's compensation is not augmented by any increase in the number of his deputies or assistants or by any increase in the salaries of such deputies or assistants.

"* * * Where the statute provides a fixed salary for the officer and a separate allowance for expenses of his office, * * * and a fixed salary for a certain number of deputies or clerks, all payable out of the county treasury, an increase of such separate allowance for expenses or for deputies, whether in the number of deputies or the amount paid to each, is not a violation of the constitutional provision that 'the compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office.'" Newman v. Lester, 11 Cal. App. 581, 105 Pac. 785.

From this it follows that the payment of wages to an employee employed by the board of supervisors of Tulare county under section 4041c of the Political Code to assist the county treasurer of that county does not increase the latter's compensation, since his salary—$2,800—will remain the same.

In those counties where the "lump sum" system obtains, section 4041c will not be available for the employment of an assistant to assist a county officer who was elected prior to the adoption of this new law. In such counties the operation of the law will be postponed until the expiration of the terms of those officers who were elected before this Code section went into effect. This is not because the section expressly exempts any county or any county officer from its operation, but solely because the constitutional inhibition against increasing the compensation of a county officer after his election or during his term of office effects a temporary abatement in the operation of the section within those counties where the county officers are compensated by the "lump sum" method. This want of present universality of operation throughout the entire state, due to the fact that the section is not immediately operative in the "lump sum" counties, seems to be respondent's principal ground of attack. We pass, therefore, to a consideration of this objection.

[6] Our Constitution provides that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." Section 11, art. 1. As we understand respondent's argument, he does not claim that section 4041c is not uniform in its operation throughout the state in so far as the power conferred thereby may be exercised without violating the constitutional inhibition against increasing the compensation of a county officer after his election or during his term of office. Respondent's argument, as we understand it, runs substantially as follows: If the power to employ additional assistance under section 4041c be exercised in the "lump sum" counties prior to the expiration of the terms of the present officeholders in those counties, there inevitably must ensue a violation of the constitutional interdiction against increasing a county officer's compensation after his election or during his term of office; if we endeavor to shun this Scylla, we necessarily shall fall into the Charybdis of nonuniformity of operation, for the reason that, though this Code section is immediately operative in one class of counties, its operation in the other class—the "lump sum" class—must be postponed until the expiration of the terms of the present officeholders, thus producing a condition of nonuniformity as to the time of operation in the several counties of the state. This, in substance, is the argument for respondent, as we understand it. We think it more plausible than sound.

Without doubt, section 4041c is a law of a general nature. Its subject-matter—the power to employ additional assistance in any county of the state whenever necessary to expedite the business of a county officer—is a subject of a general nature. It relates to a matter of equal interest in every part of the state, and is general in its aims and in the object which it has in view. In form, it is a general law. It purports to apply equally to all the counties of the state. It is therefore without doubt, a law of a general nature, and as such must have that uniformity of operation which is contemplated by section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution.

If this Code section were a clear and unequivocal attempt to evade the constitutional mandate as to uniformity of operation by expressly and intentionally confining its operation to a limited class of counties, as was the case in Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142, 8 Pac. 813, we would unhesitatingly declare it to be unconstitutional. Such legislation, though the purpose be disguised by the use of general language, is not to be tolerated. But we can discover no such attempted evasion here. We look in vain for any evidence of an intention to limit the law's operation to any particular class of counties. If it does not become operative at the same time in all the counties of the state, it is because the Constitution itself has temporarily abated its operation in a certain class of counties—the counties where the "lump sum" system prevails. Upon the expiration of the terms of the incumbents in the "lump sum" counties the section will be equally operative in all parts of the state, if not repealed in the meantime.

The whole question, then, resolves itself into this: Does this law, on its face applicable alike and immediately to every county in the state, lack the constitutional requisite of uniformity of operation because it is immediately operative in one class of counties while in the other class its operation is temporarily deferred by the Constitution itself by reason of the inhibition against any increase of a county officer's compensation after his election or during his term of office? This question must, we think, be answered in favor of the constitutionality of the law.

[7] "The word 'uniform' in the Constitution does not mean universal. The section [section 11, art. 1, of the Const.] intends simply that the effect of general laws shall be the same to and upon all persons who stand in the same relation to the law—that is, all the facts of whose cases are substantially the same." Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 147, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057. A law which applies equally to all persons or things within a legitimate class does not violate the provision requiring laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation. Ex parte Sohneke, 148 Cal. 266, 82 Pac. 956. 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, 113 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 475; Johnson v. Gunn, 148 Cal. 749, 84 Pac. 665. "It has been uniformly held that a law is general which applies to all of a class—the classification being a proper one—and that the requirement of uniformity is satisfied if it applies to all of the class alike." Hellman v. Shoulters, supra. The classification is a proper one if it is founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction. City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 251, 27 Pac. 604; Johnson v. Gunn, supra.

In the present case we have a classification founded upon a constitutional distinction; in other words, a legitimate classification. Section 4041c has not created the classification. It makes no attempt to classify counties or county officers. It is the Constitution which, indirectly, has made the classification. The new law is simply confronted by a situation growing out of the existence of previous valid legislation and the effect thereon of section 9 of article 11 of our Constitution. That is, the only reason why this Code section becomes operative in different counties at different times is because the Constitution itself works that result by making the law inapplicable during the present term of those county officers who are compensated by the "lump sum" method. The Constitution itself creates the class, and section 4041c operates uniformly upon all persons standing within that class. In order to constitute the uniformity of operation specified in the Constitution, it is not necessary that the general law shall operate alike upon all the subjects or persons to which it applies independent of all other considerations. It is enough that it operates uniformly upon all persons standing in the same category and upon rights and things in the same relation. People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 442, 18 Pac. 413.

In People v. Henshaw, supra, it was held that the term "uniform operation," as used in the Constitution, does not involve, as a necessary essential, an identity of time of operation, so as to make it necessary that the act shall take effect at the same time upon all the subjects to be governed by it. The court in that case says:

"This argument [the argument that the act lacks uniformity of operation because it is to take effect in different cities at different times] involves the consideration of what is meant by the term 'uniform operation,' as used in the Constitution. Does it involve, as an essential, identity of time, so as to make it necessary that it take effect at the same time upon all subjects to be governed by it? * * * If the law operates equally upon all the objects embraced within it, when they come within the circle or scope of its authority, the uniformity of operation contemplated by the Constitution is attained. * * * If it meets every contingency when it arises and treats all the contingencies of like character in like manner, it is uniform in its operation. We do not think identity as to the time of operation essential, except where it is coupled with identity of facts or circumstances. Under the same circumstances, existing at the same period of time, the law must apply equally at the same time, or uniformity of operation is not attained. Beyond that, identity as to time of application is not necessary." 76 Cal. 444, 18 Pac. 416. (Italics ours.)

Tested by these principles, it must be held that section 4041c is uniform in its operation. It operates equally upon all objects embraced within it the very moment that they come within the scope and circle of its authority. When the circumstances existing in any number of counties in any given period of time are alike, the section affects in like manner and at the same time all of the counties as to which there exists such identity of circumstances. For these reasons we conclude that the section is in no sense opposed to the uniformity of operation required by section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution.

[8] The next question presented is this: Is section 4041c inconsistent with the uniformity required by that mandatory provision of the Constitution which declares that "the Legislature shall establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the state"? Article 11, § 4. If by this no more is intended than that the several county governments throughout the state shall be of similar political structure—that is, that each shall be governed by the same class of offices—so that each shall have a board of supervisors, a district attorney, a sheriff, a treasurer, auditor, etc., then it cannot be said that section 4041c impairs that uniformity in the established system of county governments which is contemplated by this section of the Constitution, for the reason that an assistant employed by the board of supervisors under this Code section is in no sense an officer of the county.

The decision of our Supreme Court in Coulter v. Pool, supra, lends some support to the view that the uniformity in the system of county governments which the Constitution contemplates means no more than uniformity in the political structure of the several counties; that is, that each shall be governed by the same kind of officers. In that case the court differentiated the county engineer act—the act which it held to be unconstitutional—from the law library act considered in the case of Board of Law Library Trustees v. Board of Supervisors, 99 Cal. 571, 34 Pac. 244, upon the ground that, though the latter act left to the option of the different counties the matter of the establishment of a law library, nevertheless “such institutions are not part of the system of county government, at least so far as the execution of ‘political functions’ is concerned.” (Italics ours.) But, be this as it may, even if the uniformity contemplated by this constitutional requirement does mean more than a uniformity of political structure—even if it means, as it probably does, that the same powers shall be vested in each and every board of supervisors throughout the entire state—nevertheless it cannot be held that section 4041c subverts the necessary uniformity in the general plan or scheme of county governments. In Coulter v. Pool, supra, it is said that—

“The Constitution contemplates and commands that the system of county governments shall be uniform throughout the state, except in those special instances where the Constitution itself sanctions a departure from uniformity.” (Italics ours.)

Since the sole ground for claiming that section 4041c is inconsistent with a uniform system of county governments is that its operation does not commence synchronously in all of the counties of the state, and since this want of identity in the time of operation is a result worked by the Constitution itself by reason of the existence of the two different systems for compensating county officers, it follows that this is a case where the Constitution, ex proprio vigore, sanctions a departure from uniformity in the system of county governments.

[9] It next is claimed that section 4041c conflicts with that provision of section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution whereby it is provided that the Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall prescribe the duties and fix the terms of office of all county “officers,” and shall regulate their compensation in proportion to duties, and, for that purpose, shall classify the counties by population. The obvious answer to this objection is that an assistant employed under this new Code section has no term of office and is not a county officer, but a mere servant or employee of the board of supervisors, employed temporarily to meet an emergent situation. For this reason section 5 of article 11 is inapplicable. The case is within the principle of those decisions which hold that the board of supervisors of any county may, by contract, employ the services of a physician, attorney, etc., fix his compensation, and prescribe his duties. The power of the board to make such contracts has often been upheld. People v. Wheeler, supra; Lassen County v. Shinn, 88 Cal. 510, 26 Pac. 365; Power v. May, 123 Cal. 147, 55 Pac. 796. There is no merit in the objection.

[10] Equally devoid of merit is the contention that section 4041c is a local and special law, and as such violative of subdivision 28 of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution, which provides that—

“The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws * * * creating offices, or prescribing the powers or duties of officers in counties, cities, city and counties, townships, election or school districts.”

This section of the Political Code does not attempt to create an office; and what has been said is a sufficient answer to this objection. Moreover, the section is not a local or special law. By its terms it operates throughout the state, in each and every county thereof. If it does not immediately become operative in some counties, the reason is extrinsic, not intrinsic, it is a result due solely to the fact that, by virtue of an express provision of the Constitution itself—that which forbids any increase of a county officer's compensation after his election or during his term of office—the operation of this Code section is temporarily held in abeyance in certain counties. Such a law is neither local nor special.

[11] Finally, it is contended that this Code section violates that provision of the Constitution (article 11, § 13) which provides that—

“The Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association or individual any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise or in any way interfere with any county, city, town or municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or assessments or to perform any municipal functions whatever.”

The claim that section 4041c conflicts with this clause of the Constitution is based upon the contention that it gives to boards of supervisors the power to control and appropriate county funds. There is no force in the objection. The supervisors do not control or appropriate any county moneys. They are merely vested with a discretionary power to incur the expense incident to the employment of assistants employed to help in the transaction of the business of the county, just as they do when they contract for the services of a physician to attend upon the indigent sick and dependent poor of the county (People v. Wheeler, supra), or when they employ special counsel to defend or prosecute suits to which the county is a party or to collect moneys due it (Lassen County v. Shinn, supra; Power v. May, supra). Such discretionary power is frequently reposed in county legislative bodies, and the expense resulting from an exercise thereof does not involve the control or appropriation of county moneys or property by any "special commission," "private corporation," "company," "association," or "individual." See Tulare County v. May, supra, 118 Cal. 308, 50 Pac. 427. Of course, boards of supervisors have no right to waste or give away moneys belonging to the county, or to expend them otherwise than in the interest of the public. Power, however, must be reposed somewhere. We may not assume that it will be abused. And for the purpose of affording, temporarily, such additional assistance as may be necessary to meet those unexpected situations in the transaction of the county's business which inevitably must arise between sessions of the Legislature, we know of no more suitable repository of the power to employ the needed assistants than the board of supervisors—the local legislative body the members whereof are chosen by the electors of the county.

In none of his assaults upon the section of the Political Code here under attack has respondent shown any clear and positive conflict with the state's organic law. Wherefore it is ordered that the peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

CHAPMAN v. RUDOLPH, City Treasurer,
et al. (Civ. 4200.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 20, 1922.)

1. Municipal corporations ⚡488, 489(5)—Assessment for street improvements not objected to at proper time not subject to collateral attack.

An assessment for street improvements, occurring after the city council had regularly acquired jurisdiction to order the work done, no protest having been made, nor appeal taken under Vrooman Act, § 5½, as added by St. 1909, p. 31, and section 11, and no notice having been given to the city treasurer of any objection to the issuance of the bond as authorized by Bond Act, § 4, cannot be collaterally attacked.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡488, 489(5)—Failure to appeal from assessment waived objection that contractor had offered rebates.

Property owner's failure to appeal from an assessment for street benefits waived an objection that contractor, in violation of city charter, offered to make rebates to property owners paying without litigation.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡519(5)—Defective sale by city held not to affect validity of assessment.

The fact that city made a defective sale of property against which assessments for benefits had been made does not affect the contractor's lien on the property.

4. Constitutional law ⚡290(6)—Municipal corporations ⚡407(1)—Bond act provides for due process of law.

The Bond Act, providing for issuance of bonds for the cost of street improvements, provides for due process of law.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡488, 489(5)—Property owner making no attempt to prevent bond issue held in no position to complain.

Where property owner made no attempt to prevent bond issue for street improvements, she was in no position to complain.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡567(2)—Allegations as to jurisdictional requirements for street assessments sufficient.

A statement in an answer setting up a claim under a street assessment that the council "duly gave, made, and passed the said resolution ordering the work" was a sufficient allegation of all jurisdictional requirements.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Ella J. Chapman against Paul Rudolph, as Treasurer of the City of San Jose, and the Elliott & Horne Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Elliott & Horne Company appeals. Reversed.

Kirkbride & Gordon, of San Mateo, for appellant.

Ralph C. McComish and C. C. Coolidge, both of San Jose, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. This is an action to quiet title to certain real property. The complaint is in the usual form. It is alleged therein that defendant Rudolph is the duly appointed and acting treasurer of the city of San Jose, and that the defendant Elliott & Horne Company is a corporation; that both defendants assert an interest in, or lien upon, the land described in the complaint, adverse to the claim and ownership of plaintiff, and that such claim is asserted wholly without right.

The city treasurer filed a general denial. Defendant Elliott & Horne Company also denied ownership in plaintiff, and, as an affirmative defense, set up an interest in the land arising under a sale for nonpayment of a bond issued for street improvements.

The work for which the bond was issued was alleged to have been performed pursuant to the provisions of the city charter of San Jose, of the so-called Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, as amended), and of the Street Improvement Bond Act approved in 1893 (St. 1893, p. 33). The contract called for the grading of the street, the installation of a concrete base thereon, and an asphalt top. The issues in the case involve the validity of the award of the contract and certain subsequent proceedings. No objection was made to the jurisdiction originally acquired by the city council to order the work performed. Trial was had and judgment went for plaintiff. Defendant Elliott & Horne Company has appealed from the judgment, after denial of its motion for a new trial. Defendant Rudolph has no further interest in the result of the litigation, and has not appealed.

Plaintiff claimed below, and does here, that the assessment upon which defendant relied to prove his interest in the land was void for the reasons: (1) That the award was not made to the lowest bidder; (2) that the work was not done "after the award"; and, (3) that a defective sale was made by the city treasurer.

With reference to the first and second objections, it appears in evidence that there were two bids presented for the doing of the work, one by Ira T. Bridges, for 8 cents per square foot; the other by the Raisch Improvement Company for 40 cents. By a unanimous vote of the council the bid of Bridges was rejected and the contract was awarded to the Raisch Improvement Company, it being determined by the council that this company was the lowest regular responsible bidder. At the session of the council when the contract was let, it appeared that Bridges was a plasterer, and had no asphalt plant or roller. It also appeared that the Raisch Improvement Company had, prior to this time, done work upon the street, in front of the lot in question, under a private contract. This work was performed at the request of the owner of the lot, and consisted in the grading and putting in of a concrete base upon the assurance and with the understanding that the owner would sign a contract for the same. It further appeared that when the asphalt surface was ready for placement the owner refused to sign, and indicated that he would not pay for the improvement. Bridges, in presenting his bid, intended to avail himself of this work which was performed by the Raisch Improvement Company, and merely intended under his bid to furnish the asphalt surface.

These facts were before the city council at the time the contract was let, and, whether the board concluded that by its action it would assist the Raisch Improvement Company in this irregular manner to obtain its pay for the work it had performed, or whether it determined that the Raisch Improvement Company was the lowest responsible bidder, as the minutes show, it is impossible for us to say.

The question of what discretionary powers public authorities are vested with in determining who is the lowest responsible bidder, and when and under what circumstances their decision will be interfered with, are considerations which, in view of the conclusion we have reached, we do not think we are here called upon to discuss or decide.

[1] The defects in the assessment here claimed relate to questions of procedure occurring after the council had regularly acquired jurisdiction to order the work done. No protest against the work was made under section 5½ of the Vrooman Act, as added by St. 1909, p. 31, as therein provided for, nor was any appeal taken therefrom under section 11 of that statute; and no notice to the city treasurer was filed against the issuance of the bond as permitted by the Bond Act.

Under these circumstances it is the claim of appellant that, these provisions having afforded respondent ample opportunity to remedy the alleged irregularities, and she having failed to avail herself thereof, she is estopped for urging the same to her benefit. It is further claimed that, as the record shows that this was the only parcel of land affected by the assessment, the owner thereof had it within her power to take over the entire contract, and thus recoup herself by any profit arising therefrom, and, having failed to do so, she waived the objection to the price at which the award was made, and that such failure also operated as an estoppel against her.

We are of the opinion that counsel is correct in these contentions. The purpose and effect of the provisions of section 4 of the Bond Act and the other curative provisions hereinabove referred to have been fully considered and discussed by the Supreme Court in numerous cases, and the conclusion reached that they remedy any procedural irregularities such as are here claimed, provided only that the resolution of intention of the council to do the work has been actually published, and the notice of improvement posted as provided by the street law. No useful purpose would be subserved by a review of these authorities. See Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 80 Pac. 81; Watkinson v. Vaughn, 182 Cal. 55, 186 Pac. 753, and cases cited; Empire Securities Co. v. Matthews, 179 Cal. 239, 176 Pac. 160.

Here it is not questioned that the council had jurisdiction to make the improvements. No protest or objection having been made to the proceedings, and no appeal having been taken therefrom, and the assessment for the work having been levied, the assessment cannot be collaterally attacked in a suit to quiet title for irregularities such as are here claimed.

[2] For the same reasons the further claim that the contract of the Raisch Improvement Company was violated in consequence of an agreement on its part to make certain rebates or deductions to those who would pay without litigation in the event that it was awarded the contract is without merit. Failure to appeal is a waiver of this defect, as this provision of the charter is not jurisdictional. Smith v. Lightston, 182 Cal. 41, 45, 186 Pac. 769. Aside from this, the charter of the city of San Jose only voids contracts other than those of the property owners who were parties to the agreement. Here the parties never entered into any such agreement. True, there was an offer to rebate, but it was never accepted by the then owners of the lot, and they were the only parties concerned with the assessment. The proceedings were therefore in no manner affected by this charter provision.

[3-5] Nor does the fact, as claimed, that the sale was invalid destroy defendant's lien. Assuming this to be a fact, and it seems to be conceded, it in no manner affected the validity of the bond or the lien of defendant. Faxon v. All Persons, 166 Cal. 707, 137 Pac. 919, L. R. A. 1916B, 1209; Burns v. Hiatt, 149 Cal. 617, 87 Pac. 196, 117 Am. St. Rep. 157; Klumpke v. Henley, 24 Cal. App. 35, 140 Pac. 289, 313. The assessment and bond being valid, plaintiff is not entitled to quiet title against defendants' lien except upon making payment. Ellis v. Witmer, 134 Cal. 249, 66 Pac. 301; Hayne v. San Francisco, 174 Cal. 185, 162 Pac. 625; nor is there any merit in the further contention that the Bond Act itself is invalid as not providing for "due process of law." German Savings & Loan Society v. Ramish, 138 Cal. 120, 69 Pac. 89, 70 Pac. 1067; Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057. Aside from this, a lot owner is in no position to complain of the issuance of a bond where he has made no attempt to prevent such issue. Ahlman v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 40 Cal. App. 395, 181 Pac. 238.

[6] And, finally, it is contended that defendant's pleadings are defective. Assuming the denial of plaintiff's title to have been insufficient, this did not affect the affirmative defense set forth which alleged the performance of the work. The objection that this defense is also defectively pleaded for the reason that it fails to contain recitals of the complete proceedings of the council leading up to the assessment is without merit. After the recital of certain proceedings, the answer alleges that the council "duly gave, made, and passed their certain resolution ordering work," etc. Such recital is a sufficient allegation of all the jurisdictional requirements. Pacific Paving Co. v. Bolton, 97 Cal. 8, 31 Pac. 625, Los Angeles Paving Co. v. Los Angeles Foundry Co., 181 Cal. 685, 186 Pac. 593.

For the reasons given, the judgment declaring plaintiff to be the owner of the land in question free and clear of the claim of defendant is erroneous, and the same should be, and it is hereby, reversed.

LONG BEACH FISHERIES CO. v. CURTIS CORPORATION. (Civ. 3851.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 26, 1922.)

1. Evidence — 471(2)—Question calling for conclusion of witness held objectionable.

In an action on a contract in which defendant agreed to purchase tuna fish during season and furnish certain quantities daily to plaintiff, a question asked witness for plaintiff as to whether there were fish available in the markets during season, which could have been purchased by any one, to supply the quantities required by the contract, was objectionable as calling for a conclusion, where the witness did not qualify as an expert.

2. Sales — 416(2)—Evidence of buyer's possible profits held admissible on question of damages.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3308, 3354, in buyer's action for a seller's breach of contract to furnish certain quantities of tuna fish daily during season, evidence of profits which would reasonably have accrued to the buyer had the fish been delivered was admissible on question of damages.

3. Sales — 181(11)—Evidence held not to support finding that seller refused to deliver part of goods.

In buyer's action for seller's breach of contract, in which the buyer agreed to assign all its interest in certain barge equipment, and the seller agreed to accept on account of and deliver to the buyer at a charge of $10 per ton all fish that might be delivered to the seller's barge from certain named boats, evidence held insufficient to support a finding that the seller failed and refused to deliver to the buyer certain quantities of fish.

4. Sales — 71(2)—Provision for delivery of 20 tons of fish a day average held to mean average of the days of the week.

Under a contract clause providing that the seller was to purchase a sufficient amount of tuna fish during season to furnish the buyer with an approximate delivery of 20 tons per day "average," held, that the parties intended the average to be made of the days of each week, and not of all the days of the season.

5. Sales 101—Buyer's default not ground for rescission by seller himself in default.

Where the seller was in default in delivering the quantity of fish provided by the contract, he could not make the buyer's failure to pay a shrinkage charge the basis for a rescission of the contract.

6. Appeal and error 959(1)—Pleading 236(1)—Allowance of amendments to pleadings is discretionary with the trial court.

The allowance of amendments to pleadings is largely discretionary with the trial court, and an order of that character will not be disturbed on appeal, unless prejudice has resulted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the Long Beach Fisheries Company against the Curtis Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Daly & Daly, of Long Beach, for appellant.

P. E. Keeler, of Long Beach, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This action is one for an accounting and for damages alleged to have resulted from the breach of a contract. For convenience the plaintiff and respondent will be referred to as the company, and the defendant and appellant as the corporation. Both are engaged in the business of canning fish. The agreement in question constituted a joint fishing arrangement. One of the principal objects intended to be accomplished was to make such provision that both would be able to run their fish canning operations continuously. The writing reads as follows:

"This agreement entered into this first day of August, 1919, the consideration of which is the mutual advantages enjoyed by both parties thereto by and between the Curtis Corporation, party of the first part, and Long Beach Fisheries Company, party of the second part; both parties hereto agree as follows:

"First. The second party agrees to assign all their right, title and interest to the first party in certain boats and barge equipment which they may have heretofore arranged for during the tuna season of 1919.

"Second. Second party agrees to pay first party the sum of ten dollars per ton as the expense of barging and tendering upon fish purchased by first party and delivered to second party.

"Third. Second party agrees in addition to said ten dollars per ton barging and tendering charge to pay first party the sum of ninety-five dollars per ton for each and every ton of blue fin tuna delivered to second party's cannery by first party, provided, however, should the first party find it necessary or convenient to pay more or less than ninety-five dollars per ton for said blue fin tuna that the price so paid by first party, more or less than ninety-five dollars per ton, should be paid by second party to first party, the second party having been first notified by first party of their intention to pay such different amount.

"Fourth. First party agrees to use their best ability to the purchase of sufficient blue fin tuna during the tuna season of 1919 to furnish the second party with an approximate delivery of twenty tons per day of blue fin tuna average, it being understood the first party retains the privilege of first supplying itself with a daily capacity of twenty tons from purchases made, with the exception, however, that the second party shall not be expected to take fish from the first party on either one of Friday, Saturday or Sunday nights of each week, at the first party's option.

"Fifth. Should the first party in endeavoring to fulfill this agreement purchase fish which shall become unfit for canning while same is in the possession of either party hereto to the financial loss upon said spoiled fish shall be borne by the two parties hereto in the same ratio as the amount of spoiled fish shall bear to the amounts of fish received by the respective parties hereto during that calendar month in which such spoiled fish shall have been obtained.

"Sixth. It is mutually agreed and understood that the first party in maintaining sufficient barge and tender service for the carrying out of this agreement shall, so far as possible, accept on account of the second party and deliver to the second party at a sole charge of ten dollars per ton all such fish as may be delivered to the barge of the first party from any one of the following boats: Washington, I. S. E. 1, I. S. E. 2, The Explorer and Protector, the risk of spoilage and transportation, however, being taken by second party hereto without recourse.

"Seventh. It is the intention of this contract that the fish canneries of the respective parties hereto shall, so far as possible, be kept supplied with such fish as may enable them to operate each working day of the week, provided, however, that all the other provisions of this contract are considered as paramount.

"Eighth. The fish in this contract are defined as being blue fin tuna solely and not referring in any way to albacore or other species of fish, with the exception of the fish caught by the five particular boats named.

"Ninth. In the event of spoiled fish being suffered by either parties hereto desiring to take advantage of the provisions in paragraph five hereof said party shall immediately notify the other party hereto and hold said spoiled fish for a minimum period of twenty-four hours for the inspection of the other party hereto.

"Tenth. The tuna season whenever mentioned herein is defined as ending October 1st, 1919.

"Eleventh. In the event that during any one of seven days starting from the first of September, 1919, during the period of this agreement, party of the first part is unable to purchase in the aggregate sixty tons of blue fin tuna for the use of either or both parties hereto said first party is authorized to thereupon, at its option cease said tender and barge service and said second party is in the event of the discontinuance of said barge and tender service under said condition to reimburse said first party at the rate of twenty dollars per diem from date of discontinuance to October 1, 1919.

"The Curtis Corporation

"(Party of the First Part)

"By Alex B. Stewart, Pres.

"Long Beach Fisheries Company

"(Party of the Second Part),

"By. R. A. Nickell, Pres."

The trial court found that this agreement was modified by mutual consent of the parties by the following letter:

"Long Beach, Cal., August 1, 1919.

"The Curtis Corporation, Long Beach, California—Gentlemen: As provided in our agreement of this date you are to accept the delivery of fish from The Explorer and Protector two seine boats operating out of this port, until further notice from us in writing. You will therefore please consider this fish your own fish and purchase same as if it were such.

"You are also authorized not to make any charge against us of fifty cents per ton, or any other amount, for state tax for fish purchased as we hereby agree to take care of this matter ourselves with the State Fish and Game Commission and pay the tax, whatever it is, on all fish delivered to us by yourselves. Yours very truly, Long Beach Fisheries Company, by R. A. Nickell."

Several of appellant's contentions have merit, but the error committed in the admission of evidence upon the subject of damages under the second cause of action is of such a character as to require a new trial.

Assuming that the evidence showed the corporation to have broken its contract concerning the delivery of blue fin tuna, it was incumbent upon the company in order to make out a case for damages for such breach to prove by competent evidence its actual loss resulting therefrom. It might have proved the reasonable market value of other fish of the same character at the nearest market or that there were no fish of that character obtainable during the term of the contract. An attempt was made to prove that there were no fish to be had. The witness Nickell was asked the following question:

"Mr. Keeler: State whether or not there were fish available in markets of Los Angeles and Long Beach Harbors during the months of August and September, consisting of blue fin or albacore, which could have been purchased by any one desiring to do so, willing to pay the market price and having the money to pay for the same, to supply your cannery with the quantities of fish which were covered by this contract, and which you claim here were not delivered with the Curtis Corporation under the contract in question."

[1, 2] Counsel for the corporation objected on the ground that no proper foundation had been laid, and that the question called for a conclusion of the witness. Objection was overruled. It is apparent that the question was objectionable upon the grounds stated. There was no showing that the witness had made any inquiry to discover whether or not the fish in question were available in the markets of Los Angeles or Long Beach during the months of August and September, and as to whether or not such fish were available is clearly a question which the witness would not be entitled to answer unless a foundation had been laid by proof of his being an expert upon the matter. In the matter of proof of actual damages it was proper to receive evidence of profits which would reasonably have accrued to the company from the fish had they been delivered according to the contract. Pacific Steam Whaling Co. v. Alaska Packers' Association, 138 Cal. 632, 72 Pac. 161. In this connection it was necessary for the company to show the value of the tuna to the buyer over the amount which would have been due to the seller under the contract if it had been fulfilled. Civ. Code, § 3308. Section 3354, Civil Code, provides the rule for determining such value. Unless the company could prove that no fish were to be had at that time in the market nearest to the place where the property should have been delivered, its only other course would have been to have introduced evidence to show the price at which it could have been purchased in such market at or about the time of the breach of the contract on the part of the corporation. As before stated, the company attempted to show that there were no fish on the market, but, as the objection should have been sustained to the testimony offered in that behalf, we must disregard it. Without the testimony of the witness Nickell on that point that part of finding 13 which concerns damages has no support in the evidence.

[3] One of the principal reasons advanced by appellant as ground for reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support certain other findings. In this regard complaint is made concerning finding 3, which is as follows:

"3. That plaintiff delivered to defendant, pursuant to said contract, 16,907 lbs. of albacore which defendant agreed to deliver to plaintiff in consideration of a barging charge of $10.00 per ton; that defendant delivered to plaintiff 9,996 lbs. of albacore and failed and refused to deliver to plaintiff the balance thereof, to wit, 6,911 lbs.; that the value of the albacore retained by defendant was, in the months of August, September and October, 1919, $140.00 per ton, and there is due to plaintiff from defendant for said albacore retained by it as aforesaid the sum of $483.77, less a barging charge on 4.99 tons at $10.00 per ton, amounting to $49.98 making the net charge against defendant in favor of plaintiff for albacore $433.79."

The albacore referred to in this finding was stipulated to have been delivered by the company to the corporation under paragraph

6 of the contract. It appears that instead of immediately transporting this albacore, which was received by the corporation in small catches, to the company, the former used the fish thus turned over to it, and later delivered a large quantity of albacore at one time. According to the witness Stewart this was done at the request of Nickell, president of the Long Beach Fisheries Company, so that it would receive sufficient albacore at once for a day's run. On September 7, 1919, the corporation delivered to the company at Long Beach 16,114 pounds of albacore of which 6,118 pounds were admitted to be unfit for canning. The trial court by the finding here attacked in effect disallowed this amount as a credit on behalf of the corporation. The question thus presented is simply whether or not the 6,118 pounds of fish should be considered as having been delivered pursuant to paragraph 6 of the agreement. If so, even though unfit for canning, it could not be charged against the corporation. The contract provides:

"Sixth. It is mutually agreed and understood that the first party in maintaining sufficient barge and tender service for the carrying out of this agreement shall, so far as possible, accept on account of the second party and deliver to the second party at a sole charge of ten dollars per ton all such fish as may be delivered to the barge of the first party from any one of the following boats: Washington, I. S. E. 1, I. S. E. 2, The Explorer and Protector, the risk of spoilage and transportation, however, being taken by second party hereto without recourse."

The testimony of the witness Stewart concerning the receipt and delivery of this albacore was:

"I asked Nickell if he desired us to make delivery on these little odd lots of albacore that were being delivered by the Ise 1, and Ise 2, and Washington, as they were delivered, and he said 'No.' He said it was only a small quantity, and at that time he wasn't running on any hundred lots. He said he did not want to receive a few hundred pounds and start the factory up just to handle that much. He said, 'You take it and use it, and when you get enough to my credit so that I can make a run on it, make a day's run, why, then, you can pay me back in fish.'"

This evidence was uncontradicted. Surely the defendant cannot now be heard to say that the change from the course of business contemplated by the contract, to wit, immediate redelivery of the specific albacore delivered by the company to the corporation, to a subsequent delivery of other albacore, which change was made at the request and for the benefit of the company, should be regarded as adding a burden upon the corporation which would not have existed had the original plan been carried out. The company is clearly estopped from successfully making the assertion that the redelivery which was made is not in accordance with the plan and intention of section 6 of the contract. There is no charge or showing that the corporation acted in bad faith in the matter of the delivery of the fish and particularly that which it appears was unfit for canning purposes. The corporation unloaded fish from the same cargo at the same time for its own use, each party taking albacore in the same condition without selection or discrimination. When Nickell told Stewart that the company did not wish the corporation to make delivery of the little odd lots of albacore as they were caught and delivered to the corporation's barges he knew that the identical fish delivered to such barges would never be returned to the company. He must have been aware of the fact that the corporation would follow the course which it did, and that it would eventually buy other albacore to return to the company. It cannot be said that the parties intended to conduct this transaction apart from any reference to the contract which they had executed. It seems plain that they both intended that the procedure they followed should be regarded as carrying out their contract and as coming within the provisions of section 6 thereof. Under finding 3 the court charged defendant $433.79. This we think was error, and that that part of the finding which states that the corporation refused to deliver the 6,118 pounds to the company is not supported by the evidence.

By finding 4 the trial court determined that the plaintiff's profits on the albacore, found by finding 3 to have been wrongfully withheld from delivery would have been $100 per ton. It follows from what has been said that this amount was improperly charged against the corporation.

[4] The second count of the second amended complaint has to do with the blue fin tuna. By finding 13 the court found the principal allegations of this count to be true. Paragraph 4 of the contract is the one controlling the matter determined by the finding having to do with this count. In this behalf the court found that on certain dates, to wit, the 12th and 18th days of August and the 2d, 13th, 16th, and 17th days of September, the corporation failed to deliver various amounts of blue fin tuna to the company, and to the delivery of which the company was entitled under paragraph 4 of the contract. In arriving at this conclusion the trial court construed paragraph 4 of the contract as permitting the corporation to retain the first 20 tons of blue fin tuna purchased and as requiring it to deliver all over said 20 tons to the company, not exceeding 20 tons per day. The trial court held that this provision applied to the daily purchases, and that each day's purchase of the corporation was to be adjusted without regard to the other days in the tuna season, and without regard to the season as a whole. Appellant contends that the contract should be construed as giving the right to it to retain as much of any day's purchase as it might desire, provided that its daily average capacity for the entire season did not exceed 20 tons. We think that the latter claim is untenable. The matter is not free from difficulty. Paragraph 4 of the contract is somewhat ambiguous. Therefore the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract, as well as the construction placed upon it by the parties, must be taken into account.

Mr. Nickell, president of the company, testified as follows:

"Mr. Stewart stated that he was quite positive he could purchase 40 tons of blue fin tuna quite constantly each day, and that they, because of having the equipment, expected to receive the first 20 tons of fish which was purchased, and that we would receive the balance of the fish which was purchased up to an average delivery of 20 tons per day this specified time, and that was all we desired."

Mr. Stewart of the corporation gave this version of the same conversation:

"* * * I stated to Mr. Nickell that it would not be right for the Curtis Corporation to turn over to the Long Beach Fisheries Company all of the fish of the Explorer and Protector as their fish until the Curtis Corporation had first secured their daily capacity, average daily capacity—we, of course, talked that way, 120 tons a week, is the terms that I used in talking to him—until we have first our 120 tons a week."

From this it appears that the period which the parties had in mind was a weekly period. This idea is supported also by the language of the contract itself. The concluding provision of paragraph 4 gives the corporation the right to retain all of the purchases of one of the days of the week—that is of Friday, Saturday, or Sunday at its option. Paragraph 11 carries out the idea of a weekly computation and reckoning by using this language:

"Eleventh. In the event that during any one of seven days starting from the first of September, 1919, during the period of this agreement, party of the first part is unable to purchase in the aggregate sixty tons of blue fin tuna for the use of either or both parties hereto said first party is authorized to thereupon, at its option, cease said tender and barge service and said second party is in the event of the discontinuance of said barge and tender service under said condition to reimburse said first party at the rate of twenty dollars per diem from date of discontinuance to October 1, 1919."

Joint Exhibit No. 2 is a statement of albacore delivered to the corporation by boat Ise II, and it is rendered in the form of a weekly statement. By the language of paragraph 4 of the contract the corporation agrees to use its best ability to furnish the company with 20 tons a day of blue fin tuna, but this is qualified by the use of the word "average." It is only an average of 20 tons per day that the corporation attempts to furnish. The parties do not clearly state what day's deliveries are to be averaged. The corporation contends that the intention was to average all of the days of the season. Such a construction would place the company at a very great disadvantage. The contract was drawn by the corporation, and should not be construed to give it any undue advantage. If all of the days of the season must be averaged together, the company would not know what its rights were until the end of the season. It might be that the corporation would take all of the fish purchased, for during some weeks, but little or no purchases might be made. From all of these considerations we think the parties intended the average to be made of the days of the week beginning with the first day on which purchases were made. Joint Exhibit No. 1 contains a statement showing the fish purchased each day. The first purchases were made on August 1st. The calculation should therefore begin with that date.

[5] Another contention of appellant which should receive notice is that the corporation ceased deliveries of blue fin tuna because the company had failed to pay shrinkage charges on a delivery of September 10th. It appears that it was in default prior to that time. At least as early as the week ending August 25, even though retaining to itself an average of 20 tons per day, it should have delivered about 43,000 pounds of tuna to the company more than was delivered by it. Being thus in default, it could not make the company's failure to pay a shrinkage charge the basis for a rescission of the contract. Cal. Sugar, etc., Agency v. Penoyer, 167 Cal. 274, 139 Pac. 671.

[6] Complaint is made that the court allowed an amendment to the complaint after the taking of the evidence. This amendment was permitted to make the pleading conform to the proof. The complaint was one for an accounting, and contains allegations of the breach of the contract involved. A part of the evidence introduced in connection with the accounting established the contract and a breach of some of its provisions. The allowance of an amendment is largely discretionary with the trial court, and an order of that character will not be disturbed unless prejudice has resulted. In this case it does not appear that the corporation's substantial rights were in any way compromised, or that it was prevented from securing or introducing evidence because of having been surprised. In view of our decision requiring a retrial of the case no other points raised by appellant will require discussion.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

Evidence held to support finding that agent made contract of sale for an individual principal and not for a partnership.

2. Assignments ⚡137—Evidence held not to sustain finding of assignment.

Evidence held not to sustain a finding of an assignment of a claim of one of the defendants against plaintiff to another defendant.

3. Pleading ⚡236(3)—Allowing amendment of answers during trial not abuse of discretion.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing defendants to file separate amended answers during the trial, denying the existence of facts admitted in the original answer, plaintiff being offered a continuance, and it not appearing that the evidence was any different from what it would have been if the new issues had been raised by the original answer.

4. New trial ⚡102(1)—Not granted where due diligence not used in discovering new evidence.

A new trial will not be granted on the grounds of newly discovered evidence, where the alleged new evidence might have been discovered by the exercise of due diligence in time for use at the trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by F. B. Cox against H. Rosenberg, X. H. Hollar, and others. From a judgment against defendant X. H. Hollar only, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed as modified.

Tipton & Cailor, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joe Crail and Julius V. Patrosso, both of Los Angeles, for respondents Greenberg, Kleinberger, and Rosenberg.

CONREY, P. J. Appeal from the judgment in an action to recover damages arising from breach of contract. The contract was in writing, dated February 3, 1919. By its terms it purported to be a contract between F. B. Cox and H. Rosenberg. It was stated therein:

"That for and in consideration of the sum of $1,850 and 1,150 tons of salt f. o. b. cars Saltus, California, to be delivered to the said F. B. Cox f. o. b. Saltus in quantities not less than 200 tons per month beginning in the month of March, 1919, the whole 1,150 tons to be delivered in six months; the said F. B. Cox does hereby sell one F. C. Austin, type D, Dragline excavator complete, as per description hereto attached, * * * said machine to be delivered to the said H. Rosenberg f. o. b. cars at Saltus, California."

Claiming that the individual defendants were copartners in the salt business at Saltus, the plaintiff brought this action against them and against the alleged partnership, and alleged that his contract of February 3, 1919, was made with them. In the complaint it is alleged that pursuant to said contract the plaintiff delivered the excavator to the defendants, who accepted and used the same in their business. Nevertheless the defendants have neglected and refused to deliver to the plaintiff any of said 1,150 tons of salt.

Upon this complaint, and the answers of the defendants Rosenberg, Kleinberger, Greenberg, Schwartz, and Hollar, and upon a cross-complaint of Rosenberg, Greenberg, and Kleinberger, the action was tried. There was no service of summons on defendants C. Z. Salling and John Doe, or appearance by them. The court, by its findings of fact, determined that the defendants never were copartners, and that the Hollar Rock Salt Company and Pacific Rock Salt Company consisted only of the defendant Hollar, who was doing business under those fictitious names; that the Rosenberg contract was a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant Hollar; that in executing the written contract, Rosenberg was acting solely as agent for Hollar; that the plaintiff at that time knew that Rosenberg was acting for and on behalf of defendant Hollar, and not for or on behalf of himself or any of the defendants other than the defendant Hollar.

On account of the nondelivery to plaintiff of said 1,150 tons of salt, the court decided that plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the defendant Hollar for damages for breach of the contract, and that the value of the salt which was to have been delivered was $10 per ton. The court further found:

"That on said 3d day of February, 1919, and at the time of the execution of said contract by plaintiff and defendant X. H. Hollar, the defendant A. L. Greenberg loaned to plaintiff the sum of $2,750, and that plaintiff agreed to repay said sum to the said defendant from the proceeds to be derived from the sale of the salt agreed to be delivered to plaintiff by the defendant X. H. Hollar, and the court finds that said sum of $2,750 has never been repaid to said defendant A. L. Greenberg by plaintiff, and that prior to the commencement of this action said defendant A. L. Greenberg transferred said claim to the defendant X. H. Hollar."

Thereupon the court rendered judgment against the defendant Hollar in the sum of $8,750. The plaintiff being dissatisfied with the amount of the judgment, and also because he failed to obtain any judgment against the defendants other than Hollar, appeals from the judgment.

The relations existing between the defendants resulted from certain transactions between them prior to the sale of the excavator by the plaintiff. By an instrument dated September 27, 1918, the Consumers' Salt Company had made a lease of its property at Saltus to the defendant Hollar. Hollar arranged with Greenberg and Kleinberger to advance to him the sum of $20,000 to enable him to engage in the production and sale of salt from his leased property. On the 27th day of January, 1919, Hollar executed an "assignment and sale of lease," whereby he assigned to Greenberg and Kleinberger all of his right, title, and interest in and to the lease. Thereupon, and on the same day, Greenberg and Kleinberger, as parties of the first part, executed to Hollar and Schwartz, parties of the second part, a so-called "purchase lease," whereby the parties of the first part leased to the parties of the second part for a term of two years all of the property this date purchased by the parties of the first part from Hollar. The parties of the second part agreed to pay the sum of $20,000 together with a royalty on salt produced from the leased property. From further terms of this contract, it appears to have been contemplated that a corporation would be formed for the conduct of the proposed business, and that all of the parties to this contract would become stockholders thereof. Apart from that arrangement, Kleinberger and Greenberg agreed that upon payment of said sum of $20,000 and the additional royalty referred to they would transfer to Hollar and Schwartz the property described, being the property which the parties of the first part had that day purchased from Hollar. The sum of $20,000 was advanced by Kleinberger and Greenberg from time to time, beginning on the 28th day of January, 1919, so that on April 4, 1919, that entire sum had been paid out by them on requisitions made by Hollar.

Late in January, 1919, and at about the time when Hollar had completed the financial arrangements mentioned above, he also entered into negotiations with the plaintiff Cox for the purchase of the excavator owned by Cox. The proposition as finally accepted by Cox was made by Schwartz and Hollar, although the plaintiff says that Greenberg and Kleinberger also were present. As has been seen, Cox received a cash payment of $1,850 as part of the consideration for his sale of the excavator, but because he needed a larger sum to enable him to deliver the excavator, a loan of $2,750 was made by Greenberg to Cox. This transaction was arranged by Schwartz, who, on behalf of Cox, made application to Greenberg for the loan. An agreement in writing was made, dated February 3, 1919, between Cox and Greenberg, providing for repayment of the $2,750; such repayment to be made through the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank out of the moneys to be collected for account of Cox on sales of the salt which Cox was to receive as part of the consideration for the sale of his excavator. It was agreed that "the Hollar Rock Salt Company shall forward the bills of lading for salt shipped at the request or order of F. B. Cox or assignees" to the bank. On the same day, February 3, 1919, escrow instructions were deposited with the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, providing for the delivery of the bill of sale by Cox, and for carrying into effect the terms of the loan agreement between Cox and Greenberg. These instructions were signed by F. B. Cox, "Hollar Rock Salt Company, by X. Hollar," H. Rosenberg, and A. L. Greenberg. Rosenberg was not present during any of the negotiations until he appeared and signed the excavator purchase agreement and the escrow instructions. The plaintiff testified that it was represented to him that the excavator was put in Rosenberg's name in order to secure Greenberg and Kleinberger, and also in order to transfer it to the corporation which they intended to organize.

[1] There seems to be no doubt that Rosenberg was only a nominal purchaser, and that this was understood by all parties concerned. The only question is whether, as such nominal purchaser, he represented Hollar alone or represented a group of persons consisting of Hollar and one or more of the other defendants.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings that the Hollar Rock Salt Company and Pacific Rock Salt Company were composed only of the defendant Hollar; or that in executing the Rosenberg contract, Rosenberg was acting solely as agent for Hollar or that this was known to the plaintiff; or that prior to the commencement of this action Greenberg transferred to the defendant Hollar his claim for said sum of $2,750. Appellant directs our attention to the evidence that Hollar and Salling issued a certificate that they were doing business under the fictitious firm name of Pacific Rock Salt Company; that the Pacific Rock Salt Company had a bank account, and that Schwartz testified that he and Hollar were authorized to draw checks thereon, the checks being signed by Hollar and countersigned by Schwartz; that Schwartz said that he was "secretary" for the Pacific Rock Salt Company; that Rosenberg signed the contract of purchase of the excavator in his own name, and testified that the contract had been put in his name "to protect, I believe, the $2,750 that Mr. Greenberg had coming"; that there is no evidence of any instrument or act of transfer by Greenberg to Hollar, of Greenberg's right to repayment of the said $2,750 loan. The record shows, however, that the certificate of fictitious firm name made by Hollar and Salling bears date more than eight months later than the Rosenberg contract. Schwartz came into these transactions as the agency whereby Kleinberger and Greenberg were induced to advance money to Hollar as a secured loan, but contemplating that a corporation would be formed in which they all would become stockholders. Schwartz testified that the organization of the company was never consummated "because of differences and demands of parties who put up the money," and that his own interest in the corporation was to have been a promotion interest. The evidence indicates most strongly that Schwartz and Rosenberg never obtained any substantial interest in the business, and never invested anything therein; and that Kleinberger and Greenberg never changed their status from that of creditors of Hollar. We think that the evidence was sufficient to justify the court in finding that the Rosenberg contract was in fact a contract with Hollar, and not with a partnership composed of Hollar and all or any of the other defendants.

[2] According to the value of the salt as found by the court, the judgment against Hollar should have been for the sum of $11,500, unless the $2,750 demand of Greenberg against the plaintiff had been by him assigned to Hollar. As we have seen, the court found that this $2,750 was loaned by Greenberg to the plaintiff. Therefore it was not a payment by Hollar, nor a loan by him. There is no evidence of any assignment by Greenberg of his demand against the plaintiff. Hollar is not entitled to credit therefor. The finding that such assignment was made is not sustained by the evidence.

It should be noted also, that the reduction above noted in the amount of the judgment is not justified in the pleadings; that, in his amended answer, Greenberg did not claim the benefit of this credit; and that Hollar made the same omission in his answer. There being no issue, by way of counterclaim or otherwise, relating to this matter, there is no basis for allowance of the credit of $2,750.

[3] Appellant contends that the court erred in permitting the defendants Rosenberg, Greenberg, and Kleinberger to file separate amended answers at the time of the trial. These three defendants had filed a joint answer, verified by the affidavit of Kleinberger, wherein they admitted that they were parties to the agreement of sale by the plaintiff of the said excavator, and that plaintiff shipped the excavator to them. By way of cross-complaint incorporated in the same instrument with said answer, these same facts were affirmed by these defendants. Shortly before the time of trial of the action, application was made to the court by Rosenberg to file a separate answer, and by Kleinberger and Greenberg together to answer apart from the other defendants. That application was denied, but was renewed when the case was called for trial. It was stated to the court by counsel for the defendants, and not denied by the opposing counsel, that the former admission of fact had been made by inadvertence. The only objection then suggested on behalf of the plaintiff was that the plaintiff had not come into court prepared to prove facts which had been admitted in the pleadings on file. The court replied that if the plaintiff insisted upon this objection, a continuance would be granted at the cost of the defendants. The plaintiff declined a continuance, whereupon the judge stated that he would admit the evidence, and if the evidence would justify it, he would permit the answers to be amended accordingly. Thereupon the trial proceeded, and at the close thereof the court permitted the defendants to file the said separate amended answers. Appellant now insists that the court abused its discretion in permitting defendants to file these amended answers, and thereby deny the existence of facts which in their previous verified pleadings they had admitted and affirmed. It is not claimed that by reason of these amendments the plaintiff suffered any disadvantage in the presentation of the evidence, or that the evidence is any different from what it would have been if the issues newly suggested thereby had been raised by the original answer. We think that there was no abuse of discretion in the allowance of these amended pleadings.

We are not unmindful of the fact that it has been declared to be the rule that a party will not be permitted on the trial to amend by denying a fact admitted in the answer. Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 122 Cal. 107, 110, 54 Pac. 537. But this is not an absolute rule which must be applied without use of discretion. We only hold that in this case the discretionary power of the court has not been abused, even though it may be that the court would have been justified in making a contrary ruling.

[4] Finally, appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence. We have examined the affidavits presented to the court on the hearing of that motion. They relate to facts bearing upon the question of existence of a partnership between Hollar and some of the other defendants. Most of them relate to conditions existing subsequent to the date of the plaintiff's contract, and refer to facts which were known, or by the use of reasonable diligence might have been known, by the plaintiff at the time of the trial of this action. We think that the court was justified in denying the motion.

It is ordered that the judgment in favor of the defendants, other than the defendant X. H. Hollar, Hollar Rock Salt Company, and Pacific Rock Salt Company be and the same hereby is affirmed. The judgment against the defendants X. H. Hollar, Hollar Rock Salt Company, and Pacific Rock Salt Company (the latter two being fictitious names used by X. H. Hollar in the transaction of business) is reversed, with the instruction that the superior court enter judgment against the said X. H. Hollar, Hollar Rock Salt Company, and Pacific Rock Salt Company in the sum of $11,500, with interest computed as in the original judgment, together with costs.

PEOPLE v. SPENCER. (Cr. 599.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 20, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1922.)

1. Criminal law §563—Corpus delicti may be proved by facts connecting defendant with crime.

The corpus delicti may be proved by facts connecting the defendant with commission of the crime.

2. Homicide §228(1)—“Corpus delicti” defined.

The basis of the “corpus delicti” in homicide cases is the finding of the remains of a dead human body identified as the person charged to have been slain, with a showing that death was caused by criminal agency.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Corpus delicti.]

3. Criminal law §563—Not necessary to prove corpus delicti by direct or independent evidence.

It is not necessary that the corpus delicti be proved by direct and positive evidence, nor by evidence independent of that connecting the accused with perpetration of the crime.

4. Homicide §248—Evidence held to support conviction against defense of accidental drowning.

In a prosecution for murder, circumstantial evidence held to support a verdict of guilty, the defense being that deceased was accidentally drowned.

5. Criminal law §747—Conflict of evidence from inconsistencies of single witness is for jury.

The rule that conflict of evidence is for the jury to solve includes conflicts arising from inconsistencies in the testimony of a single witness.

6. Witnesses §380(5)—Party's right to impeach his own witness by showing inconsistent statements stated.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2049, providing that a party may contradict his witness by showing inconsistent statements, is invocable only where the party is actually surprised by the testimony of the witness, and where such testimony is prejudicial to him, and he cannot resort to the statute for the sole purpose of getting before the jury statements of the witness made out of court which would otherwise be inadmissible as hearsay.

7. Witnesses §414(2)—Testimony cannot be bolstered by showing similar statements made prior to trial.

Testimony cannot be bolstered by showing witness' similar statements made prior to trial.

8. Criminal law §1186(4)—Admission of former statements held harmless where witness' testimony on trial warranted same conclusion.

In a prosecution for murder of a woman, in which a witness for the state testified that he heard a scream, but could not say whether it was that of a woman or a man, defendant held not harmed by admission of impeaching testimony that the witness, prior to trial, had stated that he heard “her” scream, in view of further testimony given on trial that a “light voice” produced the scream, as the jury could in either case infer that the scream proceeded from a woman, and, even if there was a slight variance between the statements it was not such as to work a miscarriage of justice contemplated by Const. art. 6, § 4½.

9. Criminal law §388—Experiments admissible where made under conditions substantially like those of original occurrence.

Experiments made to contradict witnesses are admissible where made under conditions substantially like those of the original occurrences, since it is impossible to exactly reproduce former circumstances; and the jury may make allowances for slight differences, which affect weight, but not competency.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

John A. Spencer was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Sidney P. Robertson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. Convicted of murder of the first degree, with the penalty fixed by the jury at imprisonment for life (Pen. Code, § 190), the defendant has appealed to this court from the judgment of conviction. The defendant did not move for a new trial.

The assault upon the verdict is predicated upon the following grounds, generally stated: First, that the evidence wholly failed to establish the corpus delicti; second, that hearsay evidence prejudicial to the rights of the accused was, over objection by the latter, admitted; third, that “a certain demonstration was carried out by the prosecuting officers during the trial” to the manifest detriment of the rights of the defendant; fourth, that the people were allowed to impeach one of their own witnesses "without having first laid the foundation for the same."

The conviction of the defendant was obtained entirely by means of circumstantial evidence, and the circumstances brought before the jury for the purpose of bringing home to the defendant the commission of the alleged crime were multifarious. A consideration of the errors assigned by the defendant will require an extended examination and review of the evidence herein for the purpose of determining: First, whether the corpus delicti has been sufficiently shown; and, if so, second, whether, assuming that the other points urged as in impeachment of the validity of the result reached by the jury are sound as legal propositions, we are required to declare that a miscarriage of justice has followed from the errors thus assigned.

As above suggested, the evidence consisted of a concatenation of varying facts and circumstances which, it is vigorously claimed by the people, irresistibly led to the conclusion that the accused was guilty of the crime charged beyond all reasonable doubt, and therefore, in stating the facts and the circumstances adduced before the jury, we shall assume, as we are authorized to do, that the jury, having evidently accepted as verity the evidence by which they were shown, by their verdict found said facts and circumstances, or such of them as are indispensably essential to the support of the verdict, if the same be supportable at all, to be true.

The defendant, although an ordained minister of the gospel, was, for many years immediately prior to the date of the commission of the crime with which he was charged actively engaged in the business of a real estate dealer or broker in the city of Santa Rosa, this state. The person whose life he is alleged in the indictment to have taken was Mrs. Emma Spencer, the wife of the accused. It being alleged in the accusatory pleading that on the 26th day of July, 1921, in the county of Lake, he killed and murdered his said wife. The defendant owned a small tract of land situated and bordering upon what is known as Knocti Bay, an arm of Clear Lake, in the said county of Lake. On this land there was a cabin which he and the deceased had used for a number of years prior to the death of Mrs. Spencer as a summer home. This cabin was situated near a wharf, known as the "Holt & Gray" wharf, and also, at some time, as the "Jimmy Ford" wharf, but for convenience it will hereafter be referred to as the "Holt wharf." At this wharf the small boats owned by persons living on that side of the bay or lake, and which were used for pleasure, and perhaps business purposes, were customarily moored when not in use. A short distance from the Holt wharf there was an Indian camp, which, as we understand the record, was located on what is known as the "Wheeler Ranch." On practically the opposite side of Knocti Bay from the Spencer cabin and Holt wharf there resided a number of families, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Siddell. A wharf, known as the "Siddell" wharf, which was about five feet by one hundred and eighty feet in dimensions, was maintained in Knocti Bay on the Siddell side thereof. This wharf was situated a little less than 200 feet from the dwelling house of the Siddells, but the distance between the water line and the sleeping porch connected with the Siddell house was approximately 120 feet. A "well-beaten" path extended from the Siddell wharf to the Siddell residence. The approximate distance between the Holt wharf and the Siddell wharf was 2,500 feet.

The defendant was the owner of a small boat in which he and the deceased frequently made pleasure cruises on the lake, and in which they also now and then visited friends living on the opposite side of the bay from their home.

On the night of July 26, 1921, near the hour of half past 9 o'clock, the Siddells, who had retired for the night on their sleeping porch (the husband at approximately half past 8 and his wife at an hour later), were awakened by loud calls addressed to Mr. Siddell by some man whose identity was then unknown to the Siddells. Mrs. Siddell had hardly passed into sleep, or, as she described it, she was "just dozing," when she heard a man call twice in quick succession for her husband. She immediately awakened her husband, who was at the time in "a sound sleep," and told him that "some one wants you." Siddell, on thus being aroused from his sleep, asked in a loud voice who it was that wanted him, to which the defendant replied: "Siddell, Siddell, a rope! My wife is in the lake! This is Mr. Spencer calling." Both Siddell and his wife hastily arose from their bed and started toward the front door. They saw the defendant standing inside the house a short distance from the front door near where the piano stood in the front room, it being their custom to leave the door of the house open at night during the summer season. Spencer, who was drenched with water, then started hastily toward the Siddell wharf, Mr. and Mrs. Siddell, the latter with a lighted lantern, rapidly following. Mrs. Siddell, as they were proceeding towards the wharf, passed the lantern to her husband, and then ran to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Renfro, near neighbors, and told them of the occurrence. Mr. Renfro immediately rushed to the wharf, followed by his wife and Mrs. Siddell.

The defendant reached the wharf a little ahead of Mr. Siddell, and, just as the latter got there, the defendant, pointing to the water near where his boat was fastened to the wharf, exclaimed: "There she is now!" Siddell then observed the body, face downward, floating on the surface of the water between the defendant's boat and the wharf, the boat lying almost at a right angle with the wharf. There was considerable of the body exposed above the surface of the water, and which, with the aid of the lantern, was plainly visible. The deceased had no hat on her head, and her hair was "down or torn loose." The defendant jumped into the boat, and, reaching out, got hold of the body and steered it towards and near enough to the wharf to enable Siddell, in a kneeling position, to get hold of it and draw it from the water to the wharf. While all this was going on the defendant exhibited no signs of emotion. Indeed, his manner was rather that of complacency of mind than an indicium of excitement or sorrow or grief, as he gazed into the face of the deceased and remarked to Siddell: "She does not look as though she suffered any."

The body having been brought to the wharf, although it must have been manifest from the fact that the face and part of the head were submerged that life had already passed out, efforts at resuscitation were vigorously made by Mr. Siddell, assisted by the defendant. Siddell told the defendant to place "his hands under and lift at the shoulder." "Lift her up; bend her up," Siddell instructed the defendant, and the latter did as so requested, Siddell, at the same time, placing his hand under the forehead, and holding the head above the floor of the wharf. The result was that a large quantity of water came out of the mouth of Mrs. Spencer. After being satisfied that all the water that could be expelled had thus been removed from the body, Mrs. Spencer was turned upon her back and an effort made to superinduce respiration by working the arms back and forth. But all efforts at resuscitation were futile. It was obvious that life was extinct, as undoubtedly was the fact before the body was removed from the water. There were no visible marks of violence upon the face or head of the deceased, and the body, according to one of the parties present, was still a trifle warm. The defendant, after the unavailing attempt at resuscitation, knelt down, and, looking into the immobile countenance of his dead wife, and without the slightest betrayal of excitement or perturbation of mind or heart, remarked to Mr. Siddell: "It is a peaceful face, Bob." Siddell asked the defendant: "Why, man, why didn't you call? Why didn't you holler (halloo)? I would have been there instantly"—to which the defendant replied: "My only thought was I must get her myself."

The body of the deceased was removed to the home of the Renfros, and a doctor and the coroner immediately telephoned and apprised of the disaster.

The story told by the defendant to the Siddells and the Renfros as to how he came to essay a visit to the Siddells at that hour of the night, and the circumstance of his wife falling into the lake, was in substance this: That the deceased was making for herself a khaki skirt; that she required some thread which would match the material from which the skirt was to be made; that, knowing that Mrs. Siddell was having some dentistry work done at Lakeport, to which place she made trips two or three times a week for that purpose, usually starting very early in the morning, and believing that she intended going to Lakeport the following morning, she (deceased) persuaded the defendant, against his wish or desire, to take her in their boat to the Siddells on the night of the unfortunate occurrence, so that she could request Mrs. Siddell to purchase at Lakeport the thread needed by her, the deceased insisting, while importuning the defendant to take her to the Siddells, that Mrs. Siddell would probably leave her home for Lakeport the following morning before the deceased could get to the Siddell residence. The defendant and the deceased left the Holt wharf in their boat, so the defendant explained, at some time prior to 9 o'clock. On reaching the Siddell wharf the defendant, so he continued to state, stepped out of the boat and onto the wharf, and was in the act of fastening the "painter" or the rope attached to the bow of the boat to the wharf when he heard a "splash." On looking into the boat, and in the direction of where his wife sat while they were going to the Siddell wharf, he discovered that she was not in the boat; that (so he expressed his belief) she must have made an attempt to leave the boat without his assistance, made a misstep, lost her balance, and so fell into the water. He thereupon, so he stated, immediately dived into the lake in an attempt to rescue her, and repeated the act three different times, but without avail. It was then that he hastened to the home of the Siddells, gave the alarm, and called for assistance. At no time on this occasion did the defendant appear to be grieved over the loss of his wife. His manner, so far as external appearances disclosed, was no different from what it usually was.

The coroner, with a jury of six persons, held an inquest into the cause of the death of the deceased the day following. At this hearing Robert Siddell and the defendant were the only witnesses examined, and the verdict was that Mrs. Spencer had come to her death by "accidental drowning." During the progress of the inquest some person suggested that the deceased might have been suffering from an affection of the heart, which either directly caused her death or caused her to suffer a sudden fainting spell or an attack of dizziness just as she was in the act of leaving the boat, and thus she fell into the lake. The defendant was thereupon asked if his wife was afflicted with heart trouble, to which he replied that prior and down to the time of her death she had been afflicted with "serious heart trouble." In this connection it should be stated that on the night Mrs. Spencer lost her life, and at the time her body was taken from the water, as above described, the defendant made no suggestion that the deceased had suffered from a heart affection of any character.

It appears that it was only a few days after the deceased had been laid away in the grave that there arose in the minds of the public authorities of Lake county a feeling of suspicion that the death of Mrs. Spencer had not been truly accounted for or explained by the defendant. There were other significant circumstances than those immediately attending the death of Mrs. Spencer and above recited which imparted additional strength to the suspicion that the death of the deceased was neither accidental nor brought about by a natural cause. The circumstance that the body of the deceased remained on the surface of the water after, as defendant explained, she had fallen into the bay, appeared to have taken on a more serious aspect after the remains of the deceased had been deposited in the grave than it seemed to bear in the minds of the authorities on the night Mrs. Spencer met her death, and for a day or two succeeding that deplorable event. Upon reflection it occurred to the authorities, probably after consultation with physicians and other persons having experience in cases of death by drowning, some of whom, as will presently be seen, so testified at the trial, that the body of a human being meeting death in that manner in a body of fresh water would invariably sink beneath the surface and remain entirely submerged from 5 to 6 or perhaps from 8 to 10 days before returning to the surface, but that a dead body thrown or falling into a body of water would remain on the surface. Then it developed that the defendant, on the day succeeding that of the death of his wife, addressed a letter to a friend, a Mrs. Charmley, of Santa Rosa, and on the 29th day of July, 1921, addressed a letter to Rev. Dr. Ingram, also of Santa Rosa, in each of which he apprised the addressee of the death of Mrs. Spencer, and in the first-mentioned of which he stated, among other things, that—

"While visiting an old friend, Mrs. Spencer, in stepping from the boat to the wharf, lost her footing and fell in the Lake. I at once dived overboard; the water was very deep, and I dove down four times. I could not find her. Our kind host and wife, together with other friends that gathered on the wharf, assisted in the rescue. It was not until some moments later that we saw her body floating on the far side of the boat—the very place that we had not thought to look. * * * Hard as this misfortune is to me, for I had, in common with herself, many nice plans for the future, yet I am grateful to think that it took place in the presence of witnesses, and at the public wharf. The evil tongues that have done so much mischief in the past can find nothing here."

In the letter to Dr. Ingram he stated:

That the "accident" occurred while they were visiting friends, and were guests "at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Siddell, and it was at his private wharf where the occurrence took place"; that, assisted by said friends and others, an effort was made to revive Mrs. Spencer, and that, in thus working at resuscitation, "water came from her lungs and stomach in streams, and yet, from the calm and cheerful expression of countenance that she wears in death, I and our friends are inclined to think that she suffered no pain—that the suddenness of the thing might have gone to her weak heart. * * * The verdict of the coroner's jury is 'accidental drowning.' If such a misfortune had to be, I have at least cause to be thankful that it took place where it did, at the home of a prominent and much respected family, with they and other friends present. This I believe to be a fortunate circumstance, in view of the evil tongue and its uses of that woman who seemed to make it an object in her life to do me and my wife no good."

It was further learned that, at approximately the hour of half past 8 o'clock on the night of the death of Mrs. Spencer, Hudson Jack, an Indian boy of the age of 18 years, who was then at the Indian camp above referred to, which, as seen, was located not far distant from the Holt wharf, just after he had retired for the night, heard a scream from a human voice, the sound of which proceeded from the direction of said wharf. This lad could not say, so he protested at the trial, whether the scream was that of a male or a female, but did say that it was a light voice, meaning, as the jury could reasonably have inferred, that it was not the coarse voice characteristic of a male, but the voice of a female.

Being in possession of the above circumstances, all of which were later brought out at the trial, the authorities felt justified in indulging the suspicion that the death of the deceased had been brought about by some foul means. At any rate, positive dissatisfaction with the finding of the coroner's jury that the death of Mrs. Spencer was caused by "accidental drowning" followed, and a thorough and an immediate investigation of the case was determined upon. To that end, the first step taken was the exhumation of the body and the holding of an autoptical examination. This proceeding took place on the 13th day of August, 1921, 16 days after the burial of the body, the autopsy having been made by Dr. Craig of Lakeport. Nothing of importance was developed as the result of this examination, except that thus it was discovered that the deceased had suffered from what the doctors described as "involvement of the mitral valve" of the heart, or, in less technical language, the thickening of said valve, an affection which the autoptical physician declared, as did another doctor at the trial, was not of a serious nature. Indeed, the doctors declared that such heart affliction is common, and that seldom, if ever, does death result from that cause alone.

The facts and circumstances above narrated, including the commonly known fact that the body of a person drowned in a body of fresh water of any considerable depth (the bay at Siddell's wharf was 10 to 12 feet deep) would ordinarily sink below the surface, while a dead body thrown into such a body of water would remain on the surface, had the effect of transmuting suspicion into a conviction that the deceased had been deprived of her life by the act of her husband, and of giving birth to the theory that death in some manner had been produced at or near Holt wharf, and the body conveyed in the boat by the defendant to Siddell wharf, and there by him thrown into the bay. Acting upon this theory, the officers of the law turned their attention to Holt wharf, near which is situated the Spencer home, and from which proceeded the sound of the scream heard by the Indian boy.

By her more intimate friends it was known that the deceased always wore a hat and a certain shawl when visiting among her friends or sailing with her husband on the lake. As seen, when her body was first observed floating in the bay, and then taken from the water, the deceased wore neither a hat nor the shawl referred to. Having gone out upon the bay in the nighttime, the circumstance that she wore no hat or shawl on that occasion was so unusual that it excited the particular attention and comment of those who were familiar with her custom in that respect. Following out the theory as to the place and manner of Mrs. Spencer's death, upon which the officers were then working, it was conceived that the deceased, at the time of her death, probably wore upon her head a hat, and perhaps the shawl she was usually seen to wear about her shoulders, and the officers thereupon decided to and did cause the bay to be dragged in near proximity to the Holt wharf. This investigation was conducted in the month of August, 1921, and the result thereof was that a shawl was taken from the bottom of the bay at the point mentioned. When the grappling hook clutched the shawl and an effort made to draw the hook to the surface some resistance to the pull was experienced—such resistance as might reasonably be supposed to be caused either by the article attached to the hook being weighted down or being caught in some obstruction at the bottom of the bay. The resistance was overcome, however, before the article, or, as it proved to be, the shawl, was brought to the surface, it having been unloosened by the manipulation of the hook from the rocks or other obstruction at the bottom of the bay by which it was held down or with which it had become entangled. The shawl which the deceased had often been seen to wear wrapped about her shoulders and head was an old one, it having been given to her, so she stated to her friends, by her mother. The shawl was red, with white threads running through it, but the shawl taken from the bay, as was plainly manifest from an inspection thereof, had faded, a change which had undoubtedly been wrought by its having been in the water for several weeks; yet the women who knew the shawl worn in her lifetime by Mrs. Spencer appeared to be quite positive at the trial (and probably so declared to the officers prior to the trial and while the investigation was on) that the shawl taken from the bay bore in all respects a pronounced similarity to the shawl owned and worn by the deceased.

The further discovery was made in the course of the preliminary investigation that in the months of May and June, 1921, the deceased, being the owner of certain real property, and interested in certain promissory notes and mortgages, executed to the defendant her deed to the real property and an assignment of her interest in the promissory notes and mortgages referred to, the first instrument having been executed on the 28th day of May and the other on the 4th day of June, 1921. It was also shown that the defendant at about the same time executed a deed conveying his interest in certain real property to the deceased. These documents were delivered into the possession of the real estate firm of Johnson & Temple at San Jose, with instructions that the instruments should be delivered to the survivor upon the death of the other, and their possession was so maintained until some time in the month of August, 1921, when the defendant appeared at the office of said Johnson & Temple and demanded and received the same.

The investigation now reached a stage where an inquiry into the domestic relations existing between the defendant and the deceased and the personal conduct of the former with respect to his marital obligations was involved. This phase of the investigation brought forth, as will be observed, disclosures of potent significance when considered with the other facts and circumstances already within the knowledge of the officers.

As seen, the defendant was for a considerable period prior to the death of Mrs. Spencer engaged in the real estate business at Santa Rosa, where he with Mrs. Spencer also resided. The defendant was the owner of improved property in a suburban part of the city of San Jose, which was at the time of the death of Mrs. Spencer, and had been for some months under lease to and occupied by a Mr. W. A. Miller and his wife.

It was discovered that for a number of months before the death of Mrs. Spencer the relations between the defendant and his wife were of the most unhappy character. It is not necessary to give herein the details of the violent quarrels and disagreements occurring between them from time to time. It is enough to refer to them in a general way, as the circumstances thereof were minutely detailed at the trial by near neighbors who were in the immediate presence of the couple when the controversies referred to occurred, or who overheard them. Spencer had often been heard to abuse his wife by addressing to her opprobrious epithets of the most indecent character, and expressing himself when quarreling with her in the most offensive profanity. On one occasion he was heard to call his wife "a G—d d—n b—h," and, when asked why he thus addressed his wife, replied that she had accused him of maintaining illicit relations with a certain married woman in San Jose, the initial letter of whose married surname is D, as we shall, out of deference to her family, hereinafter refer to said married woman. On the same occasion Mrs. Spencer, during the quarrel then going on between them, excitedly stepped from his real estate office, where the trouble occurred, into an adjoining room, and likewise exclaimed to the lady occupying the latter room within the hearing of the defendant, "that man in the next room is killing me!" Mrs. Spencer was crying at the time, and described as being in a highly nervous condition. There were many other occasions on which the couple were heard in violent quarrels, during the course of which the defendant used abusive language towards his wife. During one of these outbursts the deceased, in effect, declared to the defendant that she knew enough about him to send him to prison.

It was learned and shown that the genesis of the dissensions and violent controversies which sporadically occurred between Spencer and his wife was in a suspicion entertained by Mrs. Spencer, and founded upon certain circumstances coming to her knowledge, that her husband was maintaining a liaison with the Mrs. D. above referred to. As to this, it transpired that Spencer had leased an apartment to Mrs. D. in an apartment house in Santa Rosa, and that for several months he paid much attention to that party, and was often seen to visit her apartment both in the day and in the night time. Mrs. Spencer, it was shown, was taken ill in the month of December, 1920, and the defendant, having occasion at that time to visit San Jose, requested a neighbor (a Mrs. Palmer) to take Mrs. Spencer to her home, and there give her the attention she required until his return a few days hence. It seems, though, that Mrs. Spencer, still ill, remained at Mrs. Palmer's, and was under her care from the 7th day of December, 1920, until the latter part of January, 1921, during which period of time Spencer would visit her twice a day—once early in the morning and once early in the evening, remaining each time from 5 to 10 minutes, and, particularly in the evenings, excusing his brief visits upon the pretext that "he had another important appointment." It was during this time that Spencer was seen to visit the apartment of Mrs. D. For about two months after Mrs. D. took the apartment referred to, Mrs. Spencer on several different occasions accompanied her husband in his visits to Mrs. D., but after the expiration of that period Mrs. Spencer ceased such visits and, having evidently reached the conclusion that her husband had conceived an infatuation for that party, began interposing protests against his further attentions to the lady, and on one occasion was heard to beseech him with much fervor to cease his attentions to her. Spencer, however, continued to visit Mrs. D. as regularly as above stated, often remaining with her from two to three hours. "As time passed on," said the lady occupying the apartment adjoining that of Mrs. D., "up to the time Mrs. D. left the apartment Spencer's visits to the latter became more frequent."

A letter in an envelope addressed to the Mrs. D. at the apartment referred to above, and postmarked "Santa Rosa, Cal., Dec. 14, 1920, 7:30 A. M.," and in the handwriting of the defendant, according to the positive affirmation of a former associate of the latter in business, who was familiar with the defendant's handwriting, was found, and said letter was introduced in evidence at the trial. This letter was signed "J." (the defendant's name is John A. Spencer), and was written while Mrs. Spencer, still an invalid, was stopping at the home of Mrs. Palmer. Here we pause to suggest in this connection that, assuming, as we may, that the jury, considering the letter by the light of all the other facts and circumstances to which we have above referred, and those which are to follow, and which were brought to their attention, drew the inference, as well they might, that the defendant was its author, the letter constitutes a cogent circumstance among those introduced upon the question of motive, and motive, it may be added, while of no importance where the commission of a crime is directly brought home to an accused, is peculiarly of significant consequence in this case, in which the crime charged, if sufficiently proved at all, was established by circumstantial evidence pure and simple. The letter is here presented:

"11:30 P. M.

My Only Sweetheart: I am writing a late letter to you to-night, darling, for I have just returned from Mrs. P. and find Mrs. S. very poorly. Mrs. P. says it will not be best for you to come to see her for a few days, as her poor weak mind has been so poisoned by falsehood that she does not know who are her best friends. Of course, I know that Mrs P. has had her share in this, in spite of her statements to the contrary, and I accused her of to-night, love, but dearest, in spite of this or anything else, there will be no change in our love. We will see each other and confess our love to each other, just the same, darling. My love, do not come before 7:30 to-morrow night, as I will have to wait, have to visit Mrs. S. until almost that time, dear, I will have the room warm for you, and we will have a lovely hour together, sweet love. Do not tell any one, dearest, that Mrs. S. is this way towards you, and they will not know. She will change in time. Your long letter did me much good, darling, and I will count the minutes 'till to-morrow evening. You can tell D. that you are going to Mrs. P. as you intended. I am a little anxious about the letter you gave Mrs. C. to mail for you. It will be"—several dashes—"if she read it. We won't never give a letter or write, dear, to any other again. They may mean our great loss to each other. Good night, my very own. Forever, J."

The "D." referred to in the letter as the person to whom it was therein suggested Mrs. D. could tell that she "was going to Mrs. P. as you intended" the jury could have well inferred was the husband of Mrs. D.

Mrs. D. occupied the apartment mentioned from October, 1920, until March, 1921, and to the last the defendant kept up his practice of visiting her as indicated above. As the attention paid to Mrs. D. by the defendant became the more intensive, dissensions between the latter and his wife became the more aggravated, and developed into a subject of common knowledge and like discussion among their immediate friends, and it is fairly and reasonably inferable, from the whole evidence upon this phase of the case, that the undue attentions of Spencer to Mrs. D. soon assumed the form and proportions of an ugly scandal—so much so, indeed, as to have prompted Mrs. D. to remove from the apartment occupied by her, and in fact abandon Santa Rosa as her place of residence. The last of February, 1921, Mrs. D., assisted by the defendant, packed her furniture and left said apartment, and she is next found in the city of San Jose, where she and the defendant, as husband and wife, and under the pseudonym of "Mr. and Mrs. Barber," secured an apartment first from a Mrs. Burchfiel, at 21 East Santa Clara street, which together they occupied from the 1st of March, 1921, until about the 12th day of May, 1921, when they removed therefrom and took an apartment in an apartment house conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Leroy A. Rodgers, at 128 North Tenth street, San Jose. They there also represented themselves as husband and wife, and as "Mr. and Mrs. Barber." Mrs. D., while living in San Jose under the circumstances as indicated, always, in speaking of Spencer to her landladies, referred to him as her husband. The defendant represented to these apartment house owners that he was a traveling salesman for a "book concern" and was therefore compelled to be away from home a good part of the time. Thus he accounted for his absence "from his wife" (Mrs. D.) for several days or a week at different intervals of time. Mrs. Burchfiel and the Rodgers testified that, when the defendant was in San Jose, they saw him at the apartment with Mrs. D., and would observe him in the said apartment in the evenings and leaving there early in the mornings. There was but one bed in each of said apartments.

On either the 2d or the 3d day of June, 1921, having just returned from one of his "commercial trips," the defendant stepped into the apartment of the Rodgers and stated that he desired to pay his rent in advance, adding that, on the following day, he intended leaving "on a mission and a commission, and would probably be gone a month or a month and a half and maybe longer." The defendant then returned to Santa Rosa, leaving Mrs. D. in occupation of their apartment in the Rodgers' apartment house in San Jose, and, shortly thereafter, with the deceased, went to their summer home on Knoccti Bay.

On the 29th day of July, 1921—three days after the death of his wife—the defendant returned to San Jose and to the apartment at the Rodgers house, Mrs. D. being still in said apartment. He arrived at the apartment near the hour of 5 o'clock p. m., and at or near 8 o'clock of that evening he and Mrs. D. were overheard by Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers laughing heartily and joking together in their apartment.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Miller were tenants in possession of the premises owned by the defendant in the city of San Jose. Approximately a week subsequently to the death of Mrs. Spencer the defendant made his appearance at his San Jose place, and there saw Mr. and Mrs. Miller. "He came to the door," testified Mrs. Miller, "very smiling, and apparently very happy, and I could hardly believe that it was he whose wife had passed away. * * * I questioned him, 'Is it possible that it is you whose wife has recently been drowned?' He replied; 'It certainly was,' and asked Mrs. Miller "how she found it out." Mrs. Miller, having in her possession a Santa Rosa newspaper which contained an account of the "drowning," gave the article to the defendant, and, on reading it, he declared that the account so given was incorrect. He then proceeded to explain that he and his wife had been on a picnic with several friends, some of whom, at the conclusion of the picnic, preceded them to their side of the bay, others remained on the other side, and still others on the lake in their boats; that, just as they had reached the Holt wharf, on their side of the bay, and he was in the act of fastening the boat, Mrs. Spencer, who had been laughingly waving her hands and passing remarks to their friends standing on both sides of the bay, in some manner suddenly fell into the water; that he dived four times for her; that friends immediately came to his assistance, and that, while he stood greatly horrified and appalled over the accident, some one of his friends saw her body come to the surface from under the boat, and took the body from the bay, and placed it upon the wharf; that vigorous but futile efforts were made to resuscitate her. To W. A. Miller, husband of the preceding witness, the defendant told substantially the same story, positively stating to him, however, that the "drowning" occurred in the daytime, in the presence and within the sight of some of his "dearest friends." Miller suggested to the defendant that it was very peculiar that the body of his wife did not sink and remain submerged, but floated about on the surface of the lake "and he (defendant) didn't seem to want to say much after that." Miller further testified that, on an occasion prior to the 26th day of July, 1921, the defendant stated to him that his (defendant's) wife "was quite a burden to him" (defendant).

On the 23d day of August, 1921, Sheriff B. F. Shaul, of Lake county, accompanied by District Attorney Churchill of said county, arrived in San Jose, where the defendant was then stopping, and placed the latter under arrest upon a warrant charging him with the crime of murder. On the way from San Jose to Lakeport, by way of San Francisco, the district attorney held several conversations with the defendant. In one of these, being asked by the district attorney as to what had become of the shawl his wife was often observed to wear by her female friends, the defendant positively denied that she ever owned a shawl. Later, however, after the district attorney told him that the bay near Holt wharf was being dragged, he stated that he did recall that his wife had a red shawl, with white threads running through it, but that, when out fishing on the lake near Holt wharf one day, the wind blew the shawl and the hat she was then wearing from her and into the bay, and that the hat and shawl were never recovered. Arriving at the city hall, in San Francisco, where the defendant was temporarily placed preparatory to taking the boat for Sausalito and thence by train and other conveyances to Lakeport, the defendant was further questioned about the death of Mrs. Spencer, and after this interview was ended he called the district attorney aside, and said to him: "Mr. Churchill, I would like to see you privately a moment. I have something I would like to take up with you"—to which Churchill answered: "All right, Mr. Spencer; sometime—we will have plenty of time to talk about it." Subsequently the sheriff, with Spencer, and also accompanied by the district attorney and the latter's son, took the Sausalito boat at San Francisco, on their way to Lakeport. The district attorney and his son took a seat on the lower deck of the ferry boat near the door at the front end of the boat. The sheriff and the defendant stepped outside at the front end of the boat, lower deck, and stood for a while in conversation, which the defendant started by asking the sheriff questions as to the legal procedure according to which the charge against him would be investigated by the authorities. The sheriff explained that a preliminary hearing could either be had before a magistrate, in which case, if the evidence warranted it, he would probably be held for trial in the superior court, or the charge could be inquired into by the county grand jury, in which case, if there was evidence to justify it, and an indictment could and certainly would be found charging him with murder. The sheriff further stated to him that he did not know which course would be taken up in his case—that it would largely depend upon the district attorney's judgment. The defendant then asked: "Who has the final say whether I shall be dismissed or not?" The sheriff replied: "Well, the magistrate always has the say, but he always acts upon the suggestion of the district attorney, so practically it is up to the district attorney; or," continued the sheriff, referring to the contingency that the matter might be taken before the grand jury instead of a magistrate, "of course, it would practically be the same proposition, as the grand jury would look to him (the district attorney) to produce the evidence." The defendant, thereupon asked the sheriff what salary the district attorney received and the reply was that the district attorney's salary in Lake county was $1,500 per annum. "That is not enough," retorted the defendant. The latter then or immediately left the sheriff, and walked into the boat and took a seat by the side of the district attorney. He asked that officer whether or not he had interviewed all the witnesses; asked who would have the management of the case; whether District Attorney Hoyle, of Sonoma county, would be called in to assist in the prosecution. The district attorney assured the defendant that he had not interviewed all the witnesses; that he would perhaps alone handle the case, and that Hoyle would not be asked to assist him in the prosecution. This conversation then followed:

Defendant: "Upon your investigation, is it final, is your judgment final?"

Churchill: "Mr. Spencer, as a rule, when the district attorney goes into a case, and is satisfied that the evidence would not warrant a conviction, why, it would not be taken up by any other authorities, although the grand jury could take up the matter and investigate it regardless of what the district attorney would advise; but as a rule it is final."

No further conversation along this line was had until after the party boarded the train at Sausalito and were on their way to Santa Rosa. On the train the district attorney took a seat with the defendant. The latter immediately introduced the following conversation:

"Mr. Shaul (referring to the sheriff), is a fine gentleman; he has treated me nicely. Do you think it would be all right to hand him $15 or $20?" Churchill: "You would have to take that up with him, Mr. Spencer." Defendant: "Back in Ohio (or Iowa, the district attorney could not recall with certainty which), I know of a case where the district attorney was given $200 for not prosecuting a case. Do you think that would be a proper thing to do?" Churchill: "It depends on the man, Mr. Spencer." Defendant: "Now, you must understand that I was the defendant in that action."

During this conversation, so testified Churchill, the defendant grew "as white as paper in the face, and panted like a running dog." The defendant, however, proceeding with the conversation, began to ply the officer with questions concerning the latter's financial condition, the district attorney finally telling him that he was poor, that there was a mortgage on his house, and that it was difficult for him to live on his salary. The defendant then asked the prosecutor if he would like to live on Knocti Bay, to which Churchill replied in the affirmative, saying that he had always wished to own a home on that part of the lake. The defendant then stated to the officer that he (defendant) owned 113 feet of land bordering on the bay, and that 50 feet were enough for his (the district attorney's) purposes, "and you can have that, Mr. Churchill." The defendant went on to say that by "going in together" he and the officer could buy lumber for building houses on the property on Knocti Bay much cheaper than it could otherwise be purchased for, adding:

"You needn't be out anything only for a man to help you lay the heavier lumber."

The proposition of the defendant to remunerate the district attorney on condition that he would cease the prosecution of the case, or, in plain language, the proposition to bribe the district attorney, was again taken up after the defendant had been placed in the county jail at Lakeport. The district attorney had called to see the defendant in response to a message carried from the defendant to that officer by the sheriff that defendant desired to see him. Upon entering the jail and into conversation with the defendant, the latter proposed to convey to the district attorney 50 feet of the 113-foot lot he owned on Knocti Bay, and in addition pay him $200 in cash, upon condition that the district attorney would not prosecute the case. The district attorney suggested that if the defendant conveyed said lot to him (district attorney) it would readily become known to the public, but the defendant stated that he could have the deed acknowledged in San Jose and that he would pay the district attorney the $200 in greenbacks. A few days after this conversation, under an understanding between the district attorney and the sheriff, the latter officer took the defendant out for a ride in an automobile. While they were out on this trip a dictagraph was installed in the jail and connected with the sheriff's office and on the next day the district attorney again interviewed the defendant and caused him to renew his bribery proposition. While this conversation was going on the sheriff of Sonoma county and the sheriff of Lake county were at the end of the dictagraph in the sheriff's office, and heard a considerable portion of said conversation. They corroborated the district attorney in many vital particulars relative to the bribery proposition. It seems that, after this conversation had been concluded, and the district attorney had left the jail, the defendant, by some means, discovered the dictagraph in the stove pipe, near which the chairs stood on which the district attorney and the defendant sat while they were engaged in conversation, and on the following day, when the district attorney again called at the jail and saw the defendant, the latter told him of having discovered the dictagraph, and exclaimed:

"My God, man, don't you know they had a dictaphone in on us here; it has been here ever since I have been here! Didn't you know they heard what was said last night! * * * My God, didn't you know that was in here!"

The district attorney replied that he knew nothing of the existence of a dictagraph in the jail, and asked what it looked like, whereupon the defendant went to the stove pipe in which the instrument had been placed, took it out, and put it back face down. After some further conversation the district attorney asked defendant if he was not afraid to proceed with the matter of the proposed bribe "with this dictaphone down in there," to which the defendant replied: "No, it takes a direct wave to operate that thing. Let us move our chairs over here"—and thereupon the chairs were moved some distance from the stove pipe. The defendant then repeated his proposition to bribe the district attorney. The conversation on this occasion was thus concluded:

Question by Mr. Churchill: "Mr. Spencer, if I conclude to prosecute this case, what do you expect to be done with these moneys and this deed?" By defendant: "Why, what would you expect?" Churchill: "I would expect the money to be returned." Defendant: "Of course that would be the right thing, wouldn't it? Now, of course, Mr. Churchill, you know that this is not a bribe."

In addition to the facts and circumstances embraced in the foregoing statement, there was other significant testimony presented at the trial, some of which went to the impeachment of certain of the extrajudicial statements of the defendant. Doctors Yates and Bonar testified that they had professionally treated the deceased—the one on the 11th and 15th of February, 1921, and the other in the month of May, 1921—and that they had found, upon examination, that her lungs, heart, and kidneys were at those times perfectly normal.

Mrs. Laura Taylor, a neighbor of the Spencers on Knocti Bay, and who had had several years' experience as a professional seamstress, testified that a few days prior to the death of Mrs. Spencer the latter came to her as she was sitting in her car with her husband preparatory to going to Lakeport, and, handing to her a sample of a khaki skirt which the deceased was then making, and also a 10 cent piece, asked her to purchase for her (the deceased) a spool of thread which would match the skirt. The defendant accompanied the Taylors to Lakeport that morning, and on arriving at that place Mrs. Taylor went into a store and purchased thread which she said perfectly matched the skirt of which she had in her possession the sample given her by Mrs. Spencer, and for which she paid 5 cents, receiving 5 cents in change. She delivered the thread, together with the 5 cent piece, to Spencer and requested him to deliver them to his wife. At the trial the khaki skirt was exhibited to Mrs. Taylor, and upon an inspection of it she testified that the material was the same as the sample which Mrs. Spencer had given her, and that the thread used in making the skirt was the same as that she purchased for Mrs. Spencer on the occasion referred to.

As to the circumstance of the body of the deceased floating on the surface of the water, the testimony of Dr. Bonar, who had made a special study of cases of drowning, was that invariably, unless prevented by some external physical cause, the body of a drowned person would immediately sink to the bottom of the water in which the drowning took place. He stated, however, that, in the case of a woman entirely dressed, as was true in the present case, the buoyancy following from air getting underneath her clothing might, and probably would, cause the body to float on the water before sinking for possibly a period of half an hour. "It requires very little to buoy a body in water," he added. He further stated that a dead body thrown into water would not sink, and that this would be generally true even if the person had died from drowning and the body again put into the water. He was asked if a drowning person would not invariably take water into the lungs, to which question he replied in the negative, stating that out of 247 cases of drowning occurring along the Atlantic Coast, and in which autopsies had been performed by the public health service, in only 48 per cent. thereof was there water found in the lungs. He stated, however, that in cases of drowning water would always be taken into the stomach. He stated that if the deceased had died from heart failure before her body went into the bay water would not have entered the stomach or lungs or passed out of her mouth after the body was retrieved from the bay. Asked as to approximately the length of time a body would retain its warmth after the death thereof, the doctor stated, considering all the conditions in this case as they were described by the witnesses, that the body would probably retain a temperature from three to four hours. And, lastly, basing his judgment upon the testimony as to the conditions under which the body was found and taken from the bay, the doctor expressed the opinion that the deceased was dead before the body reached the water at the Siddell wharf.

The defendant himself did not take the witness stand. A few witnesses, however, were introduced by him. This testimony, though, with the single exception, perhaps, of that of Dr. W. H. Fearn, of Lakeport, involved no material contradiction or variance from that produced by the people. It was stipulated that a number of Indians at the Indian camp on the night of the death of Mrs. Spencer would testify, and that such testimony might be deemed to be before the jury, that they heard no scream from a human voice, the sound of which came from the direction of the Holt wharf at the time mentioned by Hudson Jack, but that testimony is merely negligible, and it is obvious that it could have very slight, if any, tendency to disprove or impeach the truthfulness of the Indian boy's testimony.

Dr. Fearn testified that the body of a drowned person, if taken from the water immediately, or within a few minutes after the drowning occurred, and then again immediately put back into the water, would immediately sink. This, the doctor continued, was due to the fact that the chest of a person dying from drowning becomes "contracted on account of the terrific struggle to get air, the spasm of the epiglottis set up by water entering the throat, so a person drowning has no air, or very little air, in the lungs. That is the reason," continued the doctor, "that the body usually sinks." He did state, though, that a person, clothed as deceased was at the time of her death (with waist, skirt, underclothes, shoes, and a man's coat), where the surface of the clothing was wet—that is, not soaking, but merely damp—the air caught in such clothing would be held there as readily and for as long a time as it would be if the clothing were perfectly dry, and that the body would be likely to remain floating on the surface for from 5 to 10 minutes.

While, as will be noted, there is apparently some conflict between the testimony of Dr. Bonar and that given by Dr. Fearn, viewing said testimony from the standpoint of the theory maintained by the people that the defendant took the life of the deceased by drowning her, and then, subsequently, again throwing her body into the bay at the Siddell wharf, such conflict involved a matter which it was entirely for the jury to solve and determine.

We have now presented herein rather an elaborate synoptical statement of the facts and circumstances from which the jury seemed to have felt justified in forming the conclusion that the defendant was guilty of the crime as charged against him, also referring to some of the testimony introduced on behalf of the defendant. This extended statement of the evidence seemed to us to be justified, since, as stated, and as a reading of the statement will readily show, the essential support of the theory of guilt upon which the people proceeded was necessarily dependent upon evidence of manifold and diversified circumstances. There are many minor circumstances to which it was thought that a reference herein was unnecessary, those comprehended within the above statement being the salient or vitally important circumstances and facts brought out at the trial.

[1] 1. The first question submitted by this appeal is: Was the corpus delicti proved? And this is the all-important question, for, obviously, failure to establish the corpus delicti is failure to prove that a crime has been committed. The solution of the problem thus propounded must rest upon the determination of the question whether the evidence, of which an extended and accurate conspectus has been reproduced herein, is such, when reasonably interpreted as a whole, as to afford a rational and just conclusion by intelligent minds, unfettered by passion or prejudice, that the deceased came to her death by violent means; and this question may best be answered by a reply to the following: Can a court of review justly declare, as a matter of law, after carefully considering the evidence exposed by this record, that the jury could not have been justly persuaded by said evidence, to a moral certainty, and beyond all reasonable doubt, that the defendant took the life of his wife by violent means, with the deliberate purpose of accomplishing that act? In other words, are we, as a reviewing court, compelled to hold that the innumerable inculpatory and strongly accusing circumstances developed by the evidence were by the public authorities and the jury aimed in the wrong direction, or were so misinterpreted or their probative significance so misunderstood as that an erroneous result was reached? If this court is not legally authorized to answer these questions in the affirmative, the conclusion must necessarily be that, from the evidence as a whole, or considered in its entirety, the jury were legally convinced, to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime as charged in the indictment, and therefore we are required to hold that the corpus delicti was likewise established.

It cannot be doubted that the corpus delicti may be proved by the very facts that connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, and this, according to the verdict, which, we may as well say here, we feel that we are bound to accept, is precisely what was done in this case.

[2, 3] The basis of the corpus delicti is the finding of a dead human body, or its remains, and the identification thereof as that of a person charged to have been slain. The next essential step is to show that the death of the person has been occasioned by the criminal act or agency of another; and—

"It is not necessary that the corpus delicti should be proved by direct and positive evidence. Crimes, and especially those of the worst kinds, are naturally committed at chosen times, and in darkness and secrecy; and human society must act upon such indications as the circumstances of the case present or admit, or society must be broken up. Nor is it very often that adequate evidence is not afforded by the attendant and surrounding facts to remove all mystery, and to afford such a reasonable degree of certainty as men are daily accustomed to regard as sufficient in the most important concerns of life; to expect more would be equally needless and absurd." Rice on Evidence, p. 466.

Again, the same author (volume 3, p. 467) approvingly quotes the rule laid down by Burrill in his work on Circumstantial Evidence (page 682), wherein it is said that, the death and identity of the body of the person who it is charged has been slain having been shown, the fact that death was produced by a criminal act may be shown "by means of circumstantial evidence, including the presumptive kind; and, for this purpose, a much wider range of inquiry is allowed than in regard to the fundamental fact of death; and all the circumstances of the case, including facts of conduct on the part of the accused, may be taken into consideration."

"Nor," as is said in Carroll v. People, 136 Ill. 456, 463, 27 N. E. 18, 21, "is it essential that the corpus delicti should be established by evidence independent of that which tends to connect the accused with its perpetration. The same evidence which tends to prove one may also tend to prove the other, so that the existence of the crime and the guilt of the defendant may stand together inseparable on one foundation of circumstantial evidence."

The rules above stated are now so generally accepted in all the American states as well as in England that they have become elementary in the law.

[4] The present case is replete with circumstances in their nature highly incriminatory, and tending strongly to the establishment of the proposition that the death of the deceased was the direct result of the criminal act of the defendant. And we cannot say that the jury were not warranted in reaching the conclusion that she was drowned by the defendant (perhaps by placing and holding her head under the water a sufficient length of time to produce death), the body then conveyed by him to the Siddell wharf, and there by him cast into the bay. The salient circumstances may be recapitulated: The motive to get rid of his wife, supported as it was by uncontradicted evidence that he was enamored of a married woman to the point of infatuation and the maintenance of illicit relations between him and said woman; the violent differences or quarrels occurring between the defendant and the deceased over the fact of his undue and unholy attentions to said woman, and the abusive language in which he addressed his wife on those occasions; the statement prior to her death that his wife was a great burden to him; the scream of the human voice, the sound of which came from the direction of Holt wharf; the floating of the body on the surface of the water after the drowning, it having been shown by not only the doctors who testified for the people, but the doctor who testified for the defendant, that the body of a person drowning would sink to the bottom and not remain floating upon the surface of the water and that this would probably occur in from 5 to 10 minutes even where a drowning person was a woman, and sufficient air had gotten underneath her clothing to operate as a buoy; the testimony of two doctors to the effect that they had had occasion professionally to examine the deceased about two months prior to her death and found that her kidneys, lungs, and heart were in perfect condition, which diagnosis was confirmed by the autoptical physician; the impeachment by Mrs. Taylor's testimony of the reason given by the defendant for the visit to the Siddells at so late an hour of the night, to wit, to have Mrs. Siddell procure for the deceased some thread to match the latter's skirt; the cold-blooded nonchalance with which he accepted the fact of his wife's sudden passing; the contradictory and untruthful stories he told of the circumstances of his wife's death and the time of day at which it occurred; the offer of a bribe to the district attorney as an inducement to dismiss the proceedings against him, a fact constituting well-nigh irrefragable evidence of the consciousness of guilt—these, and the many other circumstances above narrated herein, all of which stand in the record entirely unexplained, and uncontradicted, and which, if true, and believed so to be by the jury (and it was entirely the function of the jury to determine whether they were or were not true), would seem to leave no other course open to a body of intelligent and fair-minded men and women to whom the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence was submitted, but to find him guilty as charged.

[5] Of course, any conflict arising in the testimony addressed to any particular vital-circumstance in the case was for the jury to solve and determine, and this is true as to any real or apparent inconsistencies which may have arisen in the testimony of any witness. If there is substantial evidence in the case warranting the conclusion at which the jury arrived, it becomes immaterial upon appeal whether there was or was not a conflict in the evidence or any inconsistency in the testimony of any particular witness. These rules are elementary, and their mere statement is conclusive of their correctness.

Upon this branch of the case, we hold it to be our duty, in view of the convincing circumstances of guilt brought out by the evidence, to leave the case where the jury left it, superadding, however, the expression of our conviction, following from a critical examination and consideration of said evidence, that the defendant was, indeed, fortunate that the verdict was of a character to relieve him of the requirement of suffering the extreme penalty annexed to the crime of murder by the law of this state.

[6] 2. It is next contended that error was committed by allowing the people to show that Hudson Jack, the Indian boy, had, prior to the trial, made a statement with reference to the scream that he testified to having heard which differed in a certain important particular from his testimony upon that subject. Hudson Jack was asked, on his examination by the district attorney, whether the scream that he heard was that of a man or a woman, to which he replied that he did not know. The district attorney thereafter called H. R. Taylor, and asked him about a conversation he had had with the Indian boy on the morning following the day of the death of Mrs. Spencer, in which, after telling him of the death of Mrs. Spencer, the Indian boy replied either that "I heard her holler" or "We heard her holler." This so-called impeaching testimony was offered by the district attorney and allowed by the court upon the theory that it came within the terms of section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows:

"The party producing a witness is not allowed to impeach his credit by evidence of bad character, but he may contradict him by other evidence, and may also show that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony, as provided in section two thousand and fifty-two."

The purpose of the above section is to permit a party who has, in good faith, placed a witness upon the stand, with the distinct understanding that he will give testimony in support of his side of the issue, but, instead of so doing, and to the surprise of the party presenting him as such witness, has given damaging testimony against said party, to show that, prior to giving his testimony, he made a statement which, if testified to, would be favorable to the party so making him his witness. When invoked on appropriate occasions, this section involves a most salutary rule of evidence. Zipperlen v. Southern Pacific Co., 7 Cal. App. 206, 214, 217, 93 Pac. 1049. But, to entitle the party to contradict such a witness, it must appear that he was taken by surprise by the testimony of the witness, and that said testimony, as stated, was prejudicial to his case. A party has no right to invoke the aid of that section merely for the purpose of getting into the record testimony which otherwise could not be brought thereinto because of its incompetency.

"The mere failure of a witness to give favorable testimony for the party producing him does not entitle such party to prove that he has made contrary statements elsewhere." People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 532, 75 Pac. 103; People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 345, 83 Pac. 43; Zipperlen v. Southern Pacific Co., supra.

[7] In the present instance, the testimony of Taylor was not admissible under the section above referred to. It does not appear from the record that the district attorney, when he put the Indian on the witness stand, expected any other testimony from him than that given by him, and, if there was a material difference between the testimony as given by that witness and the statement which Taylor testified that the Indian had previously made to him, then the effect of allowing the testimony of Taylor would be to admit into the record hearsay evidence. And, even if there was no material variance between the two statements, the testimony of Taylor would still be incompetent, as the testimony of a witness cannot be bolstered by showing that he had extrajudicially made, at some time prior to the giving of his testimony, the same statement that he has made as a witness.

[8] But, when scrutinizingly analyzed, and so considered, or as it may reasonably be interpreted, we cannot see that there is any material difference between the testimony as a whole of the Indian boy and the statement which the witness Taylor testified that the boy made on the occasion referred to. The district attorney, it will be recalled, after getting from the Indian boy a statement that he had heard a scream, but did not know whether the voice was that of a man or a woman, asked him if the scream was from a "light" or a "heavy" voice, to which the lad replied that it was a "light" voice. From this the inference is reasonable, or would be so to any person of fair intelligence, and, in support of the verdict, we may assume that the jury drew that inference from said reply of the witness that, in thus using the terms "light" voice and "heavy" voice, the district attorney intended to convey to the Indian's mind the distinction between a female voice and a male voice, the term "light" voice being, naturally, intended as a description of a female voice and the term "heavy" voice likewise intended as a description of a male voice. Under this view, therefore, which we take to be well founded, the jury could, with good reason, have inferred, from the answer made by the Indian to that question, that what he meant to say was that, while he could not positively answer whether the voice was that of a male or a female, it, nevertheless, being a "light" voice, sounded more like that of a female. At any rate, the jury, it must be assumed, understood the question of the district attorney as involving, descriptively, the distinction between a male and a female voice, and could have accepted the statement of the Indian that the voice that screamed was a light voice as a circumstance tending strongly to show the scream was that of a female, and, therefore, the testimony of Taylor as to the statement made to him by the Indian could add but little, if any, force to the testimony which was competently before the jury, the purpose of which was to prove that the scream of a woman was heard at the time stated by the Indian. From this consideration, or even if there may be perceived some variance between the statement which Taylor testified the Indian made to him and the testimony of the Indian, it is apparent that the ruling admitting Taylor's testimony could not have materially contributed toward the crystallization of the result arrived at below. Indeed, even if it be conceded that there is some variance between the two statements, it will be admitted that it is so slight that we are justified in declaring that, in view of the entire record, the effect of the ruling allowing Taylor's testimony was not to produce a miscarriage of justice. Const., art. 6, § 4½.

[9] 3. The "demonstration" to which objection is here registered, and which it is claimed resulted in great prejudice to the accused at the trial, arose in the following manner: Pending the trial, and before the people had closed their case, a test was made by Sheriff Shaul and Mr. and Mrs. Siddell to ascertain whether the scream of a woman made at Holt wharf could be heard at the Indian camp where Hudson Jack was at the time that he said he heard the scream of some one on the night of the death of Mrs. Spencer. The sheriff went to the place where Jack said he was at the time and Mr. and Mrs. Siddell went to the Holt wharf. While thus they were stationed, Mrs. Siddell screamed three times, the first time quite loud, and, at the request of the sheriff who called to her from where he was standing, she gave a second scream in "a softer voice" and then another scream "still softer." The sheriff was called to the stand and testified that he heard all three screams distinctly. Mr. and Mrs. Siddell corroborated his testimony as to the making of the test. The ground of the objection to the testimony as to the test so made was and is that the test was not made under precisely the same conditions as those which existed on the evening that Hudson Jack claimed to have heard the scream of a human voice coming from Holt wharf. The difference in the conditions appears to be this: That Hudson Jack said he was lying upon his bed when he heard the scream, whereas the sheriff was in a standing position, and out in the open when the test to which he testified was made; also Siddell testified that the night on which the drowning occurred was a calm, still, bright night, with no wind blowing or any disturbance from any source, while the night the test was made the wind was blowing and noises incident to disturbances of the waters of the lake by the wind were going on. We are of the opinion that the objection is without substantial merit and goes more to the weight of the testimony than its competency. "Rarely, if ever, can an experiment be made where the conditions are in every respect a reproduction of those into which an inquiry is being made. The rule requires only substantial likeness" (State v. Nowells, 135 Iowa, 60, 109 N. W. 1018), and we think that in this case the conditions were substantially the same on the night that the experiment was made as they were on the night of the drowning. If anything, the atmospheric and climatic conditions at the time that the test was made were less favorable to the hearing of a scream at the distance existing between the point where Hudson Jack was and the point where the scream seemed to proceed from than they were on the night Mrs. Spencer's life was lost.

In People v. Phelan, 123 Cal. 551, 568. 56 Pac. 424, 431, a question similar to that which we now have in hand was disposed of by the Supreme Court, per Chief Justice Beatty, as follows:

"Exception was taken to certain rulings of the court admitting evidence of experiments made by direction of the prosecution for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of some of defendant's witnesses. The testimony related to sounds heard in the nighttime in the vicinity of defendant's cabin. The experiments were conducted at the same place, but in the daytime, and it was not shown that the atmospheric conditions—such as humidity, temperature, et cetera—were the same. The court did not err in admitting this testimony. The principal conditions were the same and the jury could weigh and make allowances for the differences referred to. They affected the weight, but not the competency, of the evidence."

There are several other exceptions to the action of the court in allowing certain testimony to be given. These we have carefully examined, and thus have been convinced that, even conceding the objections, or some of them, to be well taken, no injury resulted to the defendant therefrom. As to these objections, and as to the record generally in this case, the following observations made in the case of People v. Fealy, 33 Cal. App. 605, 615, 165 Pac. 1034, 1038, which, like this was one in which the proof of the crime charged was dependent entirely upon circumstantial evidence, are of cogent pertinency to this case:

"It [the crime charged] was supported by what appears to be very powerful circumstances; and, while it is no doubt true, as might reasonably be expected, and, indeed, quite unavoidable in a case where as in this, multitudinous as well as multifarious circumstances are required to be shown to prove the ultimate fact, some erroneous statements or testimony found their way here and there in the record, still a careful examination and consideration of all the testimony, has convinced us that, in the main, the testimony complained of was not only pertinent to the case but legally competent, and that the few errors which were committed were of little consequence, or bore upon matters which, in view of the strong circumstantial case legitimately made against the defendant, could have exerted no baleful influence in bringing about the result arrived at by the jury."

We have painstakingly and with earnest solicitude examined this record, deeming it not in contravention of ordinary propriety to elaborately review the facts herein, since the case is one, so far as the people were concerned, which, as must now be apparent, was planted entirely and exclusively upon circumstantial evidence and, so far as the defendant is concerned, is of obvious moment. We have not from this investigation been able to persuade ourselves that the jury reached an erroneous conclusion upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused, or that the errors of law as assigned by the defendant were such as to justify us in holding that he was not accorded a fair and impartial trial.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 108 v. ASH et al.,
Board of Sup'rs. (Civ. 2450.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 21, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1922.)

1. Courts ⇨207(5) — District Court of Appeal will not dismiss prohibition proceeding because subject-matter is of equitable cognizance.

As under Const. art. 6, § 4, District Courts of Appeal have authority to issue writs of prohibition, the court, having issued an alternative writ and signified its willingness to entertain the proceeding, will not dismiss it merely because the subject to which the writ pertains is solely of equitable cognizance and in the exclusive appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court unless transferred.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨231—Board of supervisors act judicially or quasi judicially in hearing on assessment.

In a hearing upon a reclamation district assessment as reported by assessment commissioners, a board of supervisors acts in a judicial or quasi judicial capacity, since it sits for the purpose of hearing and determining controverted facts.

3. Prohibition ⇨10(1)—Lies to prevent unlawful exercise of power or to annul proceedings resulting therefrom.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1068, 1103, the writ of prohibition, whose office is to test the question whether any board or tribunal has, in the exercise of judicial or quasi judicial functions, exceeded its jurisdiction or threatens to do so, will lie either to annul proceedings resulting from the unlawful exercise of such power or to prevent such board or tribunal from acting in the premises, provided there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.

4. Waters and water courses ⇨231—Apportionment of assessment based on superseded plans and estimates held not a just apportionment.

An apportionment of a reclamation district assessment based upon plans and estimates of the district trustees which had been rescinded and revoked by them and superseded by a new plan and estimates embracing some of the items and estimates of the previous plans, and containing other items and estimates of a different kind, and changing some of the former items and estimates, would not be a just apportionment of an assessment made on the new plan and estimates.

5. Prohibition ⇨3(1)—Lies to prevent apportionment of reclamation district assessment based on superseded plans and estimates notwithstanding statute authorizing action to modify or annul.

Prohibition is a proper remedy to restrain a board of supervisors from further proceeding in connection with purported reclamation district assessment lists filed by commissioners of assessment, and based on a reclamation plan which had been rescinded and revoked by the district trustees and superseded by a new or amendatory one, notwithstanding Pol. Code, § 3462, authorizing an action to correct, modify, or annul the assessment.

6. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Validity of plans can be raised only by those directly interested.

The question of the validity of reclamation plans adopted for reclamation and irrigation works in combined reclamation and irrigation districts can be raised only by those directly interested in and affected by the provisions of such plans.

7. Prohibition ⇨28—If jurisdiction depends on invalidity of reclamation plans, court may determine the question.

If the reclamation plan and estimates of a reclamation district are absolutely void on their face and proper determination of the question of jurisdiction of board of supervisors to hear objections to assessment based on plan previously adopted requires examination of the latter plan, with a view of ascertaining its validity, the court in a prohibition proceeding may make such examination and determination, though landowners are not parties.

8. Waters and water courses ⇨225—Excess of power in adopting reclamation plan held not to invalidate whole plan.

If trustees of a combined reclamation and irrigation district in adopting a new or amendatory plan and estimates under Pol. Code, § 3454, subd. 6, and section 3455, exceeded their power in attempting to establish the particular quantity of water and the source and duty thereof which a particular area should be entitled to, this did not invalidate the entire plan, but might be regarded as surplusage.

9. Waters and water courses ⇨247(1)—Landowners may prevent unjust distribution of water, though in accordance with reclamation plan adopted.

Landowners of a combined reclamation and irrigation district may, by appropriate action in the courts, prevent the unjust distribution of water or an unjust imposition of the duty of the water by the district board of trustees, even though the reclamation plan adopted by the trustees illegally or legally determined definitely the particular areas which should receive particular water, and fixed the duty of the water.

Original application by Reclamation District No. 108, for a writ of prohibition directed to George Ash and others, as members of and constituting the Board of Supervisors of the County of Colusa. Writ granted.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, and Hiram W. Johnson, Jr., of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, Chas. K. Atran and Millington & Millington, all of Colusa, for respondents.

Elston, Clark & Nichols, of Berkeley, amici curiæ.

HART, J. This is an original application for a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondents, as members of the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, from further proceeding in connection with a purported assessment list, filed with said board by the commissioners of assessment in and for the petitioner herein on the 5th day of December, 1921, and from proceeding with the hearing of said purported assessment and from making any order in connection therewith.

The petitioner is a duly formed, organized, and existing reclamation district under the laws of the state of California, which said district embraces, and has at all times mentioned in said petition embraced, lands situated partly in the county of Colusa and partly in the county of Yolo, the larger part of said lands being situated within the limits of the said county of Colusa; that said district was reorganized in the year 1917, and that all the lands therein are now, and at all times mentioned in the petition have been, situated within the boundaries of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district. The board of trustees of said district on August 31, 1917, adopted a plan of reclamation for the lands situated in said district together with estimates of the sums of money required to carry the same into execution, and within due legal time filed said plan and estimates as required by law with the clerk of the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, and thereupon the said clerk certified two copies thereof to the reclamation board of the state of California. After due hearing and due legal notice given the said plan was approved by the said reclamation board, and thereafter, in the month of November, 1918, the said board of trustees reported the fact of the approval of said plan by the said reclamation board to the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa. Thereafter, and in the month of November, 1918, the board of supervisors appointed L. L. Hicok, H. L. Haehl, and Charles De St. Maurice as commissioners of assessment, pursuant to section 3456 of the Political Code, for the purpose of levying an assessment based upon said plan and estimates, and thereafter the said commissioners of assessment duly qualified as such. On the 19th of August, 1920, the board of trustees of said reclamation district adopted a new, supplemental, and additional plan of reclamation for the lands situated within said district, together with estimates of cost of said works of reclamation and irrigation of said district, and certain modifications and amendments to the existing plan adopted on the 31st day of August, 1917. The said new or supplemental plan and modification was filed with the board of supervisors and subsequently with the state reclamation board, as required by law, and said new or additional or supplemental plan was, within due time, approved by the last-named board and the fact of such approval reported to the board of supervisors of said county of Colusa by petitioner. Thereafter the board of supervisors made an order appointing the said Hicok, Haehl, and De St. Maurice as commissioners of assessment.

The petition alleges that—

On the 27th day of September, 1921, the board of trustees of petitioner "did by a resolution, duly adopted on the said day, rescind, vacate and set aside the said plan and estimates of August 31, 1917, hereinbefore referred to, also the plan and estimates of August 19, 1920, hereinbefore referred to."

The petition then sets forth the resolution just referred to, and, after reciting the facts as to the plan and estimates adopted in August, 1917, and the supplemental and additional plan adopted in August, 1920, it proceeds:

"Whereas, it now appears that the said plans adopted by the said board of trustees on the 31st day of August, 1917, and the said plans adopted by the said district on the 19th day of August, 1920, when construed together, contained ambiguities and uncertainties, and that by reason thereof the intent of said board of trustees in connection with the said plan of August 31, 1917, and the said plans of August 19, 1920, is not clearly expressed; and

"Whereas, it was the intent of the said board of trustees in the said plans of August, 19, 1920, that the drainage ditches of said reclamation district No. 108 should not be used as being part of said irrigation system of the said district, but that a separate system of irrigation canals should be constructed so as to irrigate exclusively the area of lands described in the said plans of August 19, 1920; and

"Whereas, this intent of the said board of trustees is not clearly expressed in the said plans adopted on August 19, 1920, and when construed with the plans adopted on August 31st, 1917; and

"Whereas, in the plans adopted on August 19, 1920, certain tracts of lands described in the area to be irrigated cannot be irrigated when said plans are completed, as there are no irrigation canals leading to the same or provided in any of said plans; and

"Whereas, the estimates contained in the said plans of August 31, 1917, and of August 19, 1920, required revision and changes; and, whereas, there are other reasons in addition to the reasons above enumerated, requiring that the said plans and estimates adopted on August 31, 1917, and the said plans adopted on August 19, 1920, should be rescinded, vacated and set aside and that the respective resolutions of the board of trustees adopting the said plans of August 31, 1917, and the said plans of August 19, 1920, should likewise be rescinded, vacated and set aside:

"Now, therefore, be it resolved, by the board of trustees of reclamation district No. 108:

"First. That the said plans of August 31, 1917, hereinbefore referred to, together with the estimates therein contained, and the resolution of the board of trustees of said district adopting the same be, and the same are hereby rescinded, vacated and set aside.

"Second. That the said plans of August 19, 1920, hereinbefore referred to, together with the estimates therein contained, and the resolution of the board of trustees of said district adopting the same, be and the same are hereby rescinded, vacated and set aside.

"Third. That a copy of this resolution certified to by the secretary of the board of trustees of said district be forthwith filed in the office of the clerk of the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, state of California, and a similar copy so certified to by the secretary of said district be forthwith filed in the office of the secretary of the reclamation board of the state of California and that similar copies so certified be forthwith delivered respectively to H. L. Haehl, Chas. De St. Maurice and L. L. Hicok, the three commissioners of assessment appointed by the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, state of California, and now acting in apportioning the assessment required by the said plans of August 31, 1917, and the said plans of August 19, 1920, both of which have this day been rescinded, vacated and set aside."

It is alleged in the petition that immediately upon the adoption of the foregoing resolution the said board of trustees caused to be filed in the office of the board of supervisors of said county of Colusa a certified copy of the said resolution and also with the reclamation board of the state of California, and delivered a certified copy to each of said commissioners of assessment. It is further alleged that on the 27th day of September, 1921, the board of trustees of said district, in pursuance of said resolution, adopted a resolution directing the engineer of the said district to prepare a new set of plans and estimates, in accordance with which resolution said engineer did, on the 19th day of October, 1921, present a new plan and estimates of the sum of money required to carry the same into execution to the said trustees of the said district; that on the 19th day of October, 1921, said board of trustees adopted the same as the plan of reclamation in said district and also the estimates as therein contained; that the total estimate of the sum required for the consummation of said plan is the sum of $3,137,336.54. The resolution adopting said plan is set out in hæc verba in the petition and contains, among other things, a provision that said amendatory and additional plan and estimates shall and "do hereby supersede, in all particulars, the plan and estimates of said reclamation district," which were adopted on August 31, 1917, and also those adopted on August 19, 1920. It also provided:

"That said amendatory and additional plan and estimates be filed in triplicate with the county clerk of the county of Colusa, state of California, in accordance with the provisions of law, and that necessary steps be taken for the approval of the amendatory and additional plans and estimates before the reclamation board of the state of California and when so approved that the necessary steps for the appointment of commissioners of assessment for the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, * * * be had in accordance with the provisions of law."

The said plan and estimates (those last adopted), were filed with the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa and the State Reclamation Board, as required by law.

The petition further alleges that upon the adoption of the latest plan and estimates the said board of trustees prepared and filed with the county clerk of the county of Colusa a report of the adoption of said amendatory and additional plan and estimates, the same containing the said plan and estimates, which said report contained recitals to the effect that the amount of money required by said estimates is the sum of $3,137,336.54; that all the lands situated within said reclamation district are situated within the boundaries of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, and that said amendatory and additional plans and estimates supersede in all particulars the plans and estimates, original and amendatory, previously adopted by the board of trustees of said district.

It is further alleged:

That said plan and estimates were duly certified to the reclamation board of the state by the clerk of Colusa county; "that the said plan and estimates so adopted on the 19th day of October, 1921, by the board of trustees, and so filed with the clerk of the said board of supervisors on the 20th day of October, 1921, embrace some of the items and estimates contained in the plan and estimates of August 31, 1917, and also contained in the new, supplemental, and additional plan and estimates of August 19, 1920, but also contain many other items and estimates of a different kind, and some of the items and estimates contained in said plans of August 31, 1917, and August 19, 1920, were modified and changed"; that on December 30, 1921, the reclamation board of the state of California, after due hearing, made an order approving said plan and estimates of October 19, 1921.

The petition alleges that—

"Notwithstanding the facts hereinbefore averred, the said commissioners of assessment did, on the 5th day of December, 1921, with said board of supervisors, file a purported assessment upon the lands within the said reclamation district No. 108, based upon the said plan and estimates of August 31, 1917, and the said plan and estimates of August 19, 1920, and that on the said 5th day of December, 1921, the said respondents, as members of and as constituting the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, * * * set the said assessment for hearing for Wednesday, the 21st day of December, 1921, * * * and gave notice that at such time any landowner would be heard in connection with and concerning said assessment, and on said December 21, 1921, continued the hearing until January 4, 1922," and that said respondents intend, on the day last mentioned, to proceed to equalize the said assessment upon the assumption that the plans and estimates of August 31, 1917, and August 19, 1920, respectively, are still in full force and effect, and when said hearing is completed, to make an order equalizing the said assessment and to deposit the said assessment list with such order of approval indorsed thereon in the office of the county treasurer of the county of Colusa and also in the office of the county treasurer of the county of Yolo, and that "thereupon the said purported assessment will become a colorable lien upon the lands within such district to the extent of the amount levied upon each tract of land as described in said purported assessment."

It is finally alleged that—

"There is no plan or estimates upon which such assessment can be based, and therefore the said respondents and the said board of supervisors of the county of Colusa * * * are acting without jurisdiction in having such trial and hearing upon the said purported assessment so filed."

The respondents, upon the return day of this writ, filed a general demurrer to the petition, and also filed the plan and estimates adopted on October 19, 1921. It was stipulated that the said plan and estimates might be considered in the determination of the questions arising upon the demurrer.

[1] We may first dispose of the proposition, urged by counsel for respondents, that this proceeding should be dismissed, for the reason, as suggested, that "the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction in this matter, and as a matter of practice the petition should be presented to that court." The answer to this suggestion is to be found in article 6, § 4, of the Constitution, which expressly vests in the District Courts of Appeal the authority to issue writs of prohibition. In Favorite v. Superior Court of Riverside County, 181 Cal. 261, 265, 184 Pac. 15, 16 (8 A. L. R. 290), it is said, speaking of a like suggestion:

"As a matter of policy and practice, both this court and the district courts, respectively, have at times refused to take jurisdiction of an original proceeding where the case involved was in the superior court and was originally appealable to the other court. Collins v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 264 [81 Pac. 509]; Estate of Turner, 39 Cal. App. 56 [177 Pac. 854]. But this practice was not adopted because of any want of original jurisdiction in such cases in either court. This was expressly stated in the Collins Case."

Therefore, having once issued the alternative writ and thus signified its willingness to entertain the proceeding, a district court of appeal will not dismiss such proceeding merely because the subject-matter to which the writ pertains is solely of equitable cognizance and of which the Supreme Court has exclusive appellate jurisdiction, subject, of course, to the constitutional right of the latter court to transfer the cause involving such subject-matter to a district court of appeal for hearing and decision.

It is, however, urged by counsel, appearing amici curiæ, in opposition to the issuance of the writ, that the petitioner has a remedy in the ordinary course of law—that is to say, that section 3462 of the Political Code affords a complete and adequate remedy by providing that—

"Any person aggrieved by the decision of the board of supervisors [on the hearing of the objections to the assessment lists] may commence an action in the superior court of the county in which the greater part of said district is situated to have said assessment corrected, modified or annulled."

We do not agree with counsel in this contention.

[1, 2] In the hearing upon the assessment as reported by the assessment commissioners, the board of supervisors act in a judicial or quasi judicial capacity, since, in the performance of the duty of equalizing the assessment upon written objections made by the owners of land embraced within the district to the apportionment of the assessment as made by the assessment commissioners, the board sits for the purpose of hearing and determining controverted facts. Robinson v. Board of Supervisors of Sacramento County, 16 Cal. 208; Imperial Water Co. v. Board of Supervisors, etc., 162 Cal. 14, 120 Pac. 780; Pac. Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822; Anaheim Sugar Co. v. Orange County, 181 Cal. 212, 183 Pac. 809; Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 Pac. 965. It follows that a writ, whose office is to test the question whether any board, corporation, or tribunal has, in the exercise of judicial or quasi judicial functions, exceeded its jurisdiction, or threatens to do so, in a given matter, will lie either to annul proceedings resulting from the unlawful exercise of such power or prevent such board or tribunal from acting in the premises, provided, of course, that there is not, as to the matter as to which the alleged usurpation or attempted usurpation of power has been or is about to be taken, "a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." Sections 1063 and 1103, Code Civ. Proc.

[4, 5] Furthermore, it is clear that, if the present plan and estimates are in all respects valid, the assessment made and returned by the assessment commissioners and now pending before the board of supervisors for hearing, and which it is alleged in the petition the said board intends, if not restrained from so doing, to consider and definitely pass upon, having been made with reference to the plan and estimates adopted in the year 1917, as amended in the year 1920, is, so far as the present plan and estimates are concerned, wholly nugatory and void. This conclusion, upon the assumption stated, is justified by the allegations of the petition, which are admitted to be true by the demurrer, that the plan and estimates adopted in 1921, while embracing some of the items and estimates contained in the previous plans and estimates, "also contain many other items and estimates of a different kind and some of the items and estimates contained in the said plans of August 31, 1917, and August 19, 1920, were modified and changed." Thus it is readily to be noted that an apportionment of the assessment, based upon the previous plans and estimates, cannot be held to operate as a just apportionment of an assessment made upon a plan and estimates in many respects entirely different from the former. It is, therefore obvious that the legal propriety of the remedy here sought cannot justly be questioned. Indeed, it is clear that said remedy is peculiarly appropriate to the situation presented here for the reason that, again assuming that the present plan and estimates are perfectly valid, the approval of the assessment lists in question and the filing of the same with the county treasurers of the two counties into which the district extends would operate, ipso facto, to burden the lands in the district with an illegal yet colorable lien. The situation might lead to much confusion and many complications which would stand as a barrier against the progress of the work of reclamation. For instance, it might and probably would result in a multiplicity of suits against landowners to recover the assessments, and this certainly would impede the progress of the work required to effectuate the purposes designed by the organization of the reclamation district.

The respondents take the position in this discussion, among others, that the plan and estimates adopted in October, 1921, are invalid upon their face, and that, this being true, the plan of 1917, as amended by the plan of 1920, is still in full force and effect, and that, inasmuch as the commissioners of assessment made their assessment upon said last-mentioned plan and reported the same to the board of supervisors, it is the duty of the board and within its jurisdiction under the law to proceed with the equalization of the assessment as so reported. On the other hand, the petitioner contends that the question of the validity or invalidity of the plan of 1921 cannot be inquired into in this proceeding; that, since the board of supervisors has no power to pass upon the question of the validity of any plan of reclamation adopted by a reclamation district and its duty with reference to said plan after the same has been duly adopted by the board of trustees of the district and approved by the State Reclamation Board is merely to hear objections to the assessment as reported by the assessment commissioners and to perform such other acts with reference to said assessment as are set forth in section 3462 of the Political Code, it cannot complain or raise the question of the validity of the plan adopted or the action of the board of trustees in adopting it. Of course, as the attack upon said plan and estimates in this proceeding is in its nature collateral, their invalidity, if invalid they be, must appear upon the face thereof, otherwise they are not subject to attack herein. In this connection, it should be stated that counsel for the petitioner declare that, "while it is true that the plan of October, 1921, was filed, and it was stipulated that it might be regarded as a part of the record, nevertheless, this was done purely to aid the court in the better understanding of the facts set forth in the petition and not with the idea that the court could pass upon the sufficiency of said plan or the right of respondents, or any landowner, to contest the same or any part thereof" in this proceeding, since, so counsel proceed, "such a question would be foreign to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors."

[6, 7] Abstractly speaking, the petitioner is right in its contention that the question of the validity of plans adopted for reclamation and irrigation works in combined reclamation and irrigation districts can be raised only by those who are directly interested in and affected by the provisions of said plans. Town of Antioch v. Williams' Irrigation District (Cal. Sup.) 205 Pac. 688; City Council of City and County of Denver v. Board of Commissioners of Adams County, 33 Colo. 1, 77 Pac. 858, 860; People v. Ames, 24 Colo. 422, 51 Pac. 426; Ames v. People, 26 Colo. 83, 56 Pac. 656; People v. Salomon, 54 Ill. 39. But this is not to say that if the plan and estimates of a reclamation district be void upon their face, the same may not be ignored by the board of supervisors or so held to be in a collateral proceeding before a court, where the question of their validity is vital to the determination of the ultimate issue submitted therein for decision. If the plan of October 1921, were absolutely void upon its face and the proper determination of the question whether the board of supervisors of Colusa county was without jurisdiction to hear objections to the assessment based upon the previously adopted plan of the district or to take any other proceeding with reference thereto would require an examination of said plan of 1921, with a view of ascertaining whether it was a valid plan under the law, we can conceive of no reason why we would not be authorized to make such examination and determination in this proceeding, despite the fact that those directly interested in and affected by said plan—the landowners of the district—are not parties hereto.

[8] But we are of the opinion that the plan as it is exhibited to us here is not absolutely void. And, preliminarily, we may take occasion to say that, when, at the oral argument, it was stipulated that the plan and estimates of 1921 might be considered by us in the decision of the question of jurisdiction submitted herein, we did not understand that such consideration was to be limited in its scope as indicated by counsel for the petitioner. Counsel for the respondents raised and argued the question of the invalidity of the plan of 1921 in support of their position that the board of supervisors of Colusa county would act within its lawful jurisdiction in hearing and determining such matters as the law requires that body to hear and determine in connection with the assessment lists reported to said board by the assessment commissioners, and distinctly stated that he would submit with his argument said plan to the court, to the end that the question whether the plan was invalid might be inquired into and determined. And counsel for the petitioner thereupon stipulated that the said plan might be so submitted. We will therefore consider the plan in passing upon the demurrer to the petition, and briefly express the reason for our conclusion that the plan and estimates of October, 1921, are not invalid.

We may first observe that it is not claimed here that the board of trustees was without authority to adopt an amendatory or a supplemental plan to supersede the plans of 1917 and 1920. Indeed, such right in the said board of trustees cannot justly be challenged, in view of the provision of section 3455 of the Political Code to the effect that a board of trustees of a reclamation district may at any time file with the clerk of the county an amendatory, additional or supplemental plan, or even an entirely new plan (section 3454, subd. 6, Pol. Code [Stats. 1917, p. 1195]), and this right would, of course, imply the further right in the board to so revise the estimates as to make them accord with the amendatory or supplemental plan, and thus change the basis of the assessment. But the objection that respondents make to the said plan, stating it in general terms, is that the board of trustees of the district has reserved to or invested itself with unauthorized power in the matter of the distribution of the water of the district for irrigating purposes and the use of the drainage ditches involved in the plan. In other words, and employing counsel's own language, the position of respondents is this:

"The board of trustees, as appears on the face of the new plan, has not been satisfied to perform its statutory duty, but has assumed the jurisdiction and power to attempt to control the use of water dedicated to lands in the district; to limit and define the enjoyment of the drainage ditches called for in the plan; to ascertain and determine the duty of water in connection with the irrigation works; to determine that certain lands heretofore irrigated shall not receive water under the new plan, and in many other ways to unlawfully reach out and control the property rights of the individual landowners."

It is not necessary to enter into a detailed examination herein of the plan or even those portions thereof which it is claimed involve the exercise of unwarranted power by the board of trustees of the district for the purpose of considering the point now in hand. It is deemed sufficient, for the purposes of this decision, to explain, in a very general way, the grounds upon which the asserted invalidity of the plan is based.

Acting under the authority of the provision of section 3455 of the Political Code, as amended by the Legislature of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 1197), providing that the term "works of reclamation," as used in said section, shall include not only such public works, etc., as are necessary for unwatering of lands in reclamation districts, but shall also include such like works as may be necessary to water or irrigate the same lands in such districts, the board of trustees, for the purpose, as they seem to have conceived, of facilitating the irrigation of the lands comprising the district in question without impinging upon the just rights or the requirements as to irrigation of any of the landowners therein or imposing upon any particular tracts of land in the district more than their just burden for such irrigation, subdivided said district into five units or subdivisions. The principal basis of such subdivision is in the nature as well as the convenience of the source of the water supply available to each unit. These several units were and are designated as follows: First, the Wilkins Slough system; second, the Boyers Bend system; third, the Tyndall system; fourth, the El Dorado Bend system; fifth, the Steiner Bend system. In some of these units the lands are riparian, while in others the lands are nonriparian. It appears that the district obtained a permit from the state water commission to divert from the Sacramento river sufficient water for irrigating approximately 30,000 acres of land in said district. These last-mentioned lands are situated entirely within the Wilkins Slough unit. In apportioning the water rights of the district in the plan of 1921 the board of trustees specifically and definitely declared that—

"No portion of land and no portion of any tract of land lying outside of the boundaries described above as parcels A and B shall be irrigated by the Wilkins Slough system as herein described and no owner of any such land lying outside of said boundaries shall be permitted or authorized to use for any purpose whatsoever any of the water in the irrigation canals in said system."

It is then provided that—

As to the duty of water "the five hundred second feet of permit No. 388 will be diverted through the system for the service of the 30,210 acres in parcel A described above, giving an average duty of water of about sixty acres per second foot."

It is declared by counsel, and it appears to be true, that this system, as it is described and delineated on the maps which are a part of the plan as prepared, was designed to serve all of the lands of the district, but it does not appear that it was capable of doing so or, at any rate, that it was practicable to do so. Counsel for respondents in their brief also assert, as illustrating the asserted arbitrary method whereby the board of trustees attempt in the plan of 1921 to dispose of the water to be used under permit No. 388, and to fix the duty of said water, that there was no limit made in the permit to the area in the district to be served thereunder, and that the water derived by virtue of such permit was to be used for the purpose of irrigating through the Wilkins Slough system all of the lands in the district or such of them as might require the same. Thus the specific objection to the plan is presented, and it is hence argued that it is beyond the power of the board definitely to establish the duty of water or likewise to establish a particular area which should be irrigated from the source referred to. The plan is similarly objected to in other particulars than the one here considered. But the objection which we have particularly explained is sufficient to illustrate the specific reasons upon which the respondents claim that the plan is invalid.

[9] We are not required to determine in this case the question whether, in exercising the right to establish in the plan the particular quantity of water and the source and duty thereof which a particular area shall be entitled to, the board of trustees exceeded its lawful power or authority. But, even if it were necessary to concede that it did, this, in our opinion, would not have the effect of invalidating the entire plan. If the fixing of particular quantities and the duty of water with reference to particular tracts of land in the district was beyond the power of the board of trustees, it would be clear that the exercise of that power by said board would involve a matter entirely foreign to the purpose for which the plan was to be established, and could and would be regarded as wholly surplusage. And, indeed, if it were true that the action of the board in this particular was in excess of its power (a proposition which, we desire to make plain, we do not decide), any attempt on the part of the board to apply the scheme so adopted to the detriment or injury of the rights of any landowner—that is to say, if by attempting to carry out the scheme as so established, any area or portion of the lands in the district is deprived of its just and necessary proportion of the water available to the district for its purposes—then the landowners thus aggrieved may prevent such wrong by an appropriate action in the courts. In other words, a remedy is readily available to the landowners of the district to prevent the unjust distribution of the water or an unjust imposition of the duty of the water by the board of trustees, even though it be true that the latter, in its plan of 1921, has illegally or even legally definitely determined the particular areas which shall receive particular water, and has likewise fixed the duty of the water. And we may add that such a course on the part of the landowners, should they find it necessary to adopt it, is to be preferred over any attempt at the determination of the question here, inasmuch as it would involve a direct attack upon the right of the board so to attempt to control the distribution of the water and the ditches and the canals in a particular way by express provision in the plan. At all events, we are firmly of the opinion that the power thus exercised by the board of trustees, even if ultra vires, does not amount to such a defect in the plan as to justify us in holding that the entire plan is thereby vitiated and rendered void. The board may always be required to distribute the water according to the just rights of the landowners by an appropriate proceeding in court at the behest of the latter.

The conclusion from the foregoing considerations necessarily is that, the plans of 1917 and 1920 having been superseded by the plan of 1921, and the assessment here concerned having been based and made on the plans thus superseded, the assessment so made is null and void, and therefore the board of supervisors of Colusa county is without jurisdiction to hear, entertain, and determine any proceeding or proceedings with reference to said assessment.

In accordance with the foregoing views the writ herein prayed for will be and the same is hereby ordered to be issued out of this court, directed to the respondents, commanding them to desist from taking any further proceeding affecting or from hearing or equalizing the assessment lists in question.

The purpose of the Torrens Act is not only to create and perpetrate a marketable title to and sought to be registered thereunder, but as well to conclusively determine all adverse claims against the registered land.

4. Records ☞9(5)—Court in Torrens proceeding has jurisdiction to adjudicate all claims affecting title.

The court hearing an application to register title under the Torrens Act has jurisdiction not only to ascertain and certify real estate titles, but to adjudicate all claims affecting in any manner the title in question.

5. Records ☞9(1)—Torrens proceeding not friendly proceeding as to incumbrancers.

A proceeding to register title under the Torrens Act is not, as claimed, a friendly proceeding as to incumbrancers claiming under the applicant.

6. Records ☞9(6)—Incumbrancers entitled to appear in proceeding under Torrens Law.

The Torrens Act, by its provision that the holder of an incumbrance is a necessary and proper party, recognizes the fact that he possesses certain rights for the protection of which he is entitled to appear.

7. Records ☞9(6)—Creditors secured by trust deed entitled to appear in proceeding to register title.

Under trust deed providing that, if grantor failed to appear and defend action affecting the property or the title thereto, the trustee and beneficiary could do so, the trustee and the secured creditor had not only the right, but the duty, to appear in a proceeding by the grantor to register the title, and was not bound to rely upon their interests being adequately protected by the grantor, especially as under the Torrens Act, § 45, a lien not correctly adjudicated and noted on the certificate would be ineffectual after one year.

8. Mortgages ☞209—Trustee entitled to reimbursement for expenses of appearing in proceeding to register title.

As a trustee under a deed of trust was not a mere volunteer in appearing in a proceeding by the mortgagor to register the title under the Torrens Act, the money expended in so doing was not unnecessarily or improperly expended, and the trustee was entitled to look to the mortgagor for reimbursement under Civ. Code, § 2273.

9. Appearance ☞8(6)—Stipulation for judgment in registration proceeding sufficient to constitute appearance.

Where, in a proceeding to register title under the Torrens Act, it was stipulated, after demurrers and objections had been overruled, on behalf of the objectors, that judgment might be entered under certain conditions, this was sufficient in itself to constitute an appearance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Suit by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company and another against William Grisct and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. On hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal. Judgment reversed.

Hickcox, Crenshaw & Trude, of El Centro, for appellants.

Banta & Banta, of El Centro, for respondents.

LENNON, J. The appeal in this case came to this court upon a petition for a rehearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First District, Second Division. The facts of the case, as evidenced by the pleadings, proof, and findings, are these: On July 15, 1916, the defendants herein, William Grisct and Eva Grisct, his wife, executed to the plaintiff Mortgage Guarantee Company their note for $4,000, payable three years after date, which note was secured by a deed of trust to the plaintiff Title Guarantee & Trust Company covering certain land in Imperial county. On April 19, 1917, the defendants herein made application to the superior court of Imperial county to have the title to the land which was the subject of the deed of trust registered under the Land Title Act, commonly known as the "Torrens Act," in effect December 19, 1914. Stats. 1915, p. 1932. Plaintiffs herein were duly served with notice of said application, and, appearing specially in the registration proceedings, interposed their respective demurrers and objections to the application. The demurrers assailed the application generally upon the grounds of the insufficiency of the facts stated, misjoinder of parties, ambiguity, etc., and especially upon the ground that certain of the facts alleged in the application showed that the appellants were not qualified to have registration of the title to the lands in question, and that the respondents in the registration proceedings, the plaintiffs here, were the owners of the legal title to said lands. The objection to the application which accompanied the demurrers was that the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, a respondent in the registration proceedings, and one of the plaintiffs here, was the owner of the legal title to the lands in question, and that it held such title in trust, with full power and authority to sell and dispose of the same in payment of an indebtedness upon a loan made to the then owners of said real property, and payable to the other respondent in the registration proceedings, the Mortgage Guarantee Company, upon default being made in the payment of either the principal or interest of such indebtedness. The said demurrers and the objection were disallowed by the court hearing the application for registration, and the respondents therein, the plaintiffs here, were directed to pay their own costs. Thereafter, on August 17, 1917, counsel for respondents in the registration proceedings entered into a stipulation, which was filed in the proceeding on September 24, 1917, assenting to the registration of the title to the lands in question "on condition that any certificate of title issued by the order of the court show therein as prior and taking precedence over all other incumbrances on said title," the trust deed in question. Thereafter, on July 17, 1918, pursuant to said stipulation, a decree was made and entered authorizing and directing the registration of the title to the lands in question under said Land Title Act, and accordingly on the last-mentioned date said land was registered by the registrar of titles of Imperial county as the separate property of the appellant William Griset, one of the defendants here. Said decree and the certificate of registration both show the title to said land registered subject to said deed of trust and the provisions thereof and subject to the rights of the plaintiffs herein as shown by said trust deed. The plaintiff herein, Title Guarantee & Trust Company, paid the filing costs, amounting to $7, incurred in the registration proceedings, and the sum of $50 as attorney's fees incurred in the presentation and prosecution of the demurrers and objections. Thereafter demand was made upon the defendants here that, as the applicants in the registration proceedings, they reimburse plaintiff Title Guarantee & Trust Company for the moneys thus expended. The demand was refused, and when the note secured by the trust deed became due the defendants herein tendered to the plaintiffs the amount of the principal and interest due thereon. The tender was refused by the plaintiff upon the ground that the amount of the tender was insufficient, in that it did not include the amount of the filing and attorney's fees incurred and paid by the plaintiff in the registration proceedings. This action was then instituted for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the court to sell the property held under the trust deed as security for the payment of the note.

The cause of action pleaded in the instant case was rested substantially upon the facts hereinbefore narrated, and proceeded primarily, upon the theory that, inasmuch as the trust deed in question did not contain the provision "with power of sale," the trustee did not have power to sell or otherwise dispose of the land held under the trust deed without an order of court so to do, and that therefore in order to enforce the provisions of the trust, it was necessary, under the requirements of the Land Title Act, under which the registration proceedings were had, to procure an order of court authorizing the sale of the property secured by the trust deed. Section 69, Land Title Law; Stats. 1915, p. 1944.

The plaintiffs' complaint alleged, among other things, that, in addition to the amount due on the note for the principal and interest, there was due to the plaintiffs the sum of $57 which they were compelled to pay as costs and attorney's fees in the registration proceedings, and that said last-mentioned sum was a necessary and a reasonable expenditure and was expended under and by the terms and according to the provisions of the deed of trust.

Answering the plaintiffs' complaint, the defendants admitted all of the material allegations thereof save and except the alleged need and right of plaintiffs appearing in the registration proceeding for the purpose of protecting the lien of the trust deed, the allegation concerning the amount, which included the said filing and attorney's fees claimed to be due on the note for principal and interest, and the allegation that the sum of $57 for said filing and attorney's fees in the registration proceeding was necessarily incurred under the terms of the trust deed or otherwise. Following a denial of the last-mentioned allegations, the defendants in their answer affirmatively allege that plaintiffs' appearance in the registration proceeding was neither necessary nor bona fide. By way of cross-complaint the defendants alleged a tender to and refusal by the plaintiffs of the full sum of principal and interest due on and under the terms of the note at the date of the tender, and that thereby the rights of the plaintiffs under the trust deed were extinguished. It was an admitted fact in the case that, as alleged in the cross-complaint, the application for registration of the title to the land in question fully and properly set forth all of the facts required by the Land Title Act to be set forth, and complied with all of the provisions and requirements of said act, and that, in addition thereto, said application averred that the land described therein for registration of title was subject to the terms and conditions of the trust and to the rights of the plaintiffs under the trust deed. It was also an admitted fact in the case, as alleged in the cross-complaint, that the title to the land in question was registered pursuant to the registration decree in the proceedings, subject to the terms of the trust deed and subject to the rights of plaintiffs as shown by the trust deed. It was a further admitted fact in the case that the sum tendered to plaintiffs on June 18, 1919, in satisfaction of the note and trust deed, covered the principal and interest due thereon on the date of the tender, but did not include the $57 incurred and paid for filing and attorney's fees in the registration proceedings.

Upon the issues thus raised and the admitted facts of the case a trial was had by the court below and judgment rendered and entered that plaintiffs were not entitled to the order of sale prayed for, and were not entitled under the trust deed to be reimbursed for the costs and attorney's fees incurred and expended in the registration proceedings, and that the defendants, upon the issue presented by the cross-complaint, have judgment upon the payment to the plaintiffs of the principal and interest tendered to the plaintiffs and found to be due on the note on of the day of the tender cancelling said note; directing the plaintiff Title Guarantee & Trust Company to execute a reconveyance of the property embraced within the terms of the trust deed; directing the registrar of titles of Imperial county to enter a memorial on the certificate of title and the duplicate thereof that said property was no longer subject to said trust deed and that the same was satisfied by order of the court. The judgment rests in part upon findings to the effect that it was unnecessary for plaintiffs, or either of them, to appear in the registration proceedings and that it was not necessary for plaintiffs, or either of them, to pay counsel fees and costs in the sum of $57, or in any other sum, in said proceeding, and that they, nor either of them, were compelled to pay said sum and that the same was not paid under or by the terms or according to the provisions of the trust deed. Upon this appeal from the judgment thus entered the only point urged in behalf of plaintiffs for a reversal is that the court erred in finding that it was unnecessary for plaintiffs to appear in the registration proceeding and that defendants were not bound by the provisions of the trust deed to pay the filing and attorney's fees incurred and paid in said proceeding. In this behalf it is the contention of plaintiffs that it was the right and duty of plaintiff, Title Guarantee & Trust Company, as trustee, to appear and defend against the registration proceeding under the terms of the trust, which required the trustee "to appear and defend in any action * * * to protect, preserve and defend said property and the title thereto, and to conserve and to commence and prosecute any action necessary to protect the same and to pay all expenses thereof."

[1-4] The petition for a rehearing was granted largely upon the theory that there was much merit in the point made, in effect, in the petition for rehearing, that a registration proceeding under the Torrens Act was not, in theory or in fact, an adversary proceeding, and that, under the facts set forth in the application for registration of the title to the land in question the plaintiffs in this action, the respondents in the registration proceedings, unnecessarily appeared therein and thereby burdened the property subject to the trust with an unnecessary and unprofitable expenditure, which should, therefore, be borne by the plaintiffs. Further consideration of the case convinces us that there is no merit in this contention. The proceeding under the Torrens Act is an adversary proceeding. It is not a proceeding sui generis, friendly in its nature, instituted merely for the purpose of obtaining conclusive evidence of title. While under the technical Code definition it is a special proceeding, nevertheless it differs in no material respect from an ordinary action in equity. The notice of hearing, required as in other civil actions, the method of service of summons, and the time for appearance after such service, are practically the same. Verified pleadings are required, and any pleadings, including, of course, a demurrer to the application, which are adequate to create and cover any issue necessary to a determination of the questions involved in the application, are permissible and proper. Frances Investment Co. v. Superior Court, Imperial County (Cal. Sup.) 208 Pac. 105; Duffy v. Shirden, 139 App. Div. 755, 124 N. Y. Supp. 529. An issue of fact claimed by a person claiming any interest in the land is to be, upon demand, tried by a jury. The jurisdiction to hear and determine the application is conferred upon the superior court, which is the ordinary trial tribunal. As pointed out in Frances Investment Co. v. Superior Court, supra, the course outlined for a Torrens proceeding is strikingly similar to that provided by general law for the ordinary civil action, from the filing of complaint to the rendition of judgment. Not only is the procedure provided by the Torrens Act that of an adversary proceeding, but the very object of the act is to furnish a title impregnable against every attack from any source, and the jurisdiction of the court, which is co-extensive with that contained in an equitable action to quiet title, confirms the conclusion that the registration proceedings provided by the Torrens Land Law are in fact adversary. The purpose of the Torrens Land Law is not only to create and perpetuate a marketable title to land sought to be registered under its provisions, but it was intended as well to conclusively determine every and all adverse claims against the registered land. For this purpose the court hearing the application to register has jurisdiction not only to ascertain and certify real estate titles, but to adjudicate all claims affecting in any manner the title in question, even to the extent of rescinding and setting aside a trust deed on the ground that it was procured by fraud. Frances Investment Co. v. Superior Court, supra. Notwithstanding the fact that in a particular case there is the possibility that the application for registration will not be opposed, nevertheless the proceeding is essentially an adversary one, for, a hostile claim being possible, there is, in contemplation of law, an adverse claim to be settled, and a right to be protected against a possible claimant. Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 40, 48, 90 Pac. 129, 121 Am. St. Rep. 90, 12 Ann. Cas. 829.

[5, 6] Nor is such a proceeding adverse only to persons opposing the registration and friendly to those claiming under the applicant. It was held in Hawes v. United States Trust Co. of New York, 142 App. Div. 789, 127 N. Y. Supp. 632, that a statute of that state similar to ours, authorizing appearance in title registration proceedings by persons adversely interested, was not intended to be limited in its application to persons desiring to oppose the application for registration, or to set up a cross-demand to have the title registered in their own behalf, but allows any person interested in the property, or whose interests may be affected by the judgment, to appear and interpose an answer setting up the precise interest in the property claimed. The holder of an incumbrance does have an interest in the property which may be affected by the judgment. The act itself, by the provision that such persons are necessary and proper parties, recognized the fact that they possess certain rights for the protection of which they are entitled to appear.

[7] The interests of the owner of the land being, as we have seen, hostile to the claims of the holder of the incumbrance, the latter is not bound to rely upon his interests being adequately protected by such owner. If, relying upon the theory that the suit is not hostile in its nature, and that every one who claims under the applicant will be taken care of by the terms of the decree, he fails to take any part in the proceeding, and by mistake or inadvertence the title to the land, the lien of the trust deed, or the amount thereof be not correctly adjudicated and noted on the certificate, he is bound by the decree, and cannot complain. At the end of the one year limitation, if he has failed to note the error, he is without a remedy. Section 45, Land Title Law; Stats. 1915, p. 1940. It is never the safe thing for a necessary party to an adverse proceeding to fail to appear when summoned into court. But, however that may be, the plaintiffs in this action were not required, as necessary respondents in the registration proceedings, to leave the protection of their interests in that proceeding to the applicants for registration whose interests were adverse. The plaintiffs here, as the respondents in the registration proceeding, not only had the right under the provisions of the trust deed, which required them to appear and defend in any action or proceeding affecting or purporting to affect the property or the trust, but it was their duty to appear if for no other purpose than to protect, as against possible mistake and inadvertence, the title of the land embraced by the trust deed, and to see that such title and the terms of the trust deed were fully established, legally decreed, and correctly registered.

[8] Having a right to appear, it cannot be said that the trustee in so coming in was a mere volunteer, and that the money so expended was an expenditure unnecessarily or improperly incurred. The trustee was merely carrying out the duty of its trust to protect the interests of the beneficiaries (Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 Pac. 145, 6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 275), and for such expenses, incurred in the performance of its duty, the trustee may look for reimbursement to the trust property (Cal. Civ. Code, § 2273; 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1089, 1091).

The case generally was correctly treated and decided by the District Court of Appeal in the first instance, and, being satisfied with the conclusion reached by said court, we hereby adopt and approve the opinion of Mr. Justice Nourse as follows:

"The position of respondents is that appellants did not appear in the land registration action or, as to the Mortgage Guarantee Company, if it did appear, it had no right to do so.

[9] "The first proposition is based upon their construction of section 12 of the Land Title Act, from which they argue that a defendant in a suit commenced under that act is not permitted to demur, but can appear only by the filing of an answer, a motion to amend the petition, or an objection. It is then argued that, inasmuch as appellants demurred in the land registration action, they did not 'appear,' and hence are not entitled to any reimbursement for expenses so incurred. The record does not support the position of respondents. In the first place the decree in the land title case recites that these appellants did appear therein. In the second place it is stipulated in this case that after their demurrers and objections had been overruled counsel stipulated on behalf of the objectors that a judgment might be entered under certain conditions. This in itself was sufficient to constitute an appearance.

"Respondents' second proposition in so far as it relates to the Mortgage Guarantee Company is a novel one. It is, in effect, that a party whom the law declares to be a necessary and proper party to an action may be sued as such and served with process, but has no right to appear and defend.

"As to the trustee, the deed of trust expressly provided that the grantors should appear and defend in any action affecting or purporting to affect the property or the title thereto, and that, in the event of their failure to do so, the trustee and the beneficiary, or either of them, could appear and defend and charge the fees and expenses thereof to the grantors. When the litigation was begun by the grantors it was not only the privilege but the duty of the trustee at least to take such proceedings as might be necessary to protect the lien of the trust deed. Though under ordinary circumstances it is not at all probable that the lien would be jeopardized in a proceeding of this nature, nevertheless, the very fact that the trustee was a necessary party to the litigation and was served with process is sufficient to justify the appearance. Both appellants were proper parties to the application to register the title, as they were interested in having the lien of the trust deed correctly noted on the certificate. This was recognized by counsel for the plaintiffs in the land registration action when they entered into a stipulation with counsel for those defendants covering that particular matter."

Judgment reversed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WASTE, J.; SLOANE, J.

SHAW, C. J. I dissent. When the defendants made their application for registration under the Torrens Land Law, the plaintiffs had no defense thereto, nor did either of them have any defense to the action. They should not have appeared. Defendants were not seeking any relief against them, or either of them, but were seeking only the relief they eventually got by the stipulation—that is, that plaintiffs should be declared to have a prior lien on the defendants' title. I fail to see any equity which the plaintiffs had to protect by their appearance and they should not be allowed to charge for it. In fact, the court in that action did not allow them to charge for their appearance, but adjudged the cost they made to them.

VETERANS' WELFARE BOARD et al. v. RILEY, State Controller. (S. F. 10161.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1922.)

1. Constitutional law §18—Statute existing when Constitution was adopted affords aid in constitutional construction.

A statute in force when the Constitution was adopted, while no justification for sustaining its validity if opposed to the Constitution, is of some evidence that the people did not intend to change an existing system to which the statute related.

2. Constitutional law §20 — Executive and legislative interpretation of Constitution shown by long application of existing statute.

Executive and legislative interpretation of the Constitution by the practical application of a statute for 50 years affords some authority for the enactment of other similar statutes.

3. States §119 — Appropriation by Veterans' Educational Act held not unconstitutional as a prohibited gift.

The appropriation by St. 1921, p. 967, for educational assistance to war veterans, including transportation, purchase of text-books, tuition, and allowance for living expenses, is not unconstitutional as a gift prohibited by Const. art. 4, § 31, since there is an advantage to the state in the stimulation of patriotism, and an additional advantage in educating those who have shown their devotion to the government and obedience to its authority, and who have been intensively educated in patriotism, affording a clear basis for confining to veterans the benefits of this special education provision, which is included in the power of the Legislature under Const. art. 9, § 1, to provide for education.

4. States §119—Prohibition of gifts held not to prevent reasonable allowances to students.

The burden being primarily on the Legislature to determine whether or not the purpose served by an expenditure is a public purpose, and whether or not the development of the state requires the extension of educational facilities and the giving of additional facilities to different types of students, the question is for the Legislature, and the broad general restrictions thereon prohibiting gifts should not be held to procure reasonable allowances to enable students to secure the advantages of educational institutions.

5. Constitutional law §211 — Classification made by Veterans' Educational Act held justified as furthering general welfare by promoting patriotism.

The Veterans' Educational Act (St. 1921, p. 967) is justified as being in furtherance of the general welfare by the promotion of patriotism, and the classification made thereby in conferring the advantages of the law to war veterans is justified on that basis.

6. States §63—Doubt as to inclusion of services to state in constitutional prohibition as to extra compensation held such as not to justify overturning Veterans' Educational Act.

Though soldiers and sailors of the United States render service to the state from whence they came, there is such doubt as to the inclusion of such services within Const. art. 4, § 32, prohibiting extra compensation to public officers, servants, and contractors, that courts would not be justified in overturning the Veterans' Educational Act (St. 1921, p. 967) as violating that section.

7. States §119—Appropriation based on moral obligation is a prohibited "gift."

An appropriation of state funds based on a moral obligation is a gift, within the meaning of Const. art. 4, § 31.

Shaw, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Original proceedings in mandamus by Veterans' Welfare Board and others against Ray L. Riley, as State Controller. Writ granted.

See, also, 206 Pac. 631.

Walter K. Tuller and M. B. Silberberg, both of Los Angeles, George Hatfield and Milton Sapiro, both of San Francisco, and O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Dion R. Holm and H. C. Lucas, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. The petition for a writ of mandamus in this case involved the validity of three statutes passed by the Legislature for veterans' welfare and aid. We ordered a writ of mandate to issue as to those items of expense involving the validity of the "California Veterans' Welfare Act" (Stats. 1921, p. 969) and the "Veterans' Farm and Home Purchasing Act" (Stats. 1921, p. 815), but reserved the question as to the validity of those items involved in the Veterans' Educational Act (Stats. 1921, p. 967) for further consideration. Upon this question we asked the parties to argue certain questions submitted to them in the following order:

"1. Is the allowance made to the veterans under that bill a gift within the meaning of article 4, § 31, of the Constitution? See State v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287 [45 S. W. 245, 40 L. R. A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653]; Barker v. Crum, 177 Ky. 637 [198 S. W. 211, L. R. A. 1918F, 673]; State v. Clausen [113 Wash. 570] 194 Pac. 793, 795 [13 A. L. R. 580]; State v. Johnson [170 Wis. 251] 176 N. W. 224, 225; McClure v. Nye, 22 Cal. App. 248 [133 Pac. 1145].

"2. If it is not a gift, is it an allowance or grant to an agent or servant, within the prohibition of article 4, § 31? See State v. Clausen [113 Wash. 570], 194 Pac. 793 [13 A. L. R. 580]. Note in this connection that the decisions upholding pension laws and allowances by the state as made for a public service place the decision on the ground that the services of the soldier were rendered to the state as well as to the nation. See Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 624 [88 Am. Dec. 711]; State v. Johnson [170 Wis. 251] 176 N. W. 224, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 955, note.

"3. Assuming that the proposed benefit to the veterans under the Educational Act is neither a gift, grant, or allowance within article 4, §§ 31, 32, and that for some purposes the Legislature may designate the veterans, as a class, and by general law legislate with reference to such class, can it do so when the sole basis of the classification is gratitude or moral obligation, in view of article 4, §§ 31, 32?"

Upon the reargument of the matter counsel representing the Veterans' Welfare Board insisted that the law provided for neither a gift, a loan or extra compensation within the meaning of article 4, §§ 31, 32, of the Constitution. The validity of the law was maintained upon the plenary power of the Legislature to provide for education (Const. art. 9, § 1) and upon the right to classify the citizens of the state in any reasonable manner for the purpose of offering such education facilities. Upon the argument counsel representing the state board of control conceded the validity of the provisions of the Veterans' Educational Act in so far as it authorized the purchase of text-books and the payment of transportation to and from the educational seat. As to the purchase of text-books our decision in MacMillan v. Clarke, 184 Cal. 491, 194 Pac. 1030, 17 A. L. R. 288, is cited as authority. The plan of transporting school pupils to and from their homes, particularly in large union districts, is quite common in this state, and is expressly authorized by statute. Pol. Code, §§ 1741, 1764b (as added by St. 1921, p. 734, § 1), 1610 (as added by St. 1917, p. 739, § 9). Section 1764b of the Political Code authorizes the payment of such transportation expenses not exceeding $10 per month to pupils attending high school in an adjoining state. The validity of these sections of the Code has not been questioned in the courts of this state. Other states have similar provisions, but in those referred to there seems to be no express constitutional provision against a gift of money to an individual, except in New Jersey, where counties, cities, boroughs, towns, townships and villages are so prohibited (N. J. Const., art. 1, § 19), and where a loan of credit of the state is prohibited (N. J. Const. art. 4, § 6, par. 3). State ex rel. Jackson, 168 Ind. 384, 81 N. E. 62; Nelson v. State ex rel. 168 Ind. 491, 81 N. E. 486; Lyle v. State ex rel., 172 Ind. 502, 88 N. E. 850; Newcomb v. Rockport, 183 Mass. 74, 66 N. E. 587; Mills v. School Directors, 154 Ill. App. 119; School Dist. v. Atzenweiler, 67 Kan. 609, 73 Pac. 927; Re West Fallowfield School Dist., 29 Pa. Co. Ct. 600; Carey v. Thompson et al., 66 Vt. 665, 30 Atl. 5; Queeny v. Higgins, 136 Iowa, 573, 114 N. W. 51; Board of Education v. Atwood, 74 N. J. Law, 638, 65 Atl. 999; Harris v. School Dist., 72 N. H. 424, 57 Atl. 332; State v. Hall, 74 N. H. 61, 64 Atl. 1102; Fogg v. Board of Education, 76 N. H. 296, 82 Atl. 173, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1110, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 758. See 35 Cyc. 1001; 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1110, note, and 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710, note.

[1, 2] At the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1879, the blind, deaf, and the dumb were entitled under the law to an education in the asylum, located in Alameda county, free of charge (Pol. Code, §§ 2237, 2238, as enacted in 1872), although when the asylum was established a tuition of $300 per annum was charged to such inmates or students as were able to pay. Stats. 1861, p. 81, § 2. Of course, the existence of such a statute at the time of the adoption of the Constitution is no justification for sustaining its validity, if opposed to the plain terms of the new Constitution, but it is at least some slight evidence that the people did not intend to change a system of education that had been in force for years by the use of such general terms as were used in the Constitution concerning gifts. The statute concerning the education of the deaf, dumb, and blind has apparently been carried out, notwithstanding the provisions of article 4, § 31, of the Constitution. If this practical interpretation of the Constitution for nearly half a century by the executive and legislative branches of the state government is to have any weight—and under cardinal rules of construction it should have some weight—such practical and contemporaneous construction points to the authority of the Legislature to make similar provision for others, without violating the constitutional prohibition against making gifts to individuals. In the case of Barker v. Crum, 177 Ky. 637, 198 S. W. 211, L. R. A. 1918F, 673, the Supreme Court of Kentucky held invalid a law providing scholarships in the state university for a few exceptional students on the ground that such provision was a gift in violation of the Constitution prohibitions, but in the later case of Carman v. Hickman County, 185 Ky. 630, 215 S. W. 408, it was explained that the decision was based in part upon the fact that no exceptional service had been rendered by such students or could be expected from them. In the later case it was stated:

"We do not, however, find any similarity between the legislation condemned in the Barker Case and the legislation here drawn in question. In the Barker Case the public funds were sought to be appropriated for the benefit of a few favored boys in each county in the state, while other boys equally as deserving were denied these emoluments. It did not and could not be made to appear that the progress or growth or wealth or welfare of the state could be promoted by the privileges conferred on the few boys who were selected from a large number as the recipients of state bounty, and when it was confessed that they had performed no public service entitling them to this distinction there was nothing left for the act to stand on. While in the case we have the appropriation, although it may be treated as having been made directly to and for the chief benefit of those engaged in agricultural pursuits, its ultimate purpose was plainly to develop the great agricultural interests of the state, and thus contribute to the welfare and wealth of the people of the whole state. In no sense can it be fairly said that the emoluments and privileges conferred by this act were confined to any man or set of men within the meaning of the section of the Constitution relied on." (Italics ours.)

[3] The decision in the case of MacMillan v. Clarke, 184 Cal. 491, 194 Pac. 1030, clearly authorizes the purchase of text-books for the use of students, if they remain the property of the state or public agency furnishing them. The law under consideration authorizes the Veterans' Welfare Board to purchase necessary text-books and supplies, and, in the absence of an express authority to give the books to the student, the title would remain in the Veterans' Welfare Board. The legislative action, so far as it authorizes the purchase of text-books in furtherance of education, is sufficiently clear. With reference to the matter of transportation the observations of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in Commonwealth of Mass. v. Interstate Consol. St. Ry. Co., 187 Mass. 436, 73 N. E. 530, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 2 Ann. Cas. 419, are pertinent. That case involved the right of the Legislature's power to require street railway companies to carry pupils to and from school at half fare. In view of the exceptional benefit thus conferred, the court said:

"In this case the selection of a class is not entirely arbitrary. The education of children throughout the commonwealth is a subject for legislation which has occupied the thoughts of our lawmakers from early times. The duty of Legislatures and magistrates to be diligent in the promotion of education among all the people is specially declared in c. 5, § 2, of the Constitution of the commonwealth. Compulsory attendance of children in the schools is provided for by our laws. R. L. c. 44, § 1. Money may be appropriated by cities and towns for conveying pupils to and from the public schools. R. L. c. 25, § 15. It cannot be said that the Legislature may not concern itself with the transportation of children to the public schools in the interest of popular education, just as it provides such children with books and other necessary articles. R. L. c. 42, § 35. So far as this statute merely gives help to these pupils in connection with their acquisition of knowledge in the schools, it is justified. As a police regulation in the interest of education, the law may well require street railway companies to permit these children to ride to school upon their cars, without profit to the companies, provided it can be done without causing them loss. But if such a requirement involves expense, the cost can only be put upon the general taxpayers. It cannot be imposed upon the street railway companies, or upon that part of the public which pays fares to street railway companies. If, therefore, it plainly appeared that the enforcement of this section would cause expense to street railway corporations, which they must bear themselves, or put upon other classes of passengers in the form of increased fares to make good the loss from carrying school children at half rates, we should be obliged to hold that there was a taking of property without due process of law, through unconstitutional discrimination."

The furnishing of transportation to students attending the higher institutions of learning is a method of partially equalizing the inequalities arising out of the necessity of locating the institution in a certain place. It would hardly be contended that the state university at Berkeley offered its advantages on an equal basis to the high school graduates of Eureka, San Diego, and Berkeley, because of the difference in cost of transportation. In the case of some of our state institutions, such as the state prisons and state hospitals and state schools at Preston and Whittier, the cost of transportation to and from the institution is borne by the state, thus equalizing the burden between the near and more distant counties, although in some of these institutions the cost of maintenance is in part a county charge. There seems no good reason for holding that the Legislature has no power under the Constitution to in part equalize the opportunities offered to the students.

The question of an allowance to the student for subsistence is a more difficult one. Forty dollars per month authorized by the law as the maximum will not now pay the reasonable expenses of a student, due to the fact that he must subsist away from home and at or near the institution he is attending.

In the case of the elementary, grammar, high school, and junior colleges the school is usually so near the home of the student that the cost of subsistence is not greatly increased by school attendance, but in the case of the state university the majority of the 10,000 or more students, upon whom the state is spending $4,500,000 per year, or about $450 per capita, are away from home, and are thus required to spend at least that much more because of that fact. The capital investment of the state is also at the service of the student who is fortunate enough to have the means to pay the necessary expenses. Shall it be said that the Legislature is powerless to in any manner relieve the burden that falls upon a student because its principle institution of learning is located in the center of the state? If special schools are instituted by the state to provide the character of education needed to meet special cases shall it be said that the state must either establish such schools in every school district, or be powerless to bring the proper children into such school? Whittier state school and Preston state school furnish food and clothing to the criminal, the incorrigible, and to the needy orphan. They are special schools. Is this the limit of legislative authority? It is, of course, true that the normal and innocent child or scholar is in a different class because it is such with their parents who bear the burden of the state government.

There is no doubt that our educational system in this state and in many other states has gone far beyond what was contemplated at the time the Constitution was adopted. It is said, no doubt truly, that the high schools of to-day furnish facilities and opportunities for education superior to the colleges of a century ago. There has been a continual development in our ideas of the necessity and scope of education. This has partly grown out of the fact that the demands of modern life require experts in various lines, and the fields of knowledge have been so much widened that a more comprehensive system of education is demanded. It is recognized that the function of education is to fit the scholar for the problem of everyday life, and these problems are increasing. The compulsory education laws and the child labor laws have not only required the child to spend a large part of its minority in public or private institutions of learning, but have also prohibited the employment of such children in gainful occupation. The state has thus not only assumed the function of giving an education to the children, but has also insisted upon the surrender by the child and by its parents of the time necessary for that education. The young man or woman graduating from the state university as a rule will have spent from 15 to 18 years in the educational institutions of the state, and during that entire period has been a financial burden instead of an asset to parents. The state has contributed enormously to the education of the graduate, but the parents have also done so, and the pupil as well in the surrender of its earning capacity. While the state university is theoretically open to all, it is practically confined to those who have attained certain standards of education and who have the financial ability to leave their homes and reside in the vicinity of the university during their university course. This necessarily confines the advantages of this institution to the comparatively small number of high school graduates or the graduates of similar institutions who have the means to supplement the expenditures of the state in providing schoolrooms and teachers by their own means for providing books, apparatus, and food and clothing during this period in which they are earning nothing, but are surrendering their time to gain the education which the state attempts to furnish. Can it be said that the Constitution is so written as to absolutely prohibit the state from extending aid in addition to the tuition and schoolrooms which are already provided in our higher institutions of learning? To say that the broad general restrictions against the making of gifts is such a limitation upon the part of the Legislature and prohibits for all time the meeting of the exigencies that may develop in the educational system seems to us going further than the founders of the Constitution intended. For more than a century the federal government has maintained at West Point an academy for the education of young men for the army, who, during the period of their training, are paid a salary which is amply sufficient for their maintenance, including food and clothing, with a small amount for spending money and for the procuring of an outfit upon graduation. The same is true of the United States Naval Academy maintained at Annapolis since 1845. It is true that the cadets at these institutions are being educated as officers in the army and navy, and that in a sense their education and maintenance is a consideration held out to them for their agreement to subsequently render that service.

The Constitution of this state, like that of most of the states, requires that its judicial officers shall have special education, evidenced by admission to practice as an attorney at law. Thus, one of the three coequal subdivisions of the government is dependent upon a special and technical education, and these requirements are increasingly rigorous. If there should for any reason be a dearth of suitable material for such offices, would the state be powerless to aid worthy students, because of a prohibition against making gifts to individuals? We fully recognize the clear distinction between the question involved in the payment of this compensation to the military and naval cadets in these national institutions, the suppositious case of legal education, in preparation for special service to the state; and the broader question where the government receives only the indirect advantage of an educated citizenship. However, in the case at bar the government receives the highly important advantage of the stimulation of patriotism by a definite recognition of the magnificent, unhesitating, and courageous service of the World War veterans, whose valor and spirit turned the tide of history in favor of our form of government, based, as it is, upon the fundamental principles of the freedom and equality of all men and upon their equal right to participate in the government and to the advantages of such government. This advantage derived from the stimulation of patriotism is sufficient to justify outright gifts of money by way of bonus and pension, and is universally recognized as a sufficient ground for such expenditures. Where there is added to this the additional advantage to the state of giving an education to those who during their term of service have shown their devotion to the government and their obedience to its authority, and who have been intensively educated in patriotism, there would seem a clear basis for a classification confining the benefits of this special education provision to veterans.

[4] Bearing in mind that the burden is primarily upon the state Legislature to determine whether or not the purpose served is a public purpose, and whether or not the development of the state requires the extension of educational facilities and the giving of additional opportunities to different types of students, it may safely be said that the question is one for the Legislature, and that the broad general restrictions upon the state Legislature prohibiting gifts should not be held to prevent reasonable allowances made to enable students to secure the advantages of educational institutions.

[5] In view of the conclusion that the legislative power to provide for education includes the power to make the expenditures involved under this law, is it permissible to confine the advantages of the law to veterans who have served in the World's War? It must be conceded that such classification is permissible for legislation having for its purpose the giving of rewards, bonuses, or extra compensation to ex-soldiers. The decisions all agree upon this point, and it is unnecessary for that reason to cite specific cases. We have held in the opinion already filed (Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley [Cal.] 206 Pac. 631) that it is permissible to confine the benefits of those acts to the veterans, and this decision was based upon the ground that such citizens could be designated as a class to receive the benefit of those acts.

Unless, therefore, we hold that the benefits conferred by the educational act constitute extra compensation or a gift of money or a loan of credit prohibited by the Constitution (article 4, §§ 31, 32), the principles applicable in the decision already rendered are also applicable here, so far as classification is concerned.

[6] One reason that we called for reargument of the constitutionality of this law was the fact that it seemed to us that if the classification was made for the sole purpose of conferring a benefit by way of extra compensation or allowance to the soldiers of the World's War, it could not be justified in view of the provisions of section 32 of article 4, which expressly prohibits the granting of any extra compensation or allowance to any public officer, agent, servant, or contractor after the service had been rendered. In our order directing the reargument we called attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of Washington in State v. Clausen, 113 Wash. 570, 582, 194 Pac. 793, 797. That court disposed of the matter in the following paragraph:

"Our attention has been called to section 25 of article 2 of the state Constitution, which provides that the Legislature shall never grant any extra compensation to any 'public officer, agent, servant or contractor after the services shall have been rendered or the contract entered into. * * *'. But this provision has no application to the present statute. The parties who are to receive compensation under the act do not come within the constitutional specifications. This provision of the Constitution does not seem to be insisted upon, and it would necessarily prolong this opinion to enter upon a further discussion of it."

The law under consideration by the Supreme Court of the state of Washington in that case provided for a bond issue of $11,000,000 for the raising of funds to pay money directly to the veterans of the World's War and to establish a fund known as the Veterans' Compensation Fund. In view of the fact that the court expressly held that the statute was one for extra compensation, it must have been the view of the court that the soldiers were neither public officers, agents, servants, or contractors within the meaning of the state Constitution of that state, for the court expressly stated that:

"The act before us is based upon the theory of compensation or compensation in addition to that which the beneficiaries thereunder have already received from the federal government. For the service rendered by those who came within the terms of the act in the cause which was then of paramount importance there arose a moral obligation to compensate for such service, and, as has already been pointed out, such an obligation is sufficient to sustain the taxing power of the state. This decision will be rested upon the ground that the legislative power of the state is sufficient to enable it to make compensation for the services rendered because there is a moral obligation to compensate for those services and that such services were public, and not private." (Italics ours.)

[7] Our own decisions consistently hold that an appropriation of public funds based upon a moral obligation as a consideration is a gift within the meaning of the Constitution. See cases cited in Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, supra. The reasoning of the Supreme Court of Washington, by which it avoids the conclusion that the payment was not a gift, would not, therefore, apply under our decisions. But its conclusion that ex-soldiers of the United States army are not public officers, agents, or contractors within the meaning of article 4, section 32, is directly in point. It is true that a soldier is neither a public officer, a servant, an agent, or a contractor as those terms are ordinarily used. It is also true that the general practice throughout the country which obtained at the time and previous to the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 was to grant pensions and allowances to ex-soldiers. It may well be that if the Constitution was intended to prohibit the granting of allowances to ex-soldiers we might expect to find such prohibition definitely stated in the Constitution itself. State aid in various forms had been the rule rather than the exception in the case of ex-soldiers and naval men. The Constitution draws a rigid distinction between officers of the state and of its various subdivisions, and those of the United States. Article 4, §§ 20, 21; article 5, § 12. It uses the term "soldier." Article 1 § 12. It expressly refers to persons employed in the service of the United States (article 2, § 4), and it is altogether probable, all things considered, that the words "public officers" and "servants" in article 4, § 32, do not refer to soldiers, sailors, or marines in the service of the United States. On the other hand, it is equally clear that all appropriations in favor of ex-soldiers are based upon the fundamental and underlying principle that such soldiers not only act for the federal government, but also for the state government, and that in their effort to maintain the union they also maintain the separate states making up that union. The soldier from each state is a soldier from the state of his residence as well as of the United States.

In Beach v. Bradstreet, 85 Conn. 344, 82 Atl. 1030, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 946, an act of the Legislature of that state providing for allowances to be made to all ex-soldiers residing in the state of Connecticut at the time of the passage of the act in 1911 (Pub. Acts 1911, c. 187), who had served in the army and navy and marine corps or revenue service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge therefrom, was held unconstitutional because it extended the benefit not only to those who had been residents of the state at the time they entered the service of the United States, but also to all those who had subsequently come into the state, and thus was made equally applicable to the citizens of other states. It was held that the extension of this bounty to soldiers from other states who served in the United States army was a violation of the implied constitutional restriction against the giving of public money for private purposes. In discussing that matter the court said:

"The nation can take for its defense the men and the treasure of Connecticut measured only by its necessities. It can call upon her to do her assigned part; it cannot call upon her to do the assigned part of some other state. The soldiers and sailors of other states, and the aliens, who served, were not hers; to them she owed no duty. She could not tax her people to pay bounties to these to induce them to enter the service of the United States; no more can she reward them for their services in the war. * * * A state's bounty must be limited to her own soldiers and sailors. Service to the credit of other states is not service for her. The grant to aliens, to widows and parents, to pensioned widows and parents, without affecting the principle involved, marks with increasing clearness the lengths to which a vicious principle of taxation may lead. Cooley, in his work on Taxation (volume 1, 3d Ed.), p. 195, says: In deciding on which side the tax shall fall we must be governed 'mainly by the course and usage of the government, the objects for which taxes have been customarily and by long course of legislation levied, what objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government.' * * * States have granted pensions to the disabled or indigent soldiers and sailors; but, so far as we have discovered, no state has granted a pension to soldiers and sailors who have served in, and been honorably discharged from, the United States service, without regard to disability or indigence."

The cases authorizing state aid as legitimate expenditure of state money are all based upon the relationship borne by the soldier to his own state. The basis of this special bounty is variously spoken of as extra compensation, as a gratuity or reward, or as a method promoting patriotism, all of which are recognized as public purposes. Counsel for the respondent in this case concede that the allowance made to ex-soldiers by the Educational Act does not come within the prohibition of article 4, § 32, and agree with counsel for the petitioners that the ex-soldiers are not public officers, servants, or contractors within the meaning of that constitutional provision. It is clear that classification by which the ex-soldiers are separated from the body of the community could not be justified where the sole and only purpose thereof is to grant extra compensation which was expressly prohibited by article 4, § 32. It is equally clear that if the purpose is not to grant extra com-penation within the meaning of that section, the classification is justifiable even though the purpose of it is to authorize a gift or loan of public money (assuming for the moment that such gift or loan is not prohibited by article 4, § 31). While it is true as the cases recognize that soldiers and sailors of the United States not only render service to the United States government, but also to the states from which they come, we think there is such doubt about the inclusion of such services within article 4, § 32, prohibiting extra compensation to servants, public officers and contractors, that we would not be justified in overturning the act of the Legislature upon that basis. It remains for us, therefore, to determine whether or not the classification is otherwise permissible. This question is readily answered in the affirmative, if such a classification has a reasonable relation to the subject-matter under consideration. If the statute only authorized the extension of aid to those whose studies were interrupted by the war and who were during the time they were engaged in the service of the United States thus precluded from continuing their education, it would be clear that the classification was a perfectly justifiable one. If it is proper to select from the student body of various institutions of learning certain individuals because of their age and physical qualifications for service in the forces of the United States, allowing those of other ages and of inferior physical qualifications to remain and pursue their studies, it is clear that it would be equally permissible to again consider such classification when the time came for the demobilization of the army, and when the young men who had been deprived of the opportunity to continue their education because of the call to service were permitted to again resume their studies. Assuming that the state has power to make the provisions herein made for its citizens for the purpose of extending to them the benefits of an education, it would follow that the particular citizen who had been deprived by the war of that opportunity would be susceptible of classification as the recipients of the benefits of a statute intended to promote such education. It is possible that the statute under consideration is susceptible of the construction that it applies only to those whose education was so interrupted, and no doubt if its constitutionality depended upon such a construction it might very well be held that the provisions of the law authorizing the extending of aid to veterans to continue their education could be held to confine the benefits of the law to those who at the time of their enlistment were in educational institutions receiving instruction, and thus receiving an education which was to be continued by the means proposed by the statute.

If, however, the statute is susceptible of a broader interpretation and this interpretation is constitutionally justified, it must be given that interpretation. It must be conceded that the extending of these special benefits to veterans of the World War would tend to promote patriotism. The promotion of patriotism is recognized as a proper exercise of governmental functions and as a field for the expenditure of public money. We think, then, that this legislation may be justified upon the proposition that it is in furtherance of the general welfare by the promotion of patriotism and that the classification made is justifiable upon that basis. See State v. Johnson, 170 Wis. 251, 176 N. W. 224, and Wheelon v. S. D. Land Settlement Board, 43 S. D. 551, 181 N. W. 359, 14 A. L. R. 1145.

It follows that the aid extended to the veterans of the World War under the Veterans' Education Act is a constitutional exercise of the legislative authority.

Peremptory writ of mandate will issue.

We concur: SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.

SHAW, C. J. I dissent. The Constitution (article 4, § 31) provides that the Legislature shall not have power "to make any gift, or authorize the making of any gift, of any public money or thing of value to any individual." Certain exceptions are provided for, but they only serve to emphasize the prohibition as to everything not within the exceptions. None of them provides for gifts to individuals to assist them in obtaining an education. The language quoted is simple, unambiguous, and clear.

The act in question (Stats. 1921, p. 967) provides for and authorizes the making of gifts to persons who served in the military forces of the United States in the late war, out of the public money of the state, not exceeding $1,000, to any one person, as follows: (1) The paying of the cost of their transportation, once a year, from their respective homes to the university, college, or school which they choose to attend to begin or continue their education. (2) The payment of their annual tuition fees, if any, at such institution. (3) The payment of the cost of the "books and supplies" necessary for their education there. (4) The payment of $40 a month for each month to any student during his actual attendance upon any day school, to be applied to defray his living expenses. If this is not the making of gifts of public money to these individuals, nothing could be. It is as clear and unmistakable a violation of the prohibition of section 31 as could be devised.

It is in fact conceded that it is contrary to the above-quoted limitation of section 31 upon the legislative power. The claim is that, so far as education is concerned, section 31 is modified and controlled by section 1 of article 9, the article on the subject of education. It reads as follows:

"A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the Legislature shall encourage by all suitable means the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral and agricultural improvement."

It is a well-established rule of construction that where a constitution has been prepared by a convention and submitted to the people and adopted as a whole, it will not be assumed that any provision therein was intended to set aside or qualify another provision, unless such intent appears, either expressly or by necessary implication, or unless the inconsistency is so clear that no other conclusion can reasonably be made from the language. No such intent appears, and no such inconsistency exists with respect to the two provisions here in question. Section 1 of article 9 does not even purport to grant power to the Legislature. It imposes on it a duty to encourage the promotion of education in the things therein specifically mentioned. But it directs that this shall be done "by all suitable means." This necessarily implies that it is not to be done except by "suitable means." So understood, it is not contrary to or inconsistent with the prohibition of section 31 above quoted, but is clearly in harmony with it. The meaning is that it shall encourage education by the use of the powers which it has under the other provisions of the Constitution. The making of gifts of public money to individuals cannot be considered as a "suitable means" for the promotion of education, because such gifts are expressly prohibited, and because, in the absence of any language to indicate such intent, it cannot be that section 1 of article 9 was meant to sanction a violation of any other part of the Constitution. For illustration, and to show the length to which such doctrine would lead, it cannot be supposed that the direction to the Legislature to encourage the promotion of education by all suitable means was intended to or does authorize it to promote education by enacting a special law for the assessment of taxes to raise money for educational purposes, contrary to subdivision 10 of section 25, article 9; or a special law exempting property of a private school from taxation (subdivision 20); or a special law providing for the management of common schools (subdivision 27); or a law authorizing a lottery or gift enterprise to raise money for educational purposes (article 4, § 26); or a law providing for the taking of private property for educational purposes without compensation to the owners (article 1, § 14); or, in short, any law transcending any of the other express restrictions upon legislative power found elsewhere in the Constitution. Yet there is as much warrant for allowing any of these things to be done as there is for allowing the making of gifts to individuals from public money to enable such individuals to obtain an education with less effort than would be required without such aid.

The suggestion that it would be good public policy to make such gifts for that purpose presents a matter beyond the proper scope of our inquiry. The public policy fixed by the Constitution cannot be changed by the Legislature, or by the courts, unless they exceed the limits of their own powers. If public opinion has so changed since the adoption of these constitutional provisions in 1879 that it now favors a different policy from that therein fixed and declared, there is only one legitimate method to give effect to such change, that is by amending the Constitution so that it will express the present desire of the people, instead of the desire they expressed in 1879.

It may be that in the absence of such declaration of policy in the Constitution as it is, and in the absence of any restriction forbidding the making of gifts to individuals, the Legislature could lawfully provide for aid to individuals who have served the country in the late war to enable them to obtain an education. But even if it were conceded that such persons had been in the service of the state in the war, such a disposition of public funds is expressly forbidden by section 32 of article 4 of the Constitution, which declares that—

"The Legislature shall have no power to grant * * * any extra compensation or allowance to any public officer, agent, servant, or contractor, after service has been rendered." Conlin v. Board, 99 Cal. 21, 33 Pac. 753, 21 L. R. A. 474, 37 Am. St. Rep. 17; Molineux v. State, 109 Cal. 378, 42 Pac. 34, 50 Am. St. Rep. 49; Taylor v. Mott, 123 Cal. 497, 56 Pac. 256.

There was no law authorizing compensation by the state for any service of that character at the time the service was rendered. Hence any compensation now made for such service, still conceding it to have been a service to the state, would be "extra compensation," within the meaning of this section. The proposition that a mere moral obligation, or any obligation not enforceable by law, cannot be made the basis of an allowance of public money to the person or class of persons claiming to be beneficiaries of such obligation is settled beyond question by the decisions last cited.

It is my opinion that, however desirable we may believe such a law to be, the court must say that it is unconstitutional and void, and that the writ of mandate should be refused.

1. Sales ☞80—Where buyer's telegram ambiguous, contract held to call for payment upon presentation of documents at bank.

Where seller on receipt of contract negotiated by its representative wired him to obtain buyer's agreement to pay on presentation of shipping documents at Los Angeles banks, as it had previously directed him, and, in reply, the buyer wired that payments would be made on receipt of drafts with bills of lading attached without designating the point where they were to be presented, the contract, construed against the party creating the uncertainty as required by Civ. Code, § 1654, called for payment upon presentation of the shipping documents at a Los Angeles bank.

2. Sales ☞183—Buyer's failure to instruct bank to pay upon presentation of shipping documents as agreed held breach justifying cancellation.

Where contract called for payment upon presentation of shipping documents at Los Angeles bank and buyer after seller was ready to ship ignored the seller's telegrams, asking it to make arrangement for payment by the bank, the buyer broke the contract, and the seller was justified in canceling it.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the McAvoy Company against the Italian-American Vineyard Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lissner, Lewinson & Barnhill, Joseph L. Lewinson and William A. Barnhill, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Prescott & Prescott, of Los Angeles, Samuel M. Samter, of San Francisco, Frank C. Prescott, Frank G. Fallon, and Haas & Dunigan, all of Los Angeles, and Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This action was instituted by the plaintiff corporation against the defendant Italian-American Vineyard Company, a corporation, and certain other defendants, to enforce the specific performance of a certain contract for the sale and delivery to the plaintiff of 6,000 barrels or approximately 300,000 gallons of wine; or, in case specific performance could not be had, then for damages in a large sum. The said defendant Italian-American Vineyard Company denied the making or execution of any such contract for the sale or delivery of a larger amount of wine than about 15,000 gallons, which it alleged had been delivered and paid for. It then proceeded in its answer to set forth in detail the history of the transaction between itself and said plaintiff as to the remainder of the said 6,000 barrels of wine, and after so doing alleged that it was the plaintiff which had reached whatever contract existed between the parties as to the sale and delivery of said wine by its failure to make the payments required by it to be made at the time and place specified in the writings which embodied the agreement of the parties. The trial court made its finding upon the issues as thus tendered in the said defendant's favor, and rendered its judgment accordingly, that the plaintiff take nothing by its said action. The correctness of these findings of fact and the law is the chief subject of consideration upon this appeal.

The evidence in the case sufficiently shows that the respondent, Italian-American Vineyard Company, for a number of years prior to the month of March, 1920, had been a corporation engaged in the business of buying grapes and making and marketing wine, with its principal place of business at San Gabriel, Cal., and its main winery at Cucamonga, in the vicinity of which latter place the grapes were grown by various growers who had organized themselves into a corporation known as the "Cucamonga Vintage Company," for the purpose of better collecting and handling their grape product. According to the arrangement between the Italian-American Vineyard Company and the Cucamonga Vintage Company, when the grape growers of the region would bring their grapes to the warehouse of the latter they would be taken over by the former and made into wine, which would be stored in the bonded winery of the Cucamonga Vintage Company and also in the wineries of the Italian-American Vineyard Company until such time as the latter could make sales of said wine. In the latter part of the year 1919 the Italian-American Vineyard Company found that it had, or presently would have, under this arrangement, about 300,000 gallons of wine in the bonded winery of the Cucamonga Vintage Company, for which it was necessary to find a market in order to meet its obligations to the grape growers who had furnished the grapes from which said wine had been manufactured. In the course of that effort the president of the Italian-American Vineyard Company went to Chicago to attend a beverage exposition being held in that city in the spring of the following year. He there met personally one Joseph Schneible, who was an employee of the plaintiff herein, and who had invented a process for dealcoholizing beer, and had installed a plant for the utilization of his said process upon the plaintiff's premises. Schneible was also engaged in experimenting with a view to developing the process for the dealcoholizing of wines for the dual purpose of extracting their alcohol content and of developing from the residue a beverage which could be marketed within the laws relating to prohibition. Depending upon his success in such experiment, he was desirous of securing for his employer, the plaintiff herein, a large amount of wine having uniform qualities because manufactured by a single winemaker from grapes grown in a single or limited region. Several interviews were had with said Schneible, and some letters passed between himself and the president of the Italian-American Vineyard Company upon the subject, but nothing came of these until early in the month of March, 1920, when the Italian-American Vineyard Company came in touch with a man named B. F. Klein, who was represented to it as a person who could probably dispose of their wine. The result was an arrangement entered into between said corporation and Klein by which the latter was to go to Chicago as a representative of the said corporation in quest of a purchaser for its wine. In thus securing the services of said Klein it was fully explained to him at the time and reiterated to him in the correspondence which followed, the necessity of having whatever contract he might be able to make for the sale of said wine provide that the payments therefor should be made at Los Angeles prior to the shipment of the wine, and beginning by or about the 1st of May and being completed by August, in order to enable the Italian-American Vineyard Company to meet its obligations to the grape growers from whose product said wines had been made. Klein took his way to Chicago during the first week in March, 1920, equipped with the resolution of said corporation empowering him to act as its special representative for the purpose of disposing of its said wine and also with letters of introduction to Joseph Schneible. Arriving in Chicago he presented these credentials to said Schneible, who in turn presented him to the president of the plaintiff herein, with whom several conferences occurred relative to the sale of the respondents' wine, which resulted in a tentative offer to purchase 6,000 barrels of wine at the price of 51 cents per gallon, with deliveries of 1,000 or more barrels per month, and a cash advance of $10,000 upon consummation of the contract for such purchase. This tentative offer was communicated by Klein to the Italian-American Vineyard Company by a telegram sent to its president on March 10, 1920, who on the following day sent a telegram to Klein accepting said order, but particularly providing that the payments of the balance thereon should be made on presentation of the shipping documents at a bank in California. Following the receipt of this order the officials of the Italian-American Vineyard Company had a conference with the officials of the Cucamonga Vintage Company relating to the shipment of and payment for said wine, at which meeting said telegrams were exhibited. It was then insisted by the Cucamonga Vintage Company that all wines shipped under said order must be paid for before shipment, and that in any event the Italian-American Vineyard Company must begin making to the Cucamonga Vintage Company payments upon said wine, whether or not the same should be shipped under said order, in the following amounts and at the following times, viz.: On March 20, 1920, $20,000; during May, 1920, $26,500; during June, 1920, $26,500; during July, 1920, the balance due upon the grapes from which said wine had been made, amounting to $47,732.69. In the event of failure to make said payments the Italian-American Vineyard Company was notified that it would be in default and that its interest in said wines would be sold elsewhere. Following this interview the Italian-American Vineyard Company sent a letter to Klein, explaining its purport and emphasizing the necessity of having its payments made at a bank in California as a prerequisite to the shipment of said wine. On the 15th day of March, 1920, the following agreement was drawn up and executed by the Italian-American Vineyard Company, acting through its representative, B. F. Klein, and Joseph Schneible as trustee, it being understood by the immediate parties executing said contract that said Schneible was acting as trustee for the plaintiff herein. Said contract reads as follows:

"Chicago, Ill., March 15, 1920.

"Agreement of Sale and Purchase.

"Joseph Schneible, trustee, of Chicago, Illinois, has this day purchased from the Italian American Vineyard Co., of San Gabriel, California, a quantity of wines owned by them and stored in the bonded wineries Nos. 45 and 46 of the 6th district of California, said purchase being made under the following conditions:

"For and in consideration of a prepayment of ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00), receipt of which is hereby acknowledged by the vendor, as payment in full for fifteen thousand seven hundred eighty-one (15,781) gallons of Zinfandel wine in barrels (as hereinafter set forth), the vendor agrees to sell and deliver f. o. b. cars Los Angeles, California, or common point, approximately six thousand (6000) barrels of assorted wines in the following approximate proportions: 20% Barbara. 40% Zinfandel. 20% Claret. 10% Reissling. 10% Palermo.

"The agreed price of same to be 51 cents per gallon with an additional charge of $6.50 each for fifty gallon cooperage. Shipments to be made strictly in accordance with Federal Regulations Nos. 60 and 61, under titles 2 and 3 of the National Prohibition Act of Oct. 28, 1919, and in quantities to be governed by vendees requisitions, total amount to be ordered out approximately a thousand barrels per month. The vendee reserves the right to cancel this order at any time prior to April 30

1920, as to all but said fifteen thousand seven hundred eighty-one (15,781) gallons of Zinfandel wine for which payment has been made as above, and which shall be shipped out in barrels when requested in writing by said Schneible. Title to said fifteen thousand seven hundred eighty one (15,781) gallons of Zinfandel wine shall vest immediately in said Schneible on payment of said ten thousand dollars ($10,000), but said wine shall be stored for him by said Vineyard Company (without expense) until April 30, 1920, if so desired.

"The vendor agrees that all wines delivered in accordance with this agreement shall measure up to the same standard and analysis as samples submitted.

"In witness whereof, both parties to this agreement have placed their hands and seals this day and date above written.

"Joseph Schneible, Trustee.

"Italian American Vineyard Co.

"Per B. F. Klein, Special Rep.

"That a barrel of wine contains about fifty (50) gallons."

The original of this contract together with the check for the $10,000 referred to therein, were immediately sent to the respondent at San Gabriel, Cal., in response to which the latter sent to Klein at Chicago the following two telegrams, the first of which read as follows:

"Received today contract ten thousand dollars Can you have Schneible wire us immediately stating if they take all the goods they will pay in full by August thirty even if they have not yet received all the goods You know we have to pay all the goods before August first Contract does not state payment in full for shipment on presentation shipping documents bank here Did you receive letter hundred dollars Wire immediately sign permit for car and mail immediately."

The second of the two telegrams read as follows:

"Received check sample Schneible Wire us immediately concerning contract and agreeing to pay fifty one cents per gallon naked to us f o b shipping point here cooperage six dollars fifty cents extra and all taxes extra payment on presentation shipping document at bank here agreeing to pay us for at least one thousand barrels every month if they take the thousand barrels or not and to pay the six thousand barrels in full not later than August thirtieth cannot deposit check until we hear from Schneible Wire immediately."

These two telegrams being exhibited to said Schneible he declared, according to his own testimony, that he would not agree to make payments for the wine at Los Angeles, and that if Klein's principal insisted upon this the deal was off; that payments for the wine would only be made in the city of Chicago upon receipt of drafts with bills of lading attached. He was requested by Klein to wire direct to the respondent what his wishes were in this respect, and he accordingly sent the following telegram to the respondent on or about March 21, 1920, viz.:

"Klein's telegram received. I will pay prices mentioned your telegram and taxes extra and will take and pay for one thousand barrels monthly beginning May first as per my contract unless I cancel contract by April thirtieth and will pay in full by August thirtieth all payments to be made on receipt drafts with bills of lading attached."

Two days later the respondent sent directly to the appellant herein the following telegram:

"Your wire satisfactory We have our permits but you must get Chicago Prohibition Director to sign permit to ship from bonded winery 45 Have Klein sign permit for us on receipt permit will ship car immediately Will see VAI tomorrow regarding his check Trusting everything satisfactory With best wishes."

Within a few days thereafter the respondent began shipping to the appellant the 15,781 gallons of wine, which shipments were received by the appellant in due course, the same being the shipments of wine for which, according to the contract above set forth, the sum of $10,000 already forwarded by check was to constitute payment in full. During the early part of May several telegrams passed between the parties, relating chiefly to the shipments of the balance of the 15,871 gallons of wine for which the respondent was already paid; but on May 18, 1920, the respondent sent to B. F. Klein, in care of Joseph Schneible at Chicago, the following telegram:

"Alhambra, California, May 18, 1920.

"B. F. Klein, Care Joseph Schneible, 130 North Wells Street, Chicago, Illinois. Will start shipping thousand barrels tomorrow first car white balance to be shipped immediately. Wire bank instructions by return wire.

"G. Demateis."

The reason for sending this urgent message was that the Cucamonga Vintage Company was pressing the Italian-American Vineyard Company for money due, through it, to the grape growers from whose product the wine in question had been made, with the result that on May 20th, 1920, the respondent sent a direct message to Schneible reading as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, May 20, 1920.

"Mr. Joseph Schneible, 130 North Wells Street, Chicago, Illinois. For convenience in our banking operations please instruct immediately Farmers Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles to pay us against shipping documents for balance of one thousand barrels which we are shipping before June first. Please answer by return wire.

"G. Demateis."

To this dispatch also no reply was made either by Schneible or by the appellant herein. On May 24, 1920, the respondent sent to Schneible the following telegram:

"Alhambra, California, May 24th, 1920.

"Joseph Schneible, Trustee, 130 North Wells Street, Chicago, Illinois. Having not received any confirmation of telegram sent you on the twentieth instant we regret to advise that we have broken agreement with you for the six thousand barrels of non-beverage wine.

"Italian American Vineyard Co.,

"G. Demateis, President."

On May 28, 1920, the respondent received from Schneible a reply to its telegram of May 24th, which read as follows:

"Your telegram of May 24th received. I will hold you to the letter of the contract for wine purchase and will expect shipments to come forward in accordance therewith. I have fulfilled all terms of the contract and you have not even completed the first shipment thereunder. I am ready to perform on my part all conditions."

In the meantime another situation had arisen, which the appellant strongly insists caused the alleged breach of its contract on the part of respondents. In the latter part of April, 1920, one Maurice Selig, a wine broker and real estate dealer in San Francisco, came into communication with the respondents herein with a view to making some profitable arrangement for the disposal of the said wines of said respondents. Between that time and the latter part of May several interviews occurred between the respondents' officials and said Selig, which finally took form in a proposition in writing, bearing date of May 31, 1920, and which was accepted by the respondents on the following day, wherein said Selig proposed that he would undertake the sale of about 280,000 gallons of respondents' wine, the same to be sold to the best possible advantage and the profits arising out of such sale to be divided equally between the respondents and said Selig. Under this arrangement during the month that followed a considerable amount of wine, which the appellant claims to have been covered by said agreement with it, was disposed of at prices which indicated that there had occurred a decided advance in the selling price of wine during the month of May. As to this transaction, however, the trial court found, upon sufficient evidence, that it was a bona fide transaction on the part both of the corporation and of said Selig and those associated with him in the disposal of said wines. With respect to the main transaction between the parties hereto, the trial court found that as to the 15,781 gallons of wine embraced in the first shipments to the appellant, the transaction was a single purchase, and was completely consummated by the shipment of said wines by the defendant and by the payment therefor in full through the application thereto of the $10,000 check which had been transmitted to the defendant upon the execution of the original agreement for the sale to Joseph Schneible, trustee, of its said wine. As to the balance of the 6,000 barrels of wine covered by said agreement, the trial court found that the defendant had expressly provided, in its two telegrams modifying the contract as originally drawn by Klein, that the payments for said wine were to be made at some bank in Los Angeles, Cal., to be designated by the plaintiff, and were to be begun at an early date in May, when the said defendant was prepared to make shipments of the balance of its wine, and to present the shipping documents at such designated bank. The trial court further found that the said Schneible so understood the said telegrams of the defendant modifying the original arrangement, and that said Schneible also believed and understood that his said answer to said telegrams would be understood by said defendant as agreeing with that arrangement as to the payments for said wine. The trial court further found that when the defendant sent its dispatch of March 23, 1920, in reply to the plaintiff's said answering telegram, in which it was stated that the terms of said telegram were satisfactory to both parties to the transaction, it understood and believed that the wine was to be paid for at Los Angeles, California.

[1, 2] The plaintiff makes its main assault in this field upon these findings of the trial court as to the time and place of the payment for the undelivered portion of the 6,000 barrels of wine, claiming that said findings are unsupported by the evidence and are in conflict with the terms of the writings which embraced the contract between the parties. In making this assault the plaintiff chiefly relies upon the language of its reply telegram, dated March 21, 1920, where it states that "all payments to be made on receipt drafts with bills of lading attached." It will be noted, however, that the sender of this telegram did not expressly state at what point, whether in Chicago or in Los Angeles, the draft with bills of lading attached was to be presented on receipt. This omission was most significant in the presence of the explicit statement in the two telegrams of the defendant, above referred to, and to which the plaintiff's said dispatch was a reply, that the payments were to be made at a Los Angeles bank. The utmost that can be said with reference to the above expression in the plaintiff's answering dispatch is that it created an uncertainty upon the subject of the place of payment; and this gives application to the well-established rule for the interpretation of contracts embodied in section 1654 of the Civil Code, providing that in cases of uncertainty "the language of a contract should be interpreted, most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist." So interpreted, this contract required the plaintiff to make the payments upon the shipments of the balance of the 6,000 gallons of wine at a bank in the city of Los Angeles, and not in Chicago, as insisted upon by it. This being so, it became the duty of the plaintiff, upon being notified that the defendant was prepared to make its initial shipment of 1,000 barrels of said wine during the early part or middle of the month of May, to designate the bank in Los Angeles at which the latter should present its draft and shipping documents in order to receive such payment. The defendant having proceeded with its shipments of the first lot of 316 barrels of the 15,871 gallons of wine according to the initial order, prepared to begin the shipment of the 1,000 barrels to be shipped in May; and on May 18th sent to B. F. Klein, in care of Joseph Schneible at Chicago, its dispatch stating:

"Will start shipping thousand barrels tomorrow; first car white. Balance to be shipped immediately. Wire bank instructions by return wire."

Upon receiving no reply the defendant followed this message with another dated May 20, 1920, and sent direct to said Schneible, requesting the designation of a particular bank in Los Angeles at which the payment for said shipment of 1,000 barrels of wine then ready for transmission was to be made, and asking for an answer by return wire. After waiting four days for a reply, which did not come, the respondent wired to said Joseph Schneible its cancellation of its said agreement to sell said wine, to which said Joseph Schneible sent his reply dated May 28th, informing the respondent that he proposed to hold it to the letter of its contract, but in which no intimation was given of any intention on his part to make payments for said wine at Los Angeles, or to designate any bank in that city or elsewhere in California at which such payments would be made. When the entire month of May had passed the respondent entered into the agreement with Maurice Selig for the disposal of its wines, to which reference has above been made. On June 17, 1920, the plaintiff herein commenced an action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, against the respondent herein, seeking an injunction to prevent the said defendant in that action from disposing of its said wines to or through said Selig, in which action the agreement between the parties was fully set forth, and it was affirmatively alleged that the same was made and was to be performed in the city of Chicago. Having failed to secure such injunction, the said plaintiff commenced the present action, making similar allegations as to the place wherein said agreement was by its terms to be performed. It was upon the foregoing state of the facts that the trial court reached the conclusion embodied in its findings, that the contract between these parties required the plaintiff to make payments of the amounts due from time to time upon the defendant's shipments of said wine at a bank in Los Angeles to be designated by said plaintiff, and upon the presentation by the respondent of the shipping documents showing the shipment of said wine, and that having failed and refused, upon the defendant's repeated requests, to designate said place of payment at which the defendant should present said shipping documents and thereupon receive such payment, the plaintiff had violated the terms of said agreement, and that such violation justified the defendant in its cancellation of said agreement. We are satisfied that the findings of the trial court in this regard find ample support in the evidence in the case. We do not deem the other alleged errors of the trial court during the trial as of sufficient importance or merit to warrant particular consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

BRADLEY v. VAN NOSTRAND. Judge of Superior Court. (Civ. 4325; S. F. 10325.)

(District Court of Appeal. First District, Division 2, California. June 27, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 24, 1922.)

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

Prohibition  10(1)—Order transferring case to another department of court not excess of jurisdiction.

While an order of a judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, other than the presiding judge, transferring a case from one department to another, may be irregular, it is not void, and prohibition will not lie to prevent a hearing of the case by the department to which it is transferred, on the ground that it is exceeding its jurisdiction.

Petition for prohibition by Richard Bradley, prayed to be directed to Hon. John J. Van Nostrand, as Judge of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, presiding in Department No. 4 thereof. Writ denied by the District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

Herbert Chamberlin, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Chas. Baer, of San Francisco, and James Campbell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. It is ordered that the writ be and it is hereby denied.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

SHAW, C. J. The petitioner herein asks that an order be made prohibiting the court below from proceeding to the hearing of an application presented to said court by Emma R. Bradley, praying that the applicant be directed to pay $85 per month to said Emma R. Bradley in pursuance of a decree theretofore rendered against him by said court. The petitioner presented his petition, in the first place to the District Court of Appeal of the First District, Division 2, and this petition was denied. He now presents to this court a petition for rehearing of said cause.

The case of Bradley v. Bradley was a divorce proceeding, and the judgment contained a clause commanding the defendant, Richard Bradley, to pay $85 monthly to the plaintiff, as alimony. The petitioner claims that the defendant herein is without jurisdiction to hear the said case for contempt, because of the fact that the divorce case aforesaid was heard and determined by Hon. George H. Cabaniss, judge of the said court, and not by the said Hon. John J. Van Nostrand. He contends that, because no order has been made, either regularly or irregularly, by Hon. Franklin A. Griffin, who is the presiding judge of said court, that an order transferring the case from department 3, presided over by Judge Cabaniss, in which the judgment was rendered, to department 4, presided over by the defendant, was given and made by Hon. Walter P. Johnson, judge of the said court, and is void.

The said order is not an excess of jurisdiction. This is expressly decided by the case of Brown v. Campbell, 110 Cal. 644, 43 Pac. 12. The plaintiff claims that the contrary was decided by White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 66, 67, 42 Pac. 480. The plaintiff here misunderstands the effect of that case. It says:

"The power to distribute and regulate the business of the court resting with the presiding judge, though it be exercised in a grossly unfair and arbitrary manner, is not an excess of power, but an abuse of it. The remedy for such abuse rests in the hands of the judges of that court, since they have the power to remove that functionary at their pleasure and substitute another in his stead; and possibly, in an instance where the violation of the rules of the court by the judge, without notice to a party litigant, worked the latter an injury by depriving him of some substantial right, the act would amount to an irregularity which could be corrected on appeal. * * * But we do not understand that, after a cause has been once assigned, it may not be reassigned or transferred, even irregularly, without jeopardizing the jurisdiction of the court therein. The power of the presiding judge in the premises is not exhausted by the original assignment of an action or proceeding."

This does not declare that the order would be void if made by other than the presiding judge. While it may be conceded that it would be irregular, it must be held that it is nothing more. There may have been good cause for the interference, but, whether so or not, his action in directing that the cause be heard before department 4 would not have the effect of depriving the court of jurisdiction. It is decided in Brown v. Campbell, supra, that there is but one superior court in the city and county of San Francisco, and all actions brought in that court are within the same jurisdiction. Whether it gets into a department of the court regularly or irregularly, after the court has acquired jurisdiction, is not a matter which we can determine in this proceeding, which only goes to the jurisdiction of the court.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

FITTS v. MISSION HEALTH & BEAUTY SHOP et al. (Civ. 3652.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 29, 1922.)

1. Partnership — 261—Provision in contract as to termination held to require the consent of all the partners.

Where a partnership agreement between I., F., and V. provided that I. should furnish the capital and act as manager of the business, and that F. and V. should perform services and receive a certain percentage of the profits, and that in the event of dissolution of the firm, the property of the firm should belong to I., an agreement between I. and V. that the partnership should be dissolved was not binding on F., and she was entitled to maintain an action against I. and V. as for a breach of the contract.

2. Appeal and error — 854(2)—Judgment not reversed merely because conclusion is unsound.

A judgment will not be reversed because the conclusion is not legally sound, if it is in fact a proper judgment.

3. Partnership — 105—Broken contract supports action on contract, but not for services performed.

Where two partners break their contract of partnership, the third partner may sue at law to recover damages for breach of the contract, but not for services performed at defendant partners' request.

4. Partnership — 122½—Partner's measure of damages for breach of contract stated.

In a suit at law by a partner to recover for breach of the partnership contract, the measure of damages is loss of plaintiff's share in the prospective profits of the enterprise.

5. Compromise and settlement ⚖5(2)—Offer to pay for services, made by way of compromise not accepted, will not support action.

Where defendant committed a breach of a partnership agreement existing between himself and plaintiff, an offer by defendant to pay plaintiff the reasonable value of her services since the commencement of the business by way of compromise, but which offer was not accepted, would not support an action to recover the value of such services.

6. Appeal and error ⚖194(2), 236(2)—Objection to imperfect denial of verified complaint not considered for first time on appeal.

The objection that denials contained in an answer to a verified complaint are not specific cannot be presented for the first time on appeal, where such objection was not made in the trial court by demurrer, motion for judgment on the pleadings, or otherwise, and the denials were treated as sufficient on the trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Lela May Fitts against the Mission Health & Beauty Shop and others. From a judgment for partial relief only, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William O. Jensen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. L. Belt and A. E. Hamilton, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. In this action the plaintiff brought suit upon seven alleged causes of action. She was made defendant in a cross-complaint. The court rendered judgment in her favor on all except the first count of the complaint, and gave her judgment on the issue tendered by the cross-complaint. The appeal is taken from the whole judgment, but appellant only urges a reversal of that part of the judgment which was rendered by the court against her on the seventh cause of action alleged in the complaint.

A written agreement was entered into between Stephen Innes, party of the first part, and Lela May Fitts and Isola Vassar, parties of the second part. This writing was dated February 24, 1920, and by its terms it was provided that it should last for a period of two years. In a general way the party of the first part was to finance and manage the beauty shop whose conduct was contemplated, and the parties of the second part were to supply their expert services in connection with the same. The memoranda of agreement is a long one, and we will only set forth excerpts therefrom which are necessary to be construed.

After the stipulation to the effect that the contract shall endure for a period of two years, there follows this paragraph:

"It is hereby stipulated and agreed by all the parties hereto that in the event of annulment or cancellation of this contract, that in such event, all the assets, furnishings, equipment, utensils, belongings of any and every sort whatsoever, used in connection with this business during the period of operating same, shall be, and are hereby declared to be, the sole and exclusive property, title to all of which to alone vest in the party of the first part hereto. Both and each of the parties hereto, making the parties of the second part to this agreement, renouncing and disclaiming, as they now hereby do renounce and disclaim, any right, title or interest whatever in these said assets. Further declaring and stipulating at this time that all the claim, interest or right whatever said second parties either have or claim to have in this said enterprise is solely that of the payment to each one of them respectively of the remuneration on the percentage basis as named and set forth above in this document for services, etc., rendered this enterprise as above. It being hereby further stipulated and agreed that in the event of dissolution of this co-operation, settlement with the parties of the second part hereto on the terms of this agreement shall have and is by stipulation hereby given prior claim."

[1] This contract was terminated by the defendants before two years had expired. Concerning this fact finding 3 contains this statement:

"The court finds that it is true that said defendants did on the 26th day of May, 1920, cancel and terminate said agreement without the consent and over the objections of plaintiff Fitts."

It then concluded as a matter of law:

"That the cancellation of said contract by defendants without the consent of plaintiff created no liability on the part of defendants or either of them by way of compensation or damages by reason of said cancellation of said contract."

Appellant is correct in contending that this conclusion does not follow from the finding above quoted. While it is true that the contract provides a basis for settlement in case of dissolution, we think that by that provision the parties had in mind a dissolution by consent. They having fixed two years as the term for which their proposed association should endure, two of them could not annul it without the consent of the third party to the contract. Ehrman v. Rosenthal, 117 Cal. 491, 49 Pac. 460. A legal dissolution, therefore, did not take place.

[2] The termination, which the court found defendants brought about, was wrongful, and constituted a breach of contract, but it is elementary that a judgment will not be reversed because a conclusion is not legally sound, if the judgment is in fact a proper one.

[3] In this case the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment on her seventh cause of action.

By it plaintiff seeks to recover, not damages for breach of contract, but compensation for "services performed by plaintiff for the defendants at their special instance and request." In the count under consideration a remedy is sought to which plaintiff is not entitled under the facts of this case. By the terms of the contract she was a copartner with defendants, not an employé. She might have sued at law to recover damages for breach of contract. Farwell v. Wilcox (Okla. Sup.) 175 Pac. 936, 4 A. L. R. 156.

[4] In that event, assuming that the facts proved would justify a recovery, the measure of damages would be her loss of a share in the prospective profits of the enterprise. Bagley v. Smith, 10 N. Y. 489, 61 Am. Dec. 756. But plaintiff has not sued for damages, and she has failed to show that she is entitled to recover on a contract, express or implied, for services rendered.

[5] Appellant insists that certain oral promises were made by defendant and were binding upon him, and that judgment should have been rendered for plaintiff accordingly. The court found that the offers of defendant, Innes, to pay the plaintiff the reasonable value of her services since the commencement of the business were efforts at compromise. If this is true, such offers, not having been accepted, cannot be a basis upon which she can predicate a right to recover in this action. Appellant has not pointed out any evidence upon which she may rely as a basis for the contention that this finding is not supported by the evidence, and, from an examination of the transcript, we are satisfied that the finding was justified.

The plaintiff at no time indicated an acceptance of the offers made by Innes.

[6] Appellant's third contention is based upon the following facts: The complaint was verified. The denials contained in the answers are not specific, but general only in character. Nevertheless, the court found that "Paragraph 2 of the seventh cause of action set out in the amended complaint on file herein is untrue."

Appellant insists that this finding is not supported because no issue was raised by the general denials of the answers. It does not appear that the plaintiff, by demurrer, motion, or otherwise, has heretofore raised the point that the denials in the answers, were defective. It does appear that they were acted upon at the time of trial as sufficient. Under such circumstances appellant cannot at this time avail himself of the ground that they are in fact imperfect, and that they are general instead of specific in form. Lofthus v. Fischer, 106 Cal. 616, 39 Pac. 1064; Stockton, etc., Wks. v. Glens, etc., I. Co., 121 Cal. 167, 53 Pac. 565. If appellant's contention is true, she should have moved for judgment on the pleadings. Hearst v. Hart, 128 Cal. 327, 60 Pac. 846.

The judgment is affirmed.

GARIN v. PELTON et al. (Civ. 4186.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 22, 1922.)

Appeal and error — §59(6) — Where paper sought to be included in transcript not considered below, motion for diminution futile.

Motion for diminution of the record, made under Code Civ. Proc. § 953, as amended by St. 1921, p. 194, is properly denied where the paper requested to be included in transcript was not considered by the trial court in reaching its decision.

Action by H. P. Garin against Allen E. Pelton and others. Motion for diminution of record on an appeal from judgment of dismissal, after sustaining defendant's demurrer to petition for writ of certiorari. Motion denied.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, and J. Allison Bruner, City Atty., of San Leandro (Chas. A. Ruggles, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

NOURSE, J. An appeal is pending in this court from a judgment of dismissal entered after the trial court had sustained, without leave to amend, defendant's demurrer to a petition for a writ of certiorari. The transcript on appeal contains a copy of the petition, demurrer thereto, the minute order sustaining the demurrer, the judgment, the notice of appeal therefrom, and the clerk's certificate. In this motion for diminution of the record respondents ask that the appellant be required to include in the transcript on appeal a copy of the writ and return thereto which they assert they filed in response to said writ.

It appears without dispute that the entire proceedings in the superior court were confined to the hearing of the demurrer to the petition, and that, upon the sustaining of that demurrer, the court dismissed the proceedings. If the return had been before the court and had been considered for the purpose of reviewing the proceedings of the respondents, the judgment would have been one of affirmance of those proceedings rather than a dismissal of the action. Section 1075, Code Civ. Proc. In an appeal from a judgment in certiorari either affirming or annulling the proceedings of an inferior tribunal the judgment roll consists of a copy of the judgment attached to the writ and return. Section 1077, Code Civ. Proc. But, when the proceedings are on demurrer only (the filing of which is permitted under section 1109, Code of Civil Procedure), the inquiry is really one as to whether the petition states facts sufficient to justify the review of the proceedings of the inferior tribunal, the effect of the filing of a demurrer under such circumstances is to adopt the petition as the return. When the cause is dismissed upon the sustaining of a demurrer without reviewing the proceedings, the petition and the demurrer thereto are a part of the judgment roll from the judgment of dismissal. They are papers which the appellate court is required to examine on an appeal from such a judgment. Stoner v. City Council, 8 Cal. App. 607, 612, 97 Pac. 692.

The suggestion for a diminution of the record is made under section 953, Code of Civil Procedure as amended by St. 1921, p. 191 which provides that, when it appears that a paper which was before the trial court is omitted from the record on appeal, and that "an examination of such paper or record will assist in a determination of the appeal on its merits," the appellate court may require its production as part of the record on appeal. Though, strictly speaking, the return in this case may have been before the trial court in that it was on file in the clerk's office, it is undisputed that the trial court did not consider it, but based its judgment solely upon its ruling on the demurrer to the petition. Our review of the judgment being confined to proceedings had in the trial court, this return would be of no assistance to this court in the determination of the appeal.

The motion is denied.

VERGANO v. DENIS. (Civ. 4235.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 5, 1922.)

Sales — 91—Evidence held to show that buyer did not accept payment from seller in full for all demands on rescission by seller.

In buyer's action on a contract for the sale of a restaurant, providing for an initial payment of $500 and for rescission by either party within two months, the seller by returning the initial payment, together with one-half the profits, evidence held to show that the buyer did not accept a payment of $600 from the seller in full for all demands on seller's rescission.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Domenico Vergano against Paul Denis. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed, on condition of remittitur.

Clay A. Pedrazzini, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. This is an action to recover from the appellant an alleged balance due to the respondent for labor. The record discloses that the appellant was the owner of a restaurant, which he contracted to sell to the respondent for $1,500, of which sum $500 was then and there paid in cash. It was further stipulated that either party might withdraw from the contract within two months—the appellant by returning the $500 initial payment, and the respondent by simply withdrawing and forfeiting his payment. The parties did not enter into partnership, but they agreed to do so, if the sale was finally consummated, and in that event they were to have been partners from the beginning, so far, at least, as concerns the profits and losses.

The respondent entered the restaurant, and for the period of two months and a little over he devoted his time and services to the business. It was agreed that each party should draw down during the two months $200 a month as "expenses." The appellant does not dispute that each was to draw down $200 per month, but he testifies that the $200 received by the respondent was to be by way of compensation to him for his services. The court resolved this conflict in favor of the respondent, and under a familiar rule this court is bound by the finding. The respondent further testified that it was agreed that, in the event that the appellant withdrew from the contract he (the respondent) was to be compensated for his services by receiving one-half the profits of the business during the period. The appellant denied the existence of such an arrangement, and the court found against him thereon. The matter does not rest entirely upon the unsupported testimony of the respondent. The appellant returned the $500 payment to the respondent, and when he did so he added to it the sum of $100. This sum of $100 was not due at all, unless it was paid as a recognition of the claim of the respondent to one-half the profits as his compensation. Furthermore, the appellant, a few days after returning the $500, destroyed his books of account showing the amount of profits. The respondent had seen them previous to their destruction, and had learned that the profits were about $1,500. There was abundant evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court. But it seems that the court erroneously failed to credit the appellant with the $100 overpayment. No reason is apparent why he should not have credit for this.

The respondent is made to say, by means of an affirmative answer to a question on cross-examination, that he accepted the $600 (being the $500 return of advance payment and the extra $100) "in full payment," but a transcript of his testimony on this point shows clearly that he did not intend to say that it was accepted in full payment for both the return payment of $500 and his claimed compensation. The following is a transcription from the record:

"Q. Mr. Vergano, did you not at that time accept the $600 check which was given to you that day from Mr. Denis in full payment of what was coming to you? A. Yes.

"Q. You did? A. Yes; I received it; yes.

"Q. Very well. Then during the time that you were working there for Mr. Denis, you had received regularly the sum of $200 a month; is that right? A. Both of us.

"Q. I mean you had? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Very well. Now, did you not have an agreement with Mr. Denis whereby you were to receive $200 a month for your wages? A. No."

It is apparent from this examination that the respondent did not intend to admit that he accepted the $600 in full of all demands. On the whole, it must be held that the findings of the trial court are fully sustained by the evidence, save as to the item of $100.

If the respondent shall file herein within 30 days his stipulation that the judgment may be reduced in the sum of $100, the judgment, as thus modified, is affirmed; otherwise, the judgment is reversed.

GOODRUM v. ABAJIAN et al. (Civ. 3860.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. July 6, 1922.)

Sales 479(7)—Evidence held to justify finding of payment.

Evidence in action of replevin by seller, held to justify finding of payment to seller by buyer of the first installment of the price of the truck sold.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Replevin by George Goodrum, doing business under the fictitious name of the Commercial Motor Company, against Edward A. Abajian and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. G. Ferrahian, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action to recover possession of an automobile truck. Plaintiff and defendant Abajian had entered into an agreement whereby the former contracted to sell the truck to the latter upon the making of certain payments, delivery to be made to Abajian upon the payment of a certain installment of $300. Abajian, claiming to have paid this amount, took possession of the vehicle. Judgment went for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Abajian alone is a party respondent as the other defendants are out of the case.

The trial court found that respondent paid the $300 to appellant before taking possession of the truck. The sole point made by appellant is that this finding is without support in the evidence. The occurrences bearing on this question transpired in the room of one Beardsley, there being present Abajian, Beardsley, who was assistant manager of appellant's business, one Meisel, who was employed as an automobile salesman by appellant, and one Platt. Abajian testified that the payment was made, but Beardsley, Meisel, and Platt all asserted the contrary. Appellant concedes that this state of the evidence justified the trial court in finding that $300 was paid by Abajian, but he contends that the entire finding is not supported by the evidence, in that the record is barren of evidence tending to show that the payment was made to appellant. Appellant's point is that the money was passed to Meisel, who had no authority to receive money or payments due appellant, and that it was not paid to Beardsley, who alone possessed such authority. Abajian knew of Meisel's lack of authority in this respect, for after the latter had conducted with Abajian the negotiations leading up to the agreement for the sale of the truck he told Abajian that he had no authority to accept the $300 payment, but that it must be made to Beardsley. It was for the very purpose of making this payment and closing the contract that Abajian went to Beardsley's room when they two and Meisel and Platt were there together. The record shows the following testimony of Abajian:

"Mr. Meisel told me the truck was ready and he sent me down to Mr. Beardsley's office. * * * I then went to Mr. Beardsley's office. While I was there I was talking about the insurance because he was charging me a whole lot of money, too much, and I didn't want to pay that much money. In all we were talking to Mr. Beardsley four or five minutes, something like that, and then he told me, 'Well, just a minute; I am going to call Mr. Meisel,' and said, 'Don't you know him, he knows you because you have been doing business with him.' Mr. Meisel came right into Mr. Beardsley's office and when they were all there Mr. Beardsley says, 'Mr. Meisel, you can talk with Mr. Abajian.' I signed the contract at that time, and Mr. Beardsley said I have to sign my bill of sale, whatever it is I have got to sign, and pay money. I don't remember how many papers I signed, but there was a few papers. * * * Mr. Beardsley was talking to Mr. Platt, and he turned me to Mr. Meisel. They turned around the other way; they started to talk together. After signing the paper I paid money to Mr. Meisel. I paid $300, three $100 bills, and Mr. Meisel got the money. I don't know what he did with it. Q. Did he put it in his pocket or on the table? A. No, no, when he started mentioned money, I says, 'Well, here's the money,' and laid on the desk like this, $300; he put the hands on it like this, and that time I think I sign the contract when I give him the money, but I don't remember for sure. I don't remember for sure whether I signed the contract before or after paying the money. I think after I paid. He showed me the contract. Mr. Beardsley was talking with another fellow. I remember I signed the contract, I think after I paid the money. Mr. Meisel gave me the contract. He gave me this paper."

Abajian thereupon produced a duplicate of the original contract, and the trial judge remarked:

"There is no use incumbering the record with two of these long printed things," the original having been already received in evidence, "the only difference is this original white one, while signed by Mr. Abajian, has not received the signature of Mr. Goodrum, per V. S. B.; while the one in Abajian's possession was completely signed by, as you see, by Goodrum, per V. S. B., meaning Mr. Beardsley. Otherwise the two are exactly the same."

We think the record shows sufficient evidence to justify the finding that the $300 was paid to appellant.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BASSETTI. (Cr. 622.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 30, 1922. Rehearing Denied July 31, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 28, 1922.)

1. Intoxicating liquors §213—Indictment for maintaining place where liquor was sold held sufficient.

An indictment charging that defendant did willfully and unlawfully conduct a place in no-license territory where alcoholic liquor was sold, served, and distributed, and did willfully and unlawfully conduct a place where alcoholic liquor was kept for sale and distribution, held sufficient under St. 1911, p. 599.

2. Intoxicating liquors §236(9) — Evidence held sufficient to warrant conviction for keeping a place.

In a prosecution for maintaining a place where intoxicating liquor was kept for sale and distribution, evidence held sufficient to warrant conviction.

3. Criminal law §1186(4)—Modification of judgment by clerk of superior court held not reversible error.

The modification by the clerk of the superior court of the judgment in a prosecution for unlawfully keeping for sale and selling prohibited liquor, from a "violation of Mendocino County Ordinance No. 210" to "maintaining a place where intoxicating liquor is kept for sale and distribution" held not reversible error, in view of Pen. Code, §§ 1258, 1404, and Const. art. 6, § 4½, relating to technical error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

S. Bassetti was convicted of keeping a place where liquor was sold, etc., in no-license territory, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. H. Iversen and Charles Kasch, both of Ukiah, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted under an indictment charging that on the 13th day of July, 1921, in the county of Mendocino, "within the boundaries of the first supervisor district of said county and outside the corporate limits of any incorporated city or town," he did "willfully and unlawfully keep and conduct a place where alcoholic liquor was sold, served and distributed, and did then and there willfully and unlawfully keep and conduct a place where alcoholic liquor was kept for the purpose of sale and distribution; said supervisor district being then and there no-license territory under the laws of the state of California." The indictment contained a second count, charging that on said date he sold alcoholic liquor to two certain individuals, naming them, but he was acquitted on this particular charge.

[1] In his opening brief appellant attacks the sufficiency of the indictment, but we understand that he has abandoned that position. At any rate, the charge upon which he was convicted was sufficiently set forth within the requirement of the statute known as the "Wyllie Law." Stats. 1911, p. 599; People v. Williams, 29 Cal. App. 552, 156 Pac. 882; People v. Mueller, 168 Cal. 526, 143 Pac. 750; State v. Busick, 90 Or. 466, 177 Pac. 64; People v. Strickler, 25 Cal. App. 60, 142 Pac. 1121.

[2] We perceive no merit in the claim that the evidence failed to sustain the charge. It was stipulated that—

"Mr. Bassetti's residence was during the year 1921 in the first supervisorial district of Men-Mendocino county and outside the incorporated limits of any city or town and that the first supervisorial district of said county was at all times during the year 1921 no-licensed territory under the laws of the state of California."

As to the sale of prohibited liquor by the defendant the proof was ample. The testimony shows clearly that on said July 13 a Mr. Wolfe purchased two bottles of wine, and Mr. Ganter and Mr. Snyder purchased a jug of "Jackass." This liquor was analyzed by one R. L. Love, a chemist for the internal revenue department of the United States, and he testified that it contained "12 and 26 per cent. alcohol by volume." Appellant seeks to discredit this witness, but there is nothing inherently improbable in his testimony. His veracity and the weight to be accorded his declarations were considerations for the jury. As to the identity of the liquor, and that it had not been tampered with after having been purchased from the defendant, the evidence is entirely satisfactory. We may add that several witnesses testified to having purchased wine of the defendant, and, while there was no expert evidence of the alcoholic contents of such wine, that character of proof is not required. People v. Mueller, supra. Moreover, some of them testified the wine was intoxicating. Indeed, the record contains more ample evidence of guilt than is usual in this class of cases.

[3] The cause was on the May calendar of this court for argument, but on the statement of counsel for appellant that the record was incomplete and inaccurate, the matter was continued to the June calendar. In the meantime appellant was permitted to file a supplemental transcript containing a bill of exceptions signed by the trial judge. There may be some question, as suggested by the Attorney General, whether this proceeding was regular, but we have concluded to regard the bill of exceptions as a part of the record on appeal. Therein it appears:

"That the clerk of the superior court of the county of Mendocino, subsequent to the pronouncement of judgment in the above matter, and on the 7th day of February, 1922, prepared and entered a judgment and certified the same to be a true and correct copy of the judgment actually rendered by the court; that thereafter, on or about the 28th day of February, 1922, said clerk 'removed, destroyed, tore up and obliterated the said judgment, and in lieu thereof made and entered a new judgment in words and figures as shown in the original clerk's transcript now on file in the office of the clerk' of this court.

"That subsequent to the making of the judgment hereinabove set forth in detail, and prior to the making of an entry of the judgment now of record and set forth in the original transcript as aforesaid, no order of court was made or entered by the superior court of the state of California by and for the county of Mendocino or by the District Court of Appeal aforesaid, or any other court, authorizing or ordering or directing the clerk of the superior court of said Mendocino county to efface or destroy or obliterate the judgment heretofore set forth in detail, or to prepare or enter or file in said matter a judgment, a copy of which now appears in the original clerk's transcript and filed in the office of the clerk of the district court aforesaid, and that the defendant above named, or his counsel, had no notice of an application to enter a new or different judgment, until the same had been made and entered as aforesaid."

The entry of the judgment, as originally made, was as follows:

"The district attorney, with the defendant and his counsel, Charles Kasch, came into court. The defendant was duly informed by the court of the nature of the indictment filed against him for the crime of misdemeanor, to wit, violation of Mendocino County Ordinance No. 210, committed on or about the 13th day of July, 1921, of his arraignment and plea of 'not guilty as charged in the indictment,' of his trial and the verdict of the jury on the 7th day of February, 1922, 'guilty as charged in the indictment.' S. Bassetti, the defendant, was then asked by the court if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which he replied that he had none. And no sufficient cause being shown or appearing to the court, thereupon the court rendered its judgment: That, whereas the said S. Bassetti having been duly convicted in this county of the crime of misdemeanor, to wit, violation of Mendocino County Ordinance No. 210, it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said S. Bassetti is guilty of the crime of misdemeanor, and that he be punished by paying a fine of $500, and that he be punished by imprisonment in the county jail of the county of Mendocino in the state of California, for the term of four months."

The change made by the clerk was in erasing the words "violation of Mendocino County Ordinance No. 210" and substituting therefor the following: "Maintaining a place where intoxicating liquor is kept for sale and distribution."

The question is whether the conduct of the clerk in thus irregularly changing the record constitutes such violation of the defendant's rights as to necessitate a reversal of the judgment. And the determination of that question must, of course, be influenced by the consideration whether said irregularity has resulted in a substantial wrong to the defendant.

While the Penal Code, § 1200, prescribes no particular form for the judgment (People v. Terrill, 133 Cal. 120, 65 Pac. 303) it does provide:

"When the defendant appears for judgment he must be informed by the court, or by the clerk, under its direction, of the nature of the charge against him and of his plea, and the verdict, if any thereon, and must be asked whether he has any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him."

It is to be observed that the court complied with this requirement in every respect, except that the trial judge made a mistake in stating that the offense constituted a violation of a certain ordinance of said county. It was probably an inadvertence, or it may be that said Ordinance 210 contains the same provisions and imposes the same penalties as the state law, and the court mistakenly supposed that the indictment was drawn under this ordinance. But how could the mistake have resulted in any prejudice to the defendant? He had a copy of the indictment, he could not be misled as to the nature of the charge against him, he knew for what he was being tried, and that the verdict of the jury was that he was guilty of the charge contained in count 1 of the indictment. Under such circumstances he was not deceived or prejudiced by the mistake of the trial judge. Indeed, if any misapprehension was caused to him or his counsel, he should have directed the attention of the trial judge to the error that it might be corrected. Not only was the defendant not misled, but it is quite apparent that the mistake would not prevent him from successfully urging the plea of a former conviction should he be prosecuted again for the same offense as is charged in the indictment herein. In the Matter of Ring, 28 Cal. 252.

Even if we were to consider the irregularity of sufficient gravity to justify a reversal of the judgment, we would direct the trial court to resentence the defendant, correcting said mistake. People v. Johnson, 71 Cal. 384, 12 Pac. 261; People v. Sama (Cal. Sup.) 207 Pac. 893; People v. Tomskey, 20 Cal. App. 672, 130 Pac. 184.

But since the judgment is in proper form, it would be an idle thing to send the case back to have the trial judge inform the defendant of something he already knows, and to impose upon him the same penalty that has already been pronounced.

We may add that the following citations are indicative of the proper view of said irregularity: People v. Gregory, 8 Cal. App. 738, 97 Pac. 912; Ex parte Murray, 43 Cal. 455; People v. Sam Lung, 70 Cal. 515, 11 Pac. 673; People v. Eppinger, 109 Cal. 294, 41 Pac. 1037; People v. Terrill, supra; State v. Cook, 92 Iowa, 483, 61 N. W. 185; Pointer v. United States, 151 U. S. 396, 14 Sup. Ct. 410, 38 L. Ed. 208; White v. United States, 164 U. S. 102, 17 Sup. Ct. 38, 41 L. Ed. 365; sections 1404, 1258, Pen. Code; article 6, § 4½, Const. Cal.

In conclusion, it may be stated that the defendant was fairly tried and justly convicted. The instructions were complete and accurate, and there was no dispute of the material facts to which the witnesses for the people testified.

The judgment is affirmed.

BAKER v. SUPERIOR COURT, SACRAMENTO COUNTY, et al. (Civ. 2488.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 23, 1922.)

1. Statutes  114(2)—Compensation Act provision for consolidation of suits held valid.

The provision of Workmen's Compensation Act 1919, § 26, for consolidation of separate suits by the employer and the employee against a third person, is fairly connected with the declared object of the act, and is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 24, though not indicated in the title.

2. Action  57(2)—Suits held not subject to consolidation under Workmen's Compensation Act.

A suit by an employee against a third person for injuries and a suit by the employee against the wrongdoer for injury to property, as the principal item of damages, should not be consolidated, under Workmen's Compensation Act 1919, § 26.

3. Prohibition  3(2) — Refused to prevent consolidation of cases, where remedy lies by appeal.

Writ of prohibition will not be granted, to prevent the superior court from consolidating employer's and employee's actions under Workmen's Compensation Act 1919, § 26, since appeal from an erroneous consolidation is provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 956, and under section 1103 the writ is not available where other adequate remedy exists.

Application by Thomas W. Baker for writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Sacramento County and another, to prevent the consolidation of certain causes for the purpose of trial. Writ denied.

Fred J. Harris, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Ben P. Tabor, of Sacramento, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. This is a petition for a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court from trying another action in connection with and at the same time as the trial of the case of Baker v. Central California Traction Company. Thomas W. Baker and one Alfred Schultz were injured in the city of Sacramento while riding on a fire truck that was wrecked by an interurban car belonging to said company. At the time Baker was an employee of said city as a member of the fire department, and was acting in the course of his duty as tillerman of the truck. He brought an action in the superior court against said company for damages caused by the alleged negligence. A separate action of the same character was brought against the company by Schultz and another by the city of Sacramento for damages caused by the destruction of the truck, and for compensation for certain moneys paid out on behalf of Baker and Schultz. When petitioner moved the superior court to set his case for trial before a jury, respondent company moved the court to consolidate the actions for the purpose of trying them together. This latter motion was granted over the objection of Baker, Schultz not appearing, and the court set the consolidated action for trial for June 29.

Petitioner seems to attach some importance to the circumstance that the superior court has exclusive jurisdiction to try the Baker and Schultz cases, while it has only concurrent jurisdiction with the Industrial Accident Commission over the city case. But since the suit was properly brought in the superior court, as far as the order of consolidation is concerned, the concurrent jurisdiction of said commission is of no significance, and the rules of procedure that are prescribed for the trial of actions in said court must, of course, apply. This is true unless, as contended by respondents, there is a common-law right in the court to consolidate these actions regardless of statutory provisions. As to this, though, we are satisfied that respondents are in error. Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, in this state the subject is regulated and controlled by statute. In support of their position respondents rely upon the authority of Cyc. and Corpus Juris. In the former it is said:

"In the absence of legislative enactment, courts of general common-law jurisdiction have inherent power to consolidate two or more actions at the instance of the defendant, or with his consent." 8 Cyc. 591.

In Corpus Juris the rule is stated as follows:

*"Courts of general jurisdiction have, independently of statute, inherent power to consolidate different actions where the conditions authorizing consolidation exist. * * * The practice of consolidating actions has now in many jurisdictions been expressly authorized, either generally or under certain conditions, by statutory provisions, some of which, it is to be observed, are broader than others, and it has been held that this statutory authority is exclusive of the common-law authority."* 1 C. J. 1122.

It is further stated on page 1124 that—

"If the conditions essential to authorize a consolidation do not exist, the court has no discretion to exercise."

But it is a familiar rule here that "the Code establishes the law of this state respecting the subjects to which it relates" (section 4, Preliminary Provisions, Code Civ. Proc.), and section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides what causes of action may be joined. It is not disputed that the facts herein do not bring the case within the contemplation of said section. Indeed, the only statutory provision upon which respondents rely as justifying the order of consolidation is section 26 of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Stats. of 1919, p. 920. Said section, as far as applicable, provides:

*"The term 'employee,' as used in this section, shall include the person injured and any other person in whom a claim may arise by reason of the injury or death of such injured person. * * * The claim of an employee for compensation shall not affect his right of action for damages arising out of injury or death against any person other than the employer; and any employer having paid, or having become obligated to pay, compensation, may likewise bring an action against such other person to recover said damages. If either such employee or such employer shall bring such action against such third person, he shall forthwith notify the other in writing, by personal service or registered mail, of such fact and of the name of the court in which such suit is brought, filing proof thereof in such action, and, if the action be brought by either, the other may, at any time before trial on the facts, join as party plaintiff or must consolidate his action, if brought independently."*

[1] Petitioner attacks this provision as violative of section 24 of article 4 of the state Constitution, requiring the subject of any act of the Legislature to be expressed in its title. He calls attention to the fact that in the original "Workmen's Compensation Act" (Stats. of 1913, p. 279), the only portion of the title in which any mention is made of the superior court is found in these words:

"And creating an industrial accident commission, providing for its organization, defining its powers and duties and providing for a review of its orders, decisions and awards"

—and that the portion of the above which we have italicized is also contained in the title of the act as amended in 1917. Stats. of 1917, p. 831. In the amendment of 1919 the language is:

"An act to amend sections [enumerating them] of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, approved May 23, 1917, and to add thereto a new section, to be numbered forty-six and one-half, relating to the issuance of injunctions by the superior court to enforce safety measures in places of employment."

No reference is made to the superior court, except in relation to the review of the awards of the Industrial Accident Commission and the issuance of injunctions to enforce safety measures. There is no mention of separate suits at the instance of the employer and the employee, or of the consolidation of such actions. The asserted change in the law upon which respondents rely is manifestly of great concern to litigants, and it is at least unfortunate that it was not indicated in the title to the act. However, the courts are disposed to be liberal in their construction of said constitutional provision, and to be governed by the principle stated in volume 1 of Dillon on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) p. 136, as follows:

"Many of the state Constitutions contain in substance a provision that no legislative act shall embrace more than one object, or, as some of them phrase it, one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. Requiring such subject or object to be expressed in the title is to prevent deceptive titles, and to enable members of the Legislature, and the people, through the usual publication of legislative proceedings, to form from the title an opinion of the nature and objects of the bill. Subject to the foregoing fundamental requirements, the provision has been frequently and properly construed to require only the general or ultimate object to be stated in the title, and not the details by which the object is to be attained. Any provision fairly and reasonably connected with and calculated to carry the declared object into effect is unobjectionable, although not specially indicated in the title. It is sufficient if the title fairly expresses or plainly gives notice or warning of the subject dealt with in the body of the act."

Applying this principle and the other rule of construction, that effect must be given, if possible, to the acts of the Legislature, we think said provision may and should be upheld.

[2] However, it is to be observed that the suit brought by the employer which may be consolidated with that of the employee is for damages by reason of compensation paid or obligation to pay to the injured employee. Obviously it does not refer to an action brought by the employer against the third party to recover damages done to the property of the former. The consolidation is permitted because the employer, by reason of having compensated the employee or having become liable for his loss, is subrogated to his claim against said third party for the damages suffered by said employee through the negligence of the third party. But, of course, there can be no subrogation, and no interest on the part of the employee, in a separate and independent action by the employer for an injury done to his property by said third party. Such was the principal item in the cause of action on the part of the employer herein. The complaint of the city of Sacramento was to recover of the traction company the sum of $3,998.58 for damaging, breaking, and wrecking the truck and the hook, ladder, and fire apparatus. It is true that the complaint also alleges that the city, by reason of its employment of said Baker, "was compelled to and did necessarily expend certain sums of money for hospital charges, medical and professional attendance, and salary to said Thomas Baker during his said illness, to wit, the sum of $473.80, to the damage of plaintiff in said amount"; but this small item should not characterize the action to the extent of compelling the plaintiff Baker to share with the city the control of the trial, when the main features of the two actions are so entirely disconnected. Of course, it is a matter of great concern to Baker under his constitutional right to a jury trial, since his privilege of challenge to individual jurors will be greatly curtailed if the actions be tried together (section 601, Code Civ. Proc.), and it is manifestly of importance that a litigant be not improperly hampered in conducting the trial according to his own theory.

[3] However, the error complained of can undoubtedly be reviewed on appeal from the judgment (section 956, Code Civ. Proc.) and no reason has been suggested why that method does not afford a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, within the purview of such decisions as Hamberger v. Police Court of City of Fresno, 12 Cal. App. 153, 106 Pac. 894, 107 Pac. 614; Simpson v. Police Court of Riverside, 160 Cal. 530, 117 Pac. 553; Germain Seed & Plant Co. v. Justice Court, 41 Cal. App. 397, 182 Pac. 784; Kurtz v. Superior Court, 37 Cal. App. Dec. 643; ¹ Lindley v. Superior Court, 141 Cal. 220, 74 Pac. 765. As we understand it, no exceptional circumstances are disclosed that take the case out of the general rule, which recognizes an appeal as an adequate remedy. Such circumstances are pointed out in Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 467, 82 Pac. 70, 3 Ann. Cas. 340, and Consolidated Adjustment Co. of California v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 207 Pac. 552.

Unless we are to ignore the plain provisions of section 1103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we must hold that petitioner must await the result of the trial, and then, of course, he may be satisfied without an appeal. We may add that, while under the rule as to prohibition, we do not feel authorized to issue the writ, yet we do not mean to hold that the trial court may not, if so advised, still permit petitioner to try his case separately.

The demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the writ denied.

BARTLETT, Mayor, v. BELL, Auditor.
(Civ. 4082.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 29, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 28, 1922.)

1. Municipal corporations ⚡1027—Mayor not authorized to maintain action to require auditor to sign warrant for another's claim against city.

Where a city established a municipal market as authorized by its charter, and an ordinance required the auditor to sign all warrants for the market equipment, the mayor in his official capacity, not being the real party in interest, could not maintain an action to compel the auditor to sign a warrant for equipment furnished by another, though Const. art. 11, § 6, empowered cities to make and enforce regulations respecting municipal affairs, and the city charter required the mayor to see that all contracts made with the city were performed.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡168—Mayor not authorized to assist private litigants in collecting claims against city.

A charter, requiring the mayor to see that the ordinances are enforced and contracts with the city performed, covers only matters in which the city has an affirmative interest, and does not authorize the mayor to assist private litigants in asserting their monetary rights against the city.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Application for a writ of mandate by Lewis Bartlett, Mayor, etc., against Elmer F. Bell, Auditor, etc. From a judgment denying the application, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Lemuel D. Sanderson, Asst. City Atty., of Berkeley, for appellant.

Richard B. Bell, of Berkeley (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. [1] The city of Berkeley is a municipal corporation organized under a freeholders' charter. During all the period of time involved in this proceeding the appellant was the mayor and the respondent was the auditor of said city. The council of said city on the 15th day of March, 1921, adopted an ordinance amending a former ordinance establishing a municipal market in said city. Said ordinance and the amendment thereto provide for the selection of a market manager. Section 4 of said amended ordinance reads as follows:

"Sec. 4.—That the market manager shall make the purchases of equipment and shipments of foodstuffs, and all demands for payment of the same when allowed by the council, shall be signed by the president and clerk of the council, and shall be properly numbered and dated. Likewise, a warrant numbered and dated the same as the demand shall be issued and signed by the same officers. Both must, before they can be paid, be presented to the auditor. The auditor shall allow it, and indorse upon said warrant the word 'Allowed' and the date of such allowance and sign his name thereto. The treasurer shall pay said demand on the presentation of the warrant so allowed."

To supply the needs of the market established by said ordinances, the proper officers purchased from the Mercantile Box Company 500 lug boxes at a price of $106.25. The demurrer admits that the amount of the aforesaid claim is a fair and reasonable sum to be paid for said materials. A claim for the same was regularly presented by said Mercantile Box Company, and the same was passed and authenticated as required by ordinance and then presented to said respondent as said auditor for allowance. That officer refused to allow the claim or in any manner to endorse the warrant. This proceeding is instituted by said appellant in his official capacity as mayor of said city to procure a writ of mandate compelling said respondent to allow said claim. It has been stipulated that this case shall be submitted to this court upon the sole issue as to the power of the appellant as said mayor to maintain this proceeding.

Section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution provides, among other things, as follows:

"Cities and towns hereafter organized under charters framed and adopted by authority of this Constitution are hereby empowered, and cities and towns heretofore organized by authority of this Constitution may amend their charters in the manner authorized by this Constitution so as to become likewise empowered hereunder, to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters, and in respect to other matters they shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

The charter of said city provides that it shall have the right and power to acquire, establish, maintain, equip, own, and operate markets and market houses and all other public buildings, places, works, and institutions, and to enact appropriate legislation and do and perform any and all other acts and things which may be necessary to carry out its general powers and to exercise all powers not in conflict with the Constitution and its charter. Article 6, § 21, of said charter reads as follows:

"The mayor shall be the chief executive officer of the city and shall see that all the ordinances thereof are duly enforced. He shall be charged with the general oversight of the several departments of the municipal government. He shall see that all contracts made with the city are faithfully performed."

The appellant complains that, by reason of the refusal of said respondent to approve warrants for claims incurred in connection with said municipal market, the market director is deprived of the means of carrying on his duties, and that he, the appellant, is deprived of the means of enforcing said ordinances providing for said market.

It is clear that the appellant is not authorized to maintain this proceeding. He is not the real party in interest. His only interest in the matter of payment of this claim arises by reason of its supposed favorable effect upon other negotiations and contracts had by the city with other contractors. But this condition is remote and inconsequential. There exists no direct and tangible interest on the part of the city in the payment of this claim. The city received the commodity in conformity with the terms of the contract had with the claimant. It cannot further seek or obtain anything that it has not already acquired. If the writ were granted, the city would be no richer, and no property or other tangible right would be secured to it. So far as the rights of the city are concerned, the controversy is over a mere moot question in which it has no financial interest. In no manner and in no degree does the city or the mayor represent any of the interests of the claimant, and the claimant alone is entitled to complain if it demands are unpaid.

The appellant draws our attention to State v. Crawford, 28 Fla. 441, 10 South. 118, 14 L. R. A. 253, as sustaining his position. In that case the court upheld the right of the Governor to prosecute a writ against the Secretary of State to compel that officer to sign, seal and deliver a commission to a public officer. It was held that the state had such an interest in seeing that all public offices were properly filled that the Governor could prosecute the writ. The court says:

"The entire public are directly interested in the consummation of his appointment, in order that he may perform the duties of his office, which duties, and the necessity of the performance thereof to the public account, not only for the appointment, but for the creation of the office itself."

He relies, also, upon Russell v. Ayer, 120 N. C. 180, 27 S. E. 133, 37 L. R. A. 246; but in that case the Governor sought to compel the state auditor to perform a ministerial duty with reference to the levy and collection of certain taxes. Manifestly the entire state was interested in the matter, and the Governor, as its chief executive, was charged with the duty of seeing that all officers performed their duty. It was held that he could maintain the proceeding.

But here we have a public officer seeking to compel another public officer to perform an act for the benefit of a private party, and an act in which the public as such has no manner of interest. If the respondent, as auditor, refuses to perform some ministerial duty which injuriously affects the claimant, then the person injured should seek the remedy. The city cannot depart from its proper functions to assist private litigants in collecting their private debts. The fact that the city owes the debt in no way affects the duty of the claimant himself to seek the proper relief.

No more does City of San Buena Ventura v. McGuire, 8 Cal. App. 497, 97 Pac. 526, 528, aid the appellant. That case involved the refusal of an officer to authenticate an ordinance passed by the board of trustees, and the city, being interested in passing the ordinance, brought an action for a writ compelling the discharge by the officer of his ministerial duty. The court upheld the right of the city to sue. City of San Diego v. Capps, 32 Cal. App. 461, 163 Pac. 235, involves a similar principle. Neither case is authority here.

[2] Appellant further insists that, because the charter requires the mayor to see that all ordinances of the city are duly enforced and that contracts made with the city are faithfully performed, that official may intervene in matters affecting either ordinances or contracts even though the city has no actual interest in their observance. The duties conferred by the charter cover only matters in which the city has an affirmative interest, and they do not require or permit him to reach out and assist private litigants in asserting their monetary rights, even though, in a remote sense, the city may be affected by them.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

PENDLETON v. HELLMAN COMMERCIAL TRUST & SAVINGS BANK.
(Civ. 3823.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 3, 1922. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1922.)

1. Banks and banking ⇨134(2)—Bank has right of set-off when depositor dies insolvent, though debt not due.

Where a depositor died insolvent, the bank had a right to set off a note in its favor against the deposit, though the note was not then due, and even assuming that Civ. Code, § 3054, giving a banker a lien on property in his hands for any balance due him, applies to deposits of money.

2. Banks and banking ⇨119—Relation to depositor is that of debtor, and money belongs to bank.

Money deposited in a bank is not the property of the depositor, but belongs to the bank, which is the depositor's debtor for the amount deposited.

3. Banks and banking ⚡134(1) — Right of set-off not confined to statutory lien.

A bank's right of set-off as against an insolvent depositor, who is also indebted to the bank, is not confined to the statutory lien conferred by Civ. Code, § 3054, on property in the hands of the bank for any balance due.

4. Executors and administrators ⚡434(5) — Bank may set up right of set-off, though claim not presented.

A bank, sued by an insolvent depositor's administrator, may set up its right to offset a note due it against the deposit, though the claim on the note has not been presented, as this defense is not in the nature of a counterclaim, but in effect that no indebtedness exists.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by C. W. Pendleton, as administrator of C. W. Pendleton, Jr., deceased, against the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Page & Hurt and Arthur F. Coe, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kimball Fletcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of C. W. Pendleton, Jr., deceased, brought this action to recover the amount of a deposit credit of $360.33 as shown on the books of People's Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation. By reason of transactions between the People's Trust & Savings Bank and the defendant bank, it is conceded that the liability, if any there be, is now the liability of the defendant. C. W. Pendleton, Jr., died on April 25, 1919. The answer of the defendant states that on February 28, 1919, the People's Trust & Savings Bank loaned to decedent the sum of $5,000, for which he gave his note, without security, payable 90 days after that date. The note was not paid, and prior to the commencement of this action it was transferred to the defendant for the purposes stated in the answer. It does not appear that any claim has been presented to the administrator for allowance of the amount of the note as a debt of the estate payable in course of administration. The answer further alleged that C. W. Pendleton, Jr., was insolvent at the time of his death, and that the assets of his estate were insufficient to pay his liabilities, and that the estate is insolvent. The plaintiff having moved for judgment on the pleadings, this motion was granted, and judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the deposit. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

For all practical purposes, the questions at issue are the same as if the deposit had been made in defendant bank and the note of decedent had been made to the defendant. The judgment rests upon the assumption that, because the debt of Pendleton to the bank was not due at the date of his death, the bank never acquired any right of set-off, or any so-called "banker's lien" upon the deposit fund, whereby that fund could be applied toward payment of the debt owing, but not then due, from Pendleton; that therefore the bank, with reference to the note held by it, is only a general creditor, and as such creditor can only present its claim against the estate as an item wholly unconnected with the amount which decedent had left on deposit in the bank.

[1, 2] It is not to be denied that under ordinary conditions, where the debt to the bank is not due, the banker's right to set-off a deposit against such debt does not exist. But in this case the depositor at the time of his death was insolvent. It is provided by section 3054 of the Civil Code:

"A banker has a general lien, dependent on possession, upon all property in his hands belonging to a customer, for the balance due to him from such customer in the course of the business."

Relying upon this section, respondent contends that the lien does not exist, because at the time of Pendleton's death the note to the bank was not due. In reply to this it might well be questioned whether the section is applicable to the case, since money deposited in a bank is not property of the depositor. The money belongs to the bank, which is the depositor's debtor for the amount deposited. Assuming, however, that the indebtedness of the bank to its depositor is lienable property within the terms of said section 3054, the contention that the lien is not enforceable here, because the debt to the bank was not due, takes no account of the fact of insolvency. In the majority of jurisdictions, in the states where the question has been presented, it has been held that on the insolvency of a depositor a right of set-off exists against the insolvent or his assignee, even though the debt is not due; the cases evidently proceeding on the theory that insolvency renders all debts due and furnishes of itself a sufficient ground for set-off. This proposition is stated, and the authorities on both sides of the question are collected, in a note found in Ann. Cas. 1915A, at pages 689, 690.

Gnarini v. Swiss American Bank, 162 Cal. 181, 121 Pac. 726, is listed as sustaining the minority rule, which, however, it does not do. That case holds only that, where a bank has mortgage security for a debt, it must exhaust that security before recourse can be had to the bank account or personal responsibility of the debtor. So far as we are advised, the question here presented has not been decided in this state. We are of the opinion that the fact of insolvency of the debtor, as applied to the situation existing in this case, is sufficient to sustain the right of set-off in favor of the creditor bank, notwithstanding that the debt of the depositor was not due at the time when he died leaving an insolvent estate. The principles involved are discussed at length in Nashville Trust Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 91 Tenn. 336, 18 S. W. 822, 15 L. R. A. 710. In that decision it was noted that the doctrine of set-off, whether legal or equitable, is essentially a doctrine of equity. It was that natural justice and equity which dictates that the demands of parties, mutually indebted, should be set off against each other, and only the balance recovered, that gave birth to the idea of accomplishing the result in a judicial proceeding. Although the common law determined otherwise, the rule was amended, in the case of bankrupts, by English statutes.

"In pursuance of these old statutes, and of the dictates of equity, the principle of set-off between mutual debts and credits has, for nearly two centuries past, been adopted in the English bankrupt laws, and has always prevailed in our own whenever we have had such a law in force on our statute book, and it mattered not whether the debt was due at the time of bankruptcy or not." Carr v. Hamilton, 129 U. S. 255, 9 Sup. Ct. 295, 296, 32 L. Ed. 670.

"The jurisdiction of courts of equity over the subject of set-off was exercised before there was any statute upon the subject. * * * By the civil law, from which the great body of our system of equity comes, a cross-debt was, by mere operation of law, without any act of the party, extinguished. It was treated as an absolute payment. Courts of equity in this country, while not going so far, have accomplished the same results in numerous cases, by granting perpetual injunctions against judgments in favor of insolvent persons who were indebted in larger amounts to the judgment debtor. * * * The court, in all such cases, is governed, not by the statute of set-off, but by the general principles of equity." Nashville Trust Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, supra.

The court further held, in the case last cited, that insolvency of itself is a sufficient ground for the application of equitable set-off, and that the fact that the indebtedness on one side is not due when the set-off is claimed constitutes no obstacle to the assertion of the right against an insolvent debtor.

[3] We perceive no reason why a bank's right of set-off, as against an insolvent depositor who is also indebted to the bank, should be confined to the statutory right of set-off recognized by the Civil Code:

"The 'banker's lien' referred to in section 3054 of the Civil Code, was familiar, as a part of the law, long before the enactment of the Codes. Section 3054 does not extend its scope." Berry v. Bank of Bakersfield, 177 Cal. 206, 209, 170 Pac. 415, 417.

We may add the section does not restrict the scope of the principles thereby recognized. There is no magic in the statutory enactment of a rule derived from equity, whereby in receiving this legislative sanction the principle is deprived of its equitable qualities. It is not just that the representative of an insolvent debtor, who on another account is the creditor of his debtor, should be permitted to enforce the insolvent's claim without paying the other, merely because the obligation in his favor is due while the correlative obligation is not due.

"It is well settled that the insolvency of a party against whom a set-off is claimed constitutes a sufficient ground for the allowance of a set-off not otherwise available." People v. California, etc., Trust Co., 168 Cal. 241, 250, 141 Pac. 1181, 1185 (L. R. A. 1915A, 299).

[4] Respondent contends, also, that under the statutes of this state no claim can be used as a set-off and counterclaim against the estate of a decedent unless the claim upon which the same is founded has been presented to the personal representative of the decedent. Thus, in Reed v. Johnson, 127 Cal. 540, 59 Pac. 986, it was indicated that an answer which set out a counterclaim against the estate of a decedent did not constitute a defense or counterclaim; it not appearing that the demand had ever been presented for allowance to the executrix. But in the case at bar the defense presented is not in the nature of a counterclaim. Its allegations are, in effect, that there exists no indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff. The bank is not seeking to collect its note from the decedent's estate. For that purpose its claim would have to be presented for allowance and for payment pro rata with other claims out of the assets of the estate, such as they may be. Appellant's claim here is that, by reason of the insolvency of Pendleton, it was entitled to apply the amount of the deposit pro tanto to the payment of the note. This contention, we believe, should be sustained.

There is one decision of our Supreme Court arising out of facts very much like those of the present action, except that in that case the bank presented to the executrix its claim, although not for the entire amount of the note, but for a stated balance, crediting thereon the amount of the deposit, and except, also, that the fact of insolvency did not appear. At the time of his death the decedent was indebted to defendant on a note not yet due, and had on deposit in the bank a lesser sum. When the note matured, the bank applied on the note the amount of the deposit. The bank having refused to pay to the executrix the amount of the deposit, she brought this action. The Supreme Court, reversing the judgment of the superior court, held that the bank was entitled to credit for the amount of the deposit, as a cross-demand which might be set off against the note; that, although the note of deceased was not due when he died, it was sufficient that it had become due when the action was brought. In its decision the Supreme Court pointed out that there was no finding or evidence as to the solvency or insolvency of the estate. The decision was grounded upon the proposition that the purpose of the law was to ascertain the balance existing and to give to both the claimant and the estate the benefit of all just offsets, whether the estate be solvent or insolvent. In view of this conclusion, the court held it "unnecessary to decide whether the appellant had a right to apply the deposit by virtue of the banker's lien claimed by it." Ainsworth, Executrix, v. Bank of California, 119 Cal. 470, 51 Pac. 952, 39 L. R. A. 686, 63 Am. St. Rep. 135.

The judgment is reversed.

PICKWICK STAGES, NORTHERN DIVISION, v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF CITY OF EL PASO DE ROBLES et al. (L. A. 6846.)(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1922.
Rehearing Denied Sept 11, 1922.)1. Pleading ⚡4—Nature of defendant's pleading determined from its contents, not its designation.

Whether defendant's pleading is a cross-complaint or a counterclaim is to be determined from its allegations, and not from the designation given it.

2. Pleading ⚡138—Answer held a counterclaim and not a cross-complaint.

In an action for malicious interference by defendant with plaintiff's stage line franchise, an answer, denominated a cross-complaint, and alleging that defendant had a local stage line franchise which plaintiff was infringing by intercepting local traffic and praying for actual and exemplary damages, set forth a cause of action connected with the subject of plaintiff's action, and hence was a counterclaim under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437, 438, and not a cross-complaint.

3. Judgment ⚡106(8)—Where answer is a counterclaim and not a cross-complaint, it is deemed controverted, and default against plaintiff improper.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 462, providing that new matter in the answer constituting a counterclaim is deemed controverted, defendant is not entitled to judgment by default on an answer, which, though designated a cross-complaint, sets forth a cause of action connected with the subject of plaintiff's action, and which is therefore a counterclaim under sections 437 and 438, and as such deemed to be controverted.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by Pickwick Stages, Northern Division, against the Board of Trustees of the City of El Paso de Robles, J. E. Price, and others. From judgment for defendant Price on his cross-complaint or counterclaim, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Fogel & Beman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

S. V. Wright, of San Luis Obispo, and Alex. Webster, of Paso Robles, for respondent.

SHAW, C. J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered against it in favor of the defendant J. E. Price on October 5, 1920, for damages in the sum of $3,500. It is based upon a pleading of said J. E. Price denominated a cross-complaint.

The plaintiff's complaint stated a cause of action in equity, showing that the plaintiff was operating a public stage line between

Los Angeles and San Francisco in this state, through the cities of El Paso de Robles and San Luis Obispo, under the franchises from the Railroad Commission and said cities, authorizing it to do so for the period of five years; that the defendants were maliciously conspiring together to deprive plaintiff of said franchises through the city of El Paso de Robles, and threaten to do so, and thereby prevent and interfere with the operation of its stages, and made their intent to do so public, thereby preventing passengers from traveling on plaintiff's stages, to its damage in the sum of $5,000. The complaint prayed for an injunction and for $5,000 as damages.

To this complaint defendant Price filed an answer denominated as an answer and cross-complaint. The so-called cross-complaint, however, merely states a cause of action in favor of Price against plaintiff for damages. It alleges that Price was operating a stage line from San Luis Obispo to El Paso de Robles for local business, and had a franchise and permit from the Railroad Commission, duly issued, authorizing it to do so; that the plaintiff was operating a through line of stages from Los Angeles to San Francisco, and contrived to intercept local business between its stations in the two cities of San Luis Obispo and El Paso de Robles, which would otherwise have been transacted by Price, to his damage in the sum of $3,500. It asked judgment for this sum and also for exemplary damages in the sum of $5,000.

The plaintiff failed to file any answer to this so-called cross-complaint. Thereupon, on motion of Price, the court made an order, declaring the plaintiff's default for failure to answer or otherwise plead to the said cross-complaint. The plaintiff soon afterwards moved to set aside the order of default on the ground: First, that the court had not jurisdiction to make such order; and, second, that the failure to answer was due to the inadvertence and excusable neglect of the plaintiff. This motion was denied by the court. Thereafter the cause was set for trial on May 18, 1920. Upon the trial, both parties being present, the court refused the demand of the plaintiff that the defendant be required to prove the allegations of the cross-complaint in relation to the damages alleged. It held that the default admitted all of the allegations of the cross-complaint, so called, including the amount of actual damages alleged, and entered judgment in favor of the defendant Price against the plaintiff for $3,500.

[1] The court was in error in holding that the pleading filed by the defendant was a cross-complaint. It is true that it is so denominated in the introduction and by indorsement thereon, but it is thoroughly established that the designation given by a party to his pleading does not determine its character. The question whether it is a cross-complaint or counterclaim must be determined by the court from its allegations, and not from the designation given to it by the party. Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 311, 38 Am. Rep. 54; Harrison v. McCormick, 69 Cal. 619, 11 Pac. 456; Gregory v. Bovier, 77 Cal. 124, 19 Pac. 232; Meeker v. Dalton, 75 Cal. 156, 16 Pac. 764; Mills v. Fletcher, 100 Cal. 148, 34 Pac. 637; McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 160, 64 Pac. 278; Hibernia, etc., Soc. v. Insurance Co., 138 Cal. 260, 71 Pac. 334. The Code provides that the answer shall contain: (1) A general or specific denial of the material allegations of the complaint controverted by the defendant. (2) A statement of any new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim. Code Civ. Proc. § 437. It also provides that a counterclaim may consist of a cause of action connected with the subject of the plaintiff's action. Code Civ. Proc. § 438.

[2, 3] The facts alleged in the complaint show that the plaintiff had a franchise to operate a public stage line running through San Luis Obispo and El Paso de Robles, and plaintiff sought to enjoin the defendants, including Price, from endeavoring to destroy its franchise, and asked damages for the injury already suffered from the publication of their threats and purposes. The cause of action of the defendant Price was for damages to him because of the alleged interception by the plaintiff of Price's business over said line in and between said two cities. It arises out of the rival claims of the parties to the same route, and although it does not seek relief as to the property in the franchise of either party, it is manifestly connected with the subject of the plaintiff's action, and therefore it comes within the definition of a counterclaim in section 438. Section 462 provides that—

"The statement of any new matter in the answer, in avoidance or constituting a defense or counterclaim, must, on the trial, be deemed controverted by the opposite party."

It is obvious, therefore, that no default should have been entered for the failure of plaintiff to answer the allegations of the counterclaim, mislabeled a cross-complaint; that the same should have been deemed controverted on the trial; that the defendant Price should have been required to prove the material allegations thereof; that the court should have required such proof; and that it erred in entering judgment upon the theory that the default had admitted all its allegations.

As the judgment must of necessity be reversed for this error, it is unnecessary to consider the question whether the failure to answer was inadvertent. The court should have set aside the default of its own motion.

It was not authorized to enter such default, and it should have had no effect as a matter of law.

We express no opinion as to the sufficiency of the facts stated in either the complaint of the plaintiff, or the counterclaim of Price, to constitute a cause of action.

The judgment is reversed.

SONOMA MAGNESITE CO. v. NATIONAL MAGNESITE PRODUCTS CORPORATION. (S. F. 10261.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 15, 1922.)

Appeal and error — 788—Appeal from judgment roll alone will be dismissed.

Where it appears that a party has appealed from a judgment upon the judgment roll alone, and transcript shows no cause of appeal and the judgment is sustained by the findings, the appeal will be dismissed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by the Sonoma Magnesite Company against the National Magnesite Products Corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed on motion of defendant.

Erwin L. Chloupek and George E. Crothers, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. R. Leppo, of Santa Rosa, and Sterling Carr, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, C. J. Defendant moves this court to dismiss this appeal on the ground that the judgment was entered by consent of the parties, that the sale was made by the consent of the parties, and upon the further ground that the agreement of January 17, 1922, between Chloupek, as attorney for plaintiff, and the National Magnesite Products Corporation, estops plaintiff from appealing from the judgment herein.

Since the notice of motion was filed, the appellant and the respondent have each filed additional papers, and, among other things, the transcript on appeal has been filed, wherefrom it clearly appears that the plaintiff has no cause of appeal whatever, that it has appealed from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone, and that the judgment is in full accord with the findings. Wherefore no cause whatever appears whereby said appeal can be sustained. It is considered that the appeal should be dismissed without regard to the sufficiency of the causes set forth in the motion.

Let the dismissal be made without costs to either party.

PEOPLE v. MOHAMMED. (Cr. 2438.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1922.)

1. Criminal law §822(1)—Instruction to be considered as a whole.

Relative to whether part of an instruction is erroneous, it must be considered with what precedes and follows.

2. Criminal law §805(1)—Single instruction need not cover whole case.

A single instruction need not cover the whole case, but it is enough that the instructions as a whole do so.

3. Witnesses §313—Manner of testifying may be considered by jury relative to credibility.

The character of a witness which a jury should consider in determining his credibility is not limited to innate truthfulness, as shown by general reputation, but includes his accuracy in observing, and of recollecting and in relating what he has observed and recollects as shown by the character of his testimony and his manner in testifying.

4. Criminal law §829(1)—No need to give requested instruction already covered.

A requested instruction, being covered by others given, may be refused on that ground.

5. Homicide §110—Killing in self-defense precluded by circumstances.

Where a person strikes another on the head and knocks him down, and then procures a razor and therewith cuts his throat from ear to ear, producing death, it would seem that self-defense was not within the realm of possibility relative to necessity of instructing thereon.

6. Homicide §163(2)—Evidence of conviction of deceased unknown to defendant immaterial.

Evidence of a conviction of deceased, attempted to be shown by defendant, was immaterial; its only purpose being to show that defendant at the time of the killing knew of deceased's character, and it not appearing that he had ever heard of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Ullah Mohammed was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

Gil P. Hall, of Petaluma, for appellant.

Ross Campbell, of Santa Rosa, U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, C. J. The defendant was convicted of murder of the first degree and sentenced to death. He appeals from the judgment.

The evidence fully established his guilt. It shows that he entered the house of one Allie Akbar, about midnight, with a shotgun; that he fired the shotgun at Akbar as he lay in bed and missed him; that Akbar sprang out of bed, and the defendant struck him upon the head, knocking him down and rendering him unconscious, and then cut his throat, as the result of which Akbar died. The defendant admitted these facts, and all the circumstances tend to corroborate his statement.

[1, 2] Defendant's counsel, in his argument, selects passages from the instructions, and contends that they are erroneous, because the particular part selected does not cover all the points in the case. For example, instruction 3 contains, among other statements the following:

"It is only necessary that the unlawful act of killing be preceded by concurrence of will, deliberation and premeditation on the part of the slayer, and if such is the case the killing is murder of the first degree."

This is criticized because "it omits both the element of self-defense, the element of malice, and the element of intent." This passage, however, was only a part of a single clause of the instruction. The words next following were, "no matter how rapidly these acts of the mind may succeed each other or how quickly they may be followed by the act of killing." Putting the two parts together and connecting them with what precedes both of them, we find that it is apparent that this part of the instruction was intended to define the elements of premeditation and deliberation. The element of intention as defined in the opening sentence of the paragraph is also correctly stated in another instruction. The element of malice is fully treated in other instructions and so, also, is the element of self-defense. It has been so often stated in opinions of this court that the fact that each instruction does not cover the whole case does not make such instruction erroneous, if the instructions, as a whole, did so; that it is unnecessary to cite the cases, or to say more on the subject in this case. This answers all the objections made to the instructions except those which we shall presently discuss.

Instruction 19 directed the jury that the "character of the witnesses as shown by the evidence should be taken into consideration" in determining their credibility. Counsel criticizes this instruction on the ground that it makes "the character of the witness an element for the jury to consider in judging his truthfulness, that the jury would take this to mean his general character, whereas, so it is claimed, they can only take into consideration the character of the witnesses for truth, honesty, and integrity. We think counsel attached too much importance to the expressions we have quoted from the instruction. It was in the introductory sentence, and it was followed by a statement of the specific things to which it refers, as follows:

"A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testified, his interest in the case, or his bias or prejudice against one of the parties, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or by contradictory evidence."

All these things make up the character of the witness, and are proper for the consideration of the jury. General reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity, if shown, is proof affecting his character for truthfulness. Truthfulness is only one of the elements of the character of the person who testifies. It takes all of the others to make up the character which the jury may consider as establishing, not only his innate truthfulness, but also his accuracy in observing, his accuracy of recollection, and his accuracy in relating that which he has observed and recollects, so as to reach a conclusion regarding his credibility. It is clear that the word "character," in the opening sentence, was used in this general sense. The instruction, as a whole, could not have misled the jury. No witness was impeached by proof that his general reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity was bad. Consequently, the jury could not have had their attention directed to proof of the character of any witness in that respect, and they would naturally understand that it was the character of the witnesses generally that was referred to in the instruction.

[3-5] The defendant offered an instruction to the effect that it was not necessary for the defendant to establish self-defense by evidence sufficient to satisfy the jury that it was true, but that if there was evidence sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant was justified, then he was entitled to an acquittal. The instruction was correct in point of law, and it may as well have been given. The court below refused it on the ground that it was covered by charges already given. Defendant's counsel thinks this is not the case. We have examined the instructions on the subject, however, and we are satisfied that the other instructions given covered the point of the one offered. Besides, we do not think there is any substantial evidence that the defendant was acting in self-defense when he killed the deceased. Where a person strikes another a blow on the head and knocks him down, and then procures a razor with which he cuts his throat from ear to ear, thereby producing death, it would seem that self-defense was not within the realm of possibility.

[6] The defendant also claims that the court erred in excluding a judgment roll of the district court of the second judicial district of the state of Montana as evidence in the case. The purpose of the evidence was to show the character of Allie Akbar. The ruling was correct. The record in the case does not show what offense, if any, Allie Akbar was accused of. Furthermore, it does not appear that the defendant had ever heard of the judgment. The only purpose of the evidence would be to show that the defendant had knowledge of Akbar's character at the time of the killing. As it does not appear that he ever heard of it, the evidence is wholly immaterial.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROCCA v. STEINMETZ et al. (Sac. 3336.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1922.)

1. Judgment ⚡239—Court may render judgment in favor of one tort-feasor, and allow case to proceed against the others.

Where an action is against two or more tort-feasors, the court may, under Code Civ. Proc. § 579, render a judgment in favor of one tort-feasor, and allow the case to proceed against the others.

2. Appeal and error ⚡79(2)—Appeal may be taken from judgment in favor of one tort-feasor before case is tried against the others; "final judgment."

Where an action is against two or more tort-feasors and the court has rendered a judgment dismissing the action as against one of them, and allowing the case to proceed against the others, such judgment is a final judgment within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 963, and an appeal may be taken from such judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by William Rocca, an infant, by J. G. Pedro, his guardian ad litem, against D. H. Steinmetz and D. H. Steinmetz, Jr. A judgment of dismissal was rendered in favor of D. H. Steinmetz, and the case allowed to proceed against the other defendant, and plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

J. C. Webster and C. H. Grayson, both of Sonora, for appellant,
J. B. Curtin, of Sonora, for respondents.

SHAW, C. J. The respondent D. H. Steinmetz moves the court to dismiss the appeal herein on the ground that no appeal lies from a judgment against one of two tortfeasors before the final trial on the merits of the action.

The action is against D. H. Steinmetz, the father, and D. H. Steinmetz, Jr., his son, for an injury alleged to have been caused by the carelessness of the son in recklessly and negligently driving an automobile off the road and down an embankment, whereby one Marguerita L. Rocca, mother of William Rocca, was killed, she being at said time a passenger in the automobile and a guest of said D. H. Steinmetz, Jr. It is alleged that D. H. Steinmetz, the father, was the owner of said automobile, and bought and kept it for the use and pleasure of his family, including said D. H. Steinmetz, Jr.; that the said D. H. Steinmetz, Jr., was a careless and reckless driver of said automobile; and that the said D. H. Steinmetz, knowing him, the said D. H. Steinmetz, Jr., to be such a careless and reckless driver of said automobile, negligently allowed and permitted him to drive said automobile on the occasion of said accident to said Marguerita L. Rocca, and while he was so driving the same he was doing so with the consent, knowledge, and permission of said D. H. Steinmetz.

In the case of Nolan v. Smith, 137 Cal. 360, 70 Pac. 166, the action was on a bond given by a justice of the peace against the justice and his two sureties to recover damages against them for an unlawful imprisonment. The sureties demurred to the complaint separate from their principal, and their demurrer being sustained, what purported to be a judgment for costs was entered in their favor. From this judgment the plaintiff appealed. No judgment was taken against the principal, and the action was still pending against him. The two sureties as defendants moved the court to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the judgment was not final. The court held the point to be well taken, and accordingly dismissed the appeal.

The motion was made in department 2 of this court, and there was never any petition for a rehearing; consequently it never received any further consideration by the court. The decision appears to have been well considered in some respects, and it holds in a case of that character that a final judgment should not be given against some of the defendants, but the case should be held until the final judgment is given for or against all of the defendants, in which event a judgment may be entered in favor of some of the defendants and against others, and thus it will be final as to all of them at the same time. The court in coming to this conclusion evidently overlooked section 579 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is not cited or referred to. It reads as follows:

"In an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper."

[1, 2] The present action is unquestionably of a character in which a joint or several judgment could be rendered. The court, upon finding that one of the parties is not liable in the action, could render a judgment in his favor, and then leave the action to proceed against the other parties. That was the course taken by the court in the present case. It held that the allegations against D. H. Steinmetz were not sufficient to put him to his defense, and rendered judgment in his favor, allowing the plaintiff to pursue his action against the other defendants. No reason is perceived why this was not proper. The Code expressly allows it, and to hold the person bound to wait until the final judgment against the other party before taking an appeal from the judgment against the first party already rendered is wholly unreasonable, and finds no warrant in any provision of the Code. That the judgment must be final against the defendant in whose favor it is given is essential to the right of appeal. But such a judgment is final within the meaning of that term, as given in section 963. No other judgment can be entered against him, as he will go free if the case goes no further against him. Nolan v. Smith, supra, must be overruled on this point, unless it is considered as creating a special class of cases consisting of suits on bonds of justices of the peace, which would make such cases a class by themselves. We express no opinion as to whether this is allowable or not. It is sufficient to hold that the case is not in point here.

The fact that the defendant D. H. Steinmetz is sued as the owner of the automobile and D. H. Steinmetz, Jr., is sued as the perpetrator of the tort does not make either of them any the less liable to have a judgment rendered against him while the action is allowed to continue as to the other defendant.

It is not necessary to say anything in regard to the liability of D. H. Steinmetz further than this, that his liability has never been decided in any court in this state. He is not sued as the mere owner of the automobile, but he is sued as the owner who has allowed and permitted his son to drive his automobile knowing that his son is a reckless and careless driver of said automobile. That fact differentiates it from all other cases on the subject.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

LAWRENCE et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al. (L. A. 6605.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 16, 1922.)

1. Railroads ⚡5½, New, vol. 6A Key-No. Series—Complaint held sufficient to hold Director General.

A complaint, in an action for negligent death, which sufficiently sets forth a cause of action against the railroad company and alleges that the railroad was under the control of the Director General at the time of the accident, is sufficient to hold the Director General responsible.

2. Railroads ⚡350(16)—Contributory negligence of automobile driver held for jury.

In an action for death at a spur track crossing, whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in driving his automobile upon the track without stopping and looking for approaching trains held for the jury.

3. Appeal and error ⚡1170(9)—Failure to instruct that neglect to ring locomotive bell on approaching crossing must be proximate cause of accident held not reversible error.

Though an instruction in crossing accident case, as to duty to ring locomotive bell was erroneous in the omission of a statement that the failure to ring the bell must contribute directly to the accident, the error held not such as to cause reversal, in view of the evidence and Const. art. 6, § 4½.

4. Appeal and error ⚡1170(9)—Instruction that pecuniary condition of widow and child may be considered in determining damages held not reversible error.

In an action for the death of plaintiffs' decedent at a railroad crossing, an instruction that the pecuniary condition of plaintiffs as widow and minor child of deceased may be considered in determining the amount of damages was not reversible error, where there was no evidence to support the instruction, and in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Gertrude E. Lawrence and another against the Southern Pacific Company and Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Judgment as to the Southern Pacific Company reversed, and judgment as to the Director General affirmed.

Hickcox, Crenshaw & Trude, of El Centro, for appellants.

Chas. L. Childers, of El Centro, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by the plaintiffs, the widow and minor child of George V. Lawrence, deceased, to recover damages for his death, which occurred on April 3, 1919, in El Centro, Cal., at the intersection of Orange avenue with a spur track of the Southern Pacific Company in that city. The defendants named in the action are the Southern Pacific Company and Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, and it is a conceded fact in the case that at the time of the accident which caused the death of the decedent the railroad and its equipment was being operated by the Southern Pacific Company and its officials and employees under the control of the Director General of Railroads acting under and by virtue of the proclamation of the President of the United States, issued on December 26, 1917, pursuant to the act of Congress of August 29, 1916 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1974a), which act empowered the President in time of war "to take possession and assume control of any system or systems of transportation, or any part thereof, and to utilize the same, to the exclusion, so far as may be necessary, of all other traffic thereon, for the transfer or transportation of troops, war material and equipment, or for such other purposes connected with the emergency as may be needful or desirable." By the terms of the proclamation a director general of railroads was appointed, with full authority to take possession and control of the systems embraced in the proclamation and to operate and administer the same. To this end the Director General was given authority to avail himself of the services of the existing railroad officials, boards of directors, receivers, employees, etc., who were authorized to continue to perform their duties in accordance with their previous authority until and except so far as such Director General shall from time to time by general or special orders otherwise provide; "but any orders, general or special, hereafter made by such Director General shall have paramount authority and be obeyed as such."

The accident in question occurred through a collision between an automobile in which the decedent and a companion were riding and which the former was driving along Orange avenue, and a line of freight cars which were being backed along a spur track of said railroad in said city. With respect to the parties defendant and their relation and liability, the plaintiffs' amended complaint alleges that Walker D. Hines is the regularly appointed, duly qualified, and acting Director General of Railroads, under and by authority of the laws of the United States; that the defendant Southern Pacific Company was on the date of said accident and still is the lessee and in control of the railroad in question and of its track, locomotives, cars, and other equipment, and was operating the same at the time of the accident, "subject only to the control of the Director General of Railroads of the United States." The amended complaint then proceeds to allege that—

"The defendant Southern Pacific Company carelessly and negligently caused certain of its cars to approach said crossing at a rapid rate of speed, and then and there pass rapidly over the same, and negligently and carelessly omitted its duty while approaching said crossing to give any signal which could be heard or seen by said George V. Lawrence, and carelessly omitted its duty by failing and neglecting to have a switchman or flagman or any other person at said crossing to warn the said George V. Lawrence of the said approaching train, and that in consequence thereof the cars of the defendant Southern Pacific Company struck the said automobile as aforesaid," etc.

The amended complaint further alleges "that said injury was not caused or contributed to by the acts or carelessness of said George V. Lawrence, but was wholly because of the negligence and carelessness of the Southern Pacific Company"; and finally avers that "by reason of the death of said George V. Lawrence by the careless and negligent acts of the defendant Southern Pacific Company the plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of $20,000.

The defendants appeared separately, though by the same counsel. The defendant Southern Pacific Company moved to dismiss the action as against it upon the ground that it was not a proper party defendant in the action, for the reason that it was not operating said railroad at the time of said accident, but that the same, with its tracks, locomotives, cars, and other appurtenances, was then and there being operated by Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads. The motion specified General Orders 50 and 50a of the Director General of Railroads, and quoted from the latter the portion thereof ordering:

"That all actions at law growing out of the possession, use, control or operation of any railroad or system of transportation by the Director General of Railroads which might have been brought against the railroad company should be brought against the Director General of Railroads."

This motion was upon hearing denied. The defendant Walker D. Hines, as Director General of Railroads, demurred to the amended complaint upon the general ground that same did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against said defendant, and also upon the special ground of misjoinder of parties defendant, in that Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, was joined with the Southern Pacific Company as such defendants. The defendant Southern Pacific Company also presented a demurrer upon the general ground, and also upon the ground of misjoinder of itself with the defendant Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads. These demurrers being overruled, the defendants answered separately, denying specifically any negligence on the part of said defendants, or either of them, and alleging that the accident occurred through the contributory negligence of the decedent. The defendants also each denied that the Southern Pacific Company was in the possession, control, or operation of said railroad at the time of said accident, but did not deny that the defendant Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, was in the possession and control of said railroad at said time. Upon the issues thus joined the cause proceeded to trial before a jury. At the conclusion of plaintiffs' case the defendants moved separately for nonsuit, which motion the trial court denied. Upon the submission of the cause the jury rendered its verdict against both defendants in the sum of $20,000 damages, for which sum judgment was thereafter entered.

Motions for a new trial, made separately by said defendants, were denied, whereupon they united in taking and prosecuting an appeal to this court. The cause was transferred to the District Court of Appeal for hearing, and upon said hearing therein it was stipulated that the judgment should be reversed as to the defendant Southern Pacific Company. This stipulation being in full force and effect, the judgment against the defendant Southern Pacific Company will be reversed solely upon said stipulation, and not upon the merits. This renders unnecessary any consideration of the alleged errors of the trial court in so far as they might affect the defendant Southern Pacific Company, and leaves only for consideration upon this appeal the errors alleged to have been committed by the court affecting the defendant Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads.

[1] The first of these alleged errors urged in behalf of said last-named defendant is that the trial court erred in overruling its demurrer upon the general ground that the amended complaint failed to state a cause of action as to said defendant. This contention is based upon the fact that said complaint did not contain any express averment of negligence upon the part of said defendant Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads; its averments of negligence being wholly confined to the alleged negligence of defendant Southern Pacific Company. This latter fact being conceded, it does not, however, follow that the plaintiffs' amended complaint fails to state a cause of action against defendant Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads. It avers, somewhat inartificially, but still sufficiently to pass a general demurrer, that the operation of the railroad by the Southern Pacific Company at the time of the accident complained of was under and subject to the control of the Director General of Railroads. In so alleging it follows substantially the language of the act of Congress and the proclamation of the President of the United States, above referred to, empowering the Director General of Railroads to take over the possession, control, and operation of the railroads during the war period, and in so doing to make use of the officials and employees of such railroads in continuing the operation thereof during the period of such control. Neither the act of Congress in question nor the proclamation of the President issued in pursuance thereof, nor any order of the Director General of Railroads made in assuming control of such railroads, undertakes to exactly define the relation between those corporations and their officials and employees thus continuing the operation of such railroads and the Director General of Railroads after the assumption by him of such control. Nor have any decisions of courts to which we have been referred undertaken definitely so to do. The nearest approach to such definition which has been called to our attention is that announced in the case of Dahn v. McAdoo (D. C.) 256 Fed. 549, wherein that court suggests that:

"The peculiar relationship created by the act of Congress and the proclamation of the President is somewhat analogous to the relationship of master and servant,"

—while in the case of Vaughn v. State, 17 Ala. App. 35, 81 South. 417, it is said:

"The apparent theory of general order No. 50 is that, while carriers are operating under federal control, they are mere agents of the government, and, if liability for their torts and the torts of their employees exist, it is against the government and not against the carrier, and therefore actions for such torts should be against the Director General of Railroads and not against the carrier."

Adopting the view that the relationship between the Director General of Railroads and the codefendant, Southern Pacific Company, was in the nature of an agency on the part of the latter, it would follow that the averments of plaintiffs' amended complaint as to acts of negligence on the part of the Southern Pacific Company sufficient to state a cause of action against it would also sufficiently state a cause of action against its principal, the Director General of Railroads, under the general rule that the negligence of the agent is imputed to the principal. A reading of General Orders 50 and 50a of the Director General of Railroads shows that they were drawn in harmony with these views, since these provide that in actions instituted since December 30, 1917, based upon a cause of action arising from the operation of any railroad, the pleadings may, upon application, be amended by substituting the Director General of Railroads for the carrier company as a party defendant and releasing the company from liability thereof. It would thus appear that the mere substitution of the name of the Director General of Railroads as a party defendant in an action already begun against a railroad, based upon its alleged negligence, would suffice to make him a party to such action, and to justify a judgment against him without any other or further amendment of the pleadings so as to separately charge him with negligence. Peacock v. Detroit, etc., Ry. Co., 208 Mich. 403, 175 N. W. 580, 8 A. L. R. 964; Palvo v. Northern Pacific Co., 144 Minn. 398, 175 N. W. 687; Elliott v. C. M. & St. P., etc., Ry. (Mo. Sup.) 236 S. W. 17; Adams v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. (Mo. Sup.) 229 S. W. 790. We are therefore of the opinion that the amended complaint in this action which sufficiently set forth a cause of action against the Southern Pacific Company for having negligently caused the death of the decedent was also sufficient to hold the Director General of Railroads responsible for such negligence through its averment that at the time of the injury complained of said railroad was being operated under his control.

[2] The next contention of said appellant is that his motion for nonsuit should have been granted for the reason that the contributory negligence of the decedent had been established by the plaintiffs' evidence as a matter of law. This contention is based upon the proposition that the decedent approaching the railroad crossing at which the collision occurred was bound to stop and look and listen for approaching trains, and that had he done this he would have observed the approaching train in time to have avoided the accident. The appellant cites a large number of well-known cases supporting his said contention, and it is not questioned by the respondent that they so decide. This conceded rule, however, is predicated upon the assumption that the decedent knew, or should in reason have known, that he was approaching a railroad crossing, but in this case the evidence upon this point is in sharp and substantial conflict. There is evidence showing that the spur track of the railroad upon which the cars which caused the accident were being operated took off from the regular line of the railroad track at a point several hundred feet away from the railroad crossing where the decedent was killed, and at said point was about 300 feet distant from the said regular line of tracks; that there was no sign or other visible warning to indicate the existence of a track or railroad crossing at that point, and that the track itself was so concealed by the earth along and between its rails as not to be visible, or at least to be easily observed by those approaching it along Orange avenue. There was also evidence that the lands to the north and south of the crossing were occupied with the yards of certain oil companies which were surrounded by high picket fences, commonly known as "stockades," which shut off the view of the line or course of this spur track from those approaching the vicinity of this particular crossing. There was also evidence that the decedent had resided but about two weeks in El Centro, and there was nothing in the way of evidence showing or tending to show that he was or should have been aware of the existence of said spur track or of said crossing prior to the moment of his approach to it immediately before the collision. There was also evidence showing that the train of cars which collided with his machine was approaching noiselessly, or, as stated by the engineer, was "drifting into this siding," and that no whistle was blown or bell rung or other warning given of its approach, and that there was no brakeman or flagman or other person upon the rear end of the train thus backing down this spur track, to give warning of its proximity. In the presence of such evidence this court is unable to say as a matter of fact that the decedent knew or should in reason have known of the existence of this crossing or of the approach of this train so as to have been bound to stop and look and listen before essaying this crossing, and hence we cannot say that as a matter of law the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence in failing so to do. Under such conditions the question of contributory negligence would be one to be submitted to the jury under proper instructions of the court.

What has heretofore been said disposes also of appellant's contention that the verdict of the jury was not supported by the evidence in the case.

[3] The appellant's next contention is that the trial court committed prejudicial error in giving the following instruction:

"You are instructed that it is the duty of the defendants to have a bell on its locomotive and to ring the same at a distance of at least 80 rods from the place where the railroad crosses any street, and to keep the same ringing until the locomotive crosses said street, and that if you find from the evidence that the bell on the locomotive attached to the train which caused the accident complained of in this action was not ringing at the time of the accident, then such omission constitutes negligence per se, and the defendant is liable for all damages sustained by the plaintiff, unless you find further from the evidence that the deceased failed to exercise ordinary care for his own protection."

It is the contention of the appellant that the vice in this instruction consists in the omission therefrom of the statement "that the accident was due to such failure" or of such similar statement as would indicate to the jury that it must also find that such failure was the proximate cause of the accident. There can be no doubt that this court has uniformly held that instructions relating to the failure of a defendant to perform a duty imposed by statute as constituting actionable negligence should embrace the limitation that the omission must have contributed directly to the injury McKune v. Santa

Clara, etc., 110 Cal. 480-486, 42 Pac. 930; Fresno Traction Co. v. A., T. & S. F., etc., Ry. Co., 175 Cal. 358, 361, 165 Pac. 1013; Eaton v. S. P. Co., 22 Cal. App. 461, 473, 134 Pac. 801, and cases cited. It follows necessarily that the foregoing instruction was defective in the omission of this qualifying clause or statement; but the question yet remains as to whether under all the circumstances of this case it was such prejudicial error as would compel a reversal of the case. It is a conceded fact in the case that the train of cars which was being backed down this siding and which caused this collision consisted of 11 gondola cars, with engine attached to the further end thereof. The average length of these cars was about 40 feet each, which would place the engine at a distance of over 450 feet from the point of collision. The evidence of witnesses who were nearest the point of collision preponderate in the showing that they heard no ringing of an engine bell. On the other hand, the evidence of those in charge of the train was to the effect that the engine bell was ringing at the time, and was rung automatically when the engine was in action. The ringing of an engine bell at that distance from a spur tracks crossing and in the direction of the main line tracks might well have escaped the notice of persons at or approaching such crossing, and, this being so, even if the evidence had been undisputed that the engine bell was ringing, that fact would not have compelled the conclusion that the decedent was negligent in failing to hear and observe its distant warning. The evidence otherwise clearly shows that those in charge of the operation of said train of cars upon said spur track at the time of the occurrence of this accident were guilty of culpable negligence directly contributing thereto. The testimony of every eyewitness to the accident, other than the brakeman himself, who should have been stationed either upon the crossing or upon the nearest end of the approaching train, is to the effect that he was at neither place, but was at some distance down the line of cars, too far away from the crossing to give warning to the decedent of their approach. The evidence also shows that the train was being operated at a rate of speed which carried its last car, which had struck decedent's machine, 175 feet beyond the point of contact and after the engineer had been given the stop signal at the moment of the collision. There was no flagman at the crossing, nor was there maintained there any signal or "stop, look and listen" signs, or other warning signs or signals indicating the presence or dangers of the crossing. The evidence further shows that the premises on both sides of the point of intersection of the west line of Orange avenue with this single spur track are occupied by the yards of oil companies which are surrounded with tall stockades, which greatly obstruct, if they do not entirely obscure, vision along the line of said track on the part of those approaching the crossing until they are practically upon it. In view of all these circumstances clearly showing that those in charge of this train were culpably negligent in several particulars directly contributing to this accident, entirely aside from the question as to whether the engine bell was or was not ringing, we are unable to say that the error in the foregoing instruction was sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal of the case. It appears to us that the jury, as reasonable men, would naturally regard the fact as to whether said engine bell was or was not ringing at such a distance from the actual point of collision as an immaterial consideration in the case.

[4] The next instruction of which the appellant complains is an instruction setting forth the relationship of the plaintiffs to the decedent as his widow and minor child and their right to recover damages based upon such relationship. The portion of said instruction particularly complained of is its concluding clause, whereby the jury was instructed that it had a right to take into consideration, among other facts, "the pecuniary condition of said minor child and widow of the deceased in determining the amount of damages." In the case of Steinberger v. California Electric, etc., Co., 176 Cal. 386, 389, 168 Pac. 570, 572, this court said:

"It seems to be the rule, supported by a long line of decisions in this state and elsewhere, that evidence of the plaintiff's poverty is inadmissible in an action to recover damages for personal injuries"—citing many cases.

It follows that the foregoing portion of said instruction was erroneous, and would have been prejudicially so if there had been any sufficient evidence in the case touching the plaintiffs' wealth or poverty. The record, however, shows that when, during the trial, an inquiry was attempted to be made as to what, if any, property the plaintiffs had, it was met with a prompt objection, which the court as promptly sustained. No other direct evidence touching the subject was offered or admitted, and the only bit of testimony which the appellant relies upon in urging its contention is the statement of the widow of the decedent, admitted without objection, that the latter was an able, strong man, sober and industrious, and was receiving $125 a month wages, and that "Mr. Lawrence and myself lived together all the time, and he supported us." In this state of the record we are of the opinion that the appellant was not prejudicially affected by this erroneous clause in an otherwise correct instruction, which was predicated upon no sufficient evidence in the case upon which the jury could have based a finding as to the plaintiffs' wealth or poverty. A judgment will not ordinarily be reversed for an erroneous instruction which has no support in the evidence in the case. Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489.

As to both of the foregoing instructions, which we have held erroneous, but not sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal, we are of the opinion that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution can properly be given application, in view of all the other facts and circumstances of this case. We do not think "that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

The judgment as to the Southern Pacific Company is reversed.

The judgment as to the Director General of Railroads is affirmed.

BELL v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(S. F. 10082.)

1. Railroads $\S$ 5½, New, vol. 6A Key-No. Series—Substitution of federal Director General as defendant held improperly denied.

In an action against a railroad for damages done while the railroad was under federal control, in accordance with Act Cong. March 21, 1918 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, §§ 3115¼a-3115¼p), it was error to deny motion of defendant, requesting a substitution of the Director General of Railroads in its stead, in accordance with General Order No. 50, issued by the Director General.

2. Railroads $\S$ 5½, New, vol. 6A Key-No. Series—Company not liable for injuring animals during federal control.

Civ. Code, § 485, requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks, and making them liable for injuring or killing animals, resulting from absence of or defects in fences, though construed to impose liability on a lessor company, is not operative to fix liability on the railroad companies for injuries arising during federal control.

3. Railroads $\S$ 5½, New, vol. 6A Key-No. Series—Order substituting Director General after judgment held improper.

Substitution of Director General of Railroads after rendition of judgment against railroad company, without further proceedings, would be improper, as depriving the government of its day in court.

4. Evidence $\S$ 11—Court judicially knows that in January, 1918, the railroads were in the control of the federal government.

A finding that defendant railroad company was negligent in failing to maintain fences on January 28, 1918, as a result of which plaintiff's horses were killed, does not require affirmation of a judgment for damages, since the court must take judicial notice that on such date the railroad was controlled by the Director General of Railroads.

5. Railroads $\approx 5\frac{1}{2}$, New, vol. 6A Key-No. Series—Neglect to fence before federal control held not to impose liability for injuries occurring during such control.

That a railroad company failed in 1917 to comply with Civ. Code, § 485, as to construction and maintenance of fences, was not the proximate cause of the killing of horses on January 28, 1918, after the beginning of federal control, so that the railroad company was not liable therefor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; W. A. Beasley, Judge.

Action by James Bell against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Louis Oneal, of San Jose, for appellant.

E. M. Rea and Rea, Cassin & Caldwell, all of San Jose, for respondent.

MYERS, Justice pro tem. Upon further consideration we are satisfied with, and hereby adopt, as part hereof, the following opinion herein of the District Court of Appeal for the First District, written by Mr. Justice Waste:

"This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of the lower court awarding plaintiff $1,000 damages, and costs, for the killing of certain horses. The cause of action was based upon the alleged failure of the defendant to maintain good and sufficient fences along its right of way, by reason of which the animals were allowed to go on the track of the railroad, where they were struck and killed by a train, operated, so the plaintiff alleged, by the servants and employees of the defendant. The action was brought directly against the Southern Pacific Company as sole defendant. In its answer the company denied that it was operating the railroad at the time of the accident, and alleged that the road and fences along its right of way were under the jurisdiction, and in charge of the United States Railroad Administration, and that all persons employed on the train were in the service of the administration, which had exclusive control over them. It further alleged that at the time all persons engaged in such operative work, and in maintaining the roadbed and appurtenances thereto, were acting as servants, agents, and employees of the United States government. It disclaimed all responsibility for the claim of the plaintiff, which, it asserted, was a liability of the Railroad Administration.

[1] "In due course the defendant made a motion for the substitution of the Director General of Railroads as defendant in its place and stead, which was denied. Upon denial of the motion there was presented a bill of exceptions, which appears in the transcript and as part of the judgment roll. The motion for substitution should have been granted. On December 26, 1917, the President of the United States issued a proclamation by which the Secretary of War was authorized and directed to take possession and assume control of all railroads within the boundaries of the United States on December 28th following. On March 28, 1918, an act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under federal control was approved (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, §§ 3115 $\frac{3}{4}$ a-3115 $\frac{3}{4}$ p), and on March 29th the President issued his proclamation, directing the Director General of Railroads to exercise the powers conferred by that act. The Director General thereupon issued General Order No. 50, providing that all actions thereafter brought for loss or damage to property caused by the operation of railroads, arising during federal control after December 31, 1917, should be brought against the Director General direct. The order also provided that in those actions already brought, for a cause of action accruing after December 31, 1917, but arising under federal control, the defendant company might, on motion, have the Director General of Railroads substituted in its place, and be itself dismissed from further proceedings.

"The cause of action here sued upon arose after December 31, 1917, and the action itself was brought on November 4, 1918, after the promulgation of General Order No. 50. At the time the motion for substitution was made Walker D. Hines was the Director General of Railroads, and should have been substituted in the place and stead of the defendant Southern Pacific Company, which ought to have been dismissed from the action. Missouri Pac. R. R. v. Ault, 256 U. S. 554, 41 Sup. Ct. 593, 596, 65 L. Ed. 1087; Nash v. Southern Pacific Co. (D. C.) 260 Fed. 280, 287; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Poston, 256 U. S. 662, 41 Sup. Ct. 598, 599, 65 L. Ed. 1157. In the first of these cases the Supreme Court of the United States critically analyzed the exact situation presented by the instant case, and definitely decided that under the Federal Control Act, supra, as a matter of law, the government or its agency for the operation of the railroad could be sued, as, under the statute, the legal person in control of the carrier was responsible for its acts. The title by which suit should be brought—the person who should be named as defendant—not being designated in the act, 'it was perhaps natural,' said the court, 'that those wishing to sue the carrier should have named the company as the defendant when they sought to hold the government liable. * * * All doubt as to how suit should be brought was cleared away by General Order No. 50, which required that it be against the Director General by name.' The court held that application of the railroad company that it be dismissed from the action should have been granted, and the judgment against it was reversed.

[2] "Notwithstanding this clear definition of the sole liability of the Director General of Railroads in such cases, the respondent seeks to maintain the action against the defendant as owner of the railroad, under the provisions of section 485 of the Civil Code. That section requires a railroad corporation to make and maintain a good and sufficient fence on both sides of its track and property, failing in which the company must pay for cattle or other domestic animals killed by its engine or cars, unless the injury occurred through the neglect or fault of the owner of the animals killed. Construing that action, the Supreme Court held that, even though a railroad company had leased its road and rolling stock to another company, it remained liable for cattle killed by the train of the lessee on the unfenced portions of the lessor's railroad. Fontaine v. Southern Pacific Co., 54 Cal. 645, 652. Respondent attempts to apply the effect of that decision to the appellant in the instant case. The effort must fail. No divided, but complete, possession and control were given the United States for all purposes as to the railroads dealt with by the Federal Control Act. The Railroad Administration does not exercise its control through supervision of the owner company of the railroad, but by means of a Director, through 'one control, one administration, one power, for the accomplishment of the one purpose, the complete possession by governmental authority to replace for the period provided, the private ownership theretofore existing.' Missouri Pac. R. R. v. Ault, supra; Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. North Dakota, 250 U. S. 135, 148, 39 Sup. Ct. 502, 63 L. Ed. 897.

[3] "The respondent asks that this court, without any further proceedings, make an order substituting the Director General of Railroads as defendant in the action, in the place and stead of the Southern Pacific Company, and then affirm the judgment. If that were done, it would, in effect, be affirming a judgment against a party who has not had a day in court. A judgment binding upon the government under such circumstances could not be obtained. Nash v. Southern Pacific Co., supra (D. C.) 260 Fed. 286."

It is earnestly urged that the District Court opinion failed to give due consideration to the decision of this court in the Fontaine Case, supra, and virtually overrules it. But there is a clear ground of distinction between the two cases, in this: That in the Fontaine Case the defendant, by leasing its railroad, had voluntarily disabled itself to perform the duty of maintaining fences, imposed upon it by law, whereas in the instant case the defendant was so disabled by the act of government, without the defendant's act, fault, or consent. The Fontaine Case is but an application of a well-recognized principle of law to the effect that a party upon whom rests an affirmative duty imposed by law for the protection of others cannot escape liability for the nonperformance thereof merely by showing that he has delegated another to perform it for him. The instant case, on the other hand, is an application of the converse of that rule, namely, that the nonperformance of such a duty is always excused by a showing that performance thereof was prevented, either by an "act of God" or by the intervention of vis major, without the act, fault, or consent of the party sought to be charged.

[4] But it is said the trial court found as a fact that the defendant was negligent in failing to maintain its fences on January 28, 1918, and that this finding cannot now be questioned, because there is no specification of insufficiency of evidence to support it. We think that it is so attacked by specifications No. 1 and No. 2. But, even if it were unassailed, this finding would be of no avail to the plaintiff. Courts take judicial notice of the public and private official acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the United States. Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 3. It is not necessary to allege or prove facts which are so noticed, from which it follows that allegations, or proofs, or findings to the contrary thereof must be disregarded by the court. French v. Senate, 146 Cal. 604, 607, 608, 80 Pac. 1031, 69 L. R. A. 556, 2 Ann. Cas. 756; People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 618, 625, 45 Pac. 860.

[5] The case of Bryson v. Hines (C. C. A.) 268 Fed. 290, 11 A. L. R. 1438, is not in point here. That action was predicated upon the affirmative negligence of the railroad company in constructing "a grossly and obviously unsafe track," knowing it was to be used for the transportation of troops, which affirmative negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. In the instant case, if it be conceded, as claimed, that the railroad company was negligent in failing to properly maintain its fences at some time in 1917, there is no causal connection shown between such failure and the subsequent failure of the government to maintain them in 1918, after it had taken control. The failure to maintain fences in 1917, though a violation of law, conferred no right of action upon plaintiff. It was the injury to his horses on January 28, 1918, due to the absence of fences on that date, which gave rise to his cause of action.

The judgment is reversed.

VAN LANDINGHAM v. UNITED TUNA PACKERS. (L. A. 6816.)(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 1, 1922.
Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1922.)

1. Corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 617(2)—Corporation whose charter forfeited, and powers and functions suspended, held not to continue de facto, so as to give validity to acts and contracts.

A de jure corporation, whose charter has been forfeited for failure to pay a license tax, and whose powers and functions have been suspended, under either St. 1915, p. 422, or St. 1917, p. 371, amending and reframing the former act, or under both of such acts, does not continue to function as a de facto corporation, so as to give validity to its acts and contracts entered into during period of its forfeited charter and suspended powers; the act of 1915 declaring such acts and contracts to be unlawful, and the act of 1917 expressly declaring them void.

2. Corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 29(2)—Statute denying collateral inquiry as to de facto existence after due incorporation held not to apply to acts of corporations whose charters are forfeited and acts declared unlawful.

Civ. Code, § 358, denying collateral inquiry in a private suit as to de facto existence after due incorporation, applies only to corporations not forbidden by positive law to do business as de facto corporations, but not to attempted acts of corporations whose charters have been forfeited, and whose acts thereafter have been expressly made unlawful by the terms of the statute declaring such forfeiture.

On Rehearing.

3. Corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 34(8)—Equitable estoppel held inapplicable in favor of one suing on contract made during period of forfeited charter.

The doctrine of equitable estoppel cannot be applied in favor of one suing a corporation for breach of contract entered into during the period of its forfeited charter and suspended powers, where, while the facts in relation to the forfeiture were actually unknown to all parties concerned, the means of knowledge thereof were equally available to all, and it further appears plaintiff did not expend any money or services, or change his situation in any respect, in reliance on the contract, and defendant has not received and retained any benefit accruing therefrom.

Action by C. E. Van LANDINGHAM against the United Tuna Packers. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. Rehearing denied; Shaw, C. J., dissenting.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

P. B. D'Orr and A. L. Abrahams, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This is an action to recover damages for the breach of a contract alleged to have been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant on the 7th day of March, 1918, by the terms of which the defendant agreed to employ the plaintiff to act as its exclusive agent or broker in the sale of its entire pack of canned fish and fish products during the term of five years from April 1, 1918, and up to and including March 31, 1923, and for which the plaintiff was to receive certain stipulated commissions from the net price of the product thus sold. It was alleged that the defendant had refused to perform and had repudiated said contract, to the plaintiff's damage in the sum of $4,000. The defendant, in its answer, denied having entered into or executed any such contract, or employed the plaintiff in any capacity whatever, or agreed to pay plaintiff any commissions whatever, or delivered to the plaintiff, for sale or otherwise, any of its fish product whatever. The answer contains certain other specific denials not material to the inquiry in this case.

Prior to the trial of the action, the parties entered into a stipulation as to the facts of the case, which by agreement was to constitute the findings of fact in the case, and which was adopted by the court as such, and which stipulation reads as follows:

"(1) C. E. Van LANDINGHAM is, and at all times mentioned in plaintiff's complaint was, doing business under the fictitious name of C. E. Van LANDINGHAM Company, and at all times has complied with all of the provisions of the law with respect to doing business under a fictitious name.

"(2) That United Tuna Packers is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, and that said corporation was duly organized on September 23, 1913, and since said time has been engaged in catching and canning fish and fish products, and owned and operated, and now owns, a cannery for that purpose.

"(3) That the articles of incorporation and by-laws of said corporation provide, and at all times have provided, that there shall be five directors of said corporation, and that three directors shall constitute a quorum and may act as the board of directors, and that, where a vacancy occurs on the board of directors, the remaining directors may elect any duly qualified person to fill said vacancy. That during the year 1917, up to March 3, 1917, the directors of the United Tuna Packers were A. D. Pearce, W. Von Bergen, F. H. Johnson, Bertha V. Johnson, and Arthur J. Abbott.

"(4) That the annual license tax required under the laws of the state of California was not paid by said United Tuna Packers upon the 1st day of January, 1917, nor paid at all during said year, and at 6 o'clock p. m. on March 3, 1917, said tax became delinquent.

"(5) That in the month of April, 1917, the secretary of state of California filed with the county clerk of Los Angeles county a duly certified copy, as required by law, of the record in said secretary's office showing as follows:

Name of corporation.....United Tuna Packers
Corporate number74618
Place of businessLos Angeles
Charter forfeited to state (section 10, chapter 190, Statutes 1915) at midnight March 3, 1917.

"(6) That prior to May 25, 1917, the said plaintiff had no connection with or interest in said defendant, and did not, at any time prior to the alleged execution of the contract herein sued upon, have any knowledge or notice that the corporation had forfeited its charter or franchise, or that the annual license tax required by the laws of the state of California had not been duly paid for the year 1917.

"(7) That during the interim between March 3, 1917, and March 7, 1918, meetings of the persons who composed the board of directors on said March 3, 1917, and the persons purported to be duly elected as their successors in once as hereinafter recited, were from time to time held, and business was carried on in the name United Tuna Packers in exactly the same manner as though said license tax had been duly paid.

"(8) That no new directors were elected, or any of the directors purported to be changed, until May 25, 1917. That on said May 25, 1917, a meeting was held by said A. D. Pearce, W. Von Bergen, F. H. Johnson, Bertha V. Johnson, and Arthur J. Abbott; said persons purporting to act as directors of the said defendant. That at said meeting A. D. Pearce tendered his resignation as a director, and his resignation was accepted by the other persons acting as directors, to wit, W. Von Bergen, F. H. Johnson, Bertha V. Johnson, and Arthur J. Abbott. That after the resignation of said A. D. Pearce had been accepted, John Tweeddale was elected as a director by the other persons purporting to act as directors, to wit, W. Von Bergen, F. H. Johnson, Bertha V. Johnson, and Arthur J. Abbott. Thereupon the said W. Von Bergen tendered his resignation as a director, and the other persons purporting to act as directors, to wit, F. H. Johnson, Bertha V. Johnson, Arthur J. Abbott, and John Tweeddale, accepted his resignation and elected one Ward as a director in the place and stead of said W. Von Bergen. That thereupon F. H. Johnson tendered his resignation as a director, and the other persons purporting to act as directors, to wit, Bertha V. Johnson, Arthur J. Abbott, John Tweeddale, and Ward, accepted the resignation of the said F. H. Johnson, and elected A. L. Abrahams as a director in the place and stead of said F. H. Johnson. Thereafter Bertha V. Johnson and Arthur J. Abbott tendered their resignations as directors, and the three persons then purporting to act as directors, to wit, John Tweeddale, Ward, and A. L. Abrahams, accepted their resignations, but did not attempt to fill the vacancies purported to be thereby created. That the proceedings to elect said John Tweeddale, Ward, and A. L. Abrahams were in all respects due and regular and valid, except as the same may have been entirely voided or affected by the fact herein recited of the nonpayment of the license tax and the declaration of the secretary of state declaring the said charter forfeited.

"(9) That thereafter meetings of the directors of said United Tuna Packers were held by the said John Tweeddale, Ward, and A. L. Abrahams, and business transacted and carried on as hereinbefore recited in paragraph 7.

"(10) That on January 29, 1918, said John Tweeddale, Ward, and A. L. Abrahams met, purporting to act as directors of said defendant corporation, and that at said meeting the plaintiff herein, C. E. Van Landingham was elected a director and president of the United Tuna Packers, and after the purported election of said C. E. Van Landingham as a director and president John Tweeddale tendered his resignation as a director.

"(11) That on March 7, 1918, a meeting was held by said Ward, Abrahams and Van Landingham as directors of said United Tuna Packers, and the said persons purporting to act as said directors elected John W. Austin and John Tweeddale as directors. Thereafter C. E. Van Landingham and Ward resigned as directors, and the other persons purporting to act as directors, to wit, said Abrahams, Austin, and Tweeddale, thereupon accepted their resignations and thereupon elected A. Boyd as a director; and thereafter said Abrahams resigned as a director, and thereupon said Austin, Tweeddale, and Boyd elected John Tweeddale as vice president and A. Boyd as secretary.

"(12) That prior to the said 7th day of March, 1918, the said plaintiff herein, C. E. Van Landingham, had purchased a majority of the capital stock of the said defendant. That on said 7th day of March, 1918, and prior to the time of his resignation, the said C. E. Van Landingham sold all of his said stock to the said John W. Austin and A. Boyd, and a transfer of the stock was made upon the books of the corporation. That after the said John W. Austin and A. Boyd had been elected as president and secretary, and on March 7, 1918, the said contract sued on herein was signed by the plaintiff as party of the second part, and the name of the United Tuna Packers was affixed by John Tweeddale as vice president and by A. Boyd as secretary. That the said persons purporting to act as directors, to wit, said John W. Austin, John Tweeddale, and A. Boyd, passed a resolution, which was entered upon the minutes of said meeting, authorizing the execution of said contract.

"(13) The defendant does not stipulate that during the period between March 3, 1917, and March 12, 1918, it was in existence, or that any business could have been, or was, legally conducted by the defendant, or that any of the meetings purported to be meetings of the directors of said corporation as set out in paragraphs 7 to 12 hereof were actually meetings of the directors of said United Tuna Packers, or that defendant was bound by them. The defendant does stipulate, however, that all of said meetings were duly and regularly called, and that the resignations of the various persons as directors, and the election of the various persons as directors to fill the vacancies created as set out in paragraphs 7 to 12, were in conformity with the articles of incorporation and by-laws of the defendant, and were in all respects due and regular in form and substance, except as the said meetings and the resignations of purported directors, and election of other purported directors, may have been affected or entirely nullified by the failure to pay said annual license tax as hereinbefore recited, and the action of the secretary of state thereon; the defendant claiming that each and all of the meetings hereinbefore recited were absolutely void and were without legal force or effect, and that during the interval between March 3, 1917, and March 12, 1918, there were no directors of said corporation capable of either resigning or acting at all, and that any purported act of any person in carrying on business for said corporation was without legal force or effect whatever, and that defendant had no legal existence whatsoever during the period from March 3, 1917, to March 12, 1918.

"(14) That during the year 1917 the business of the United Tuna Packers was carried on in the name of said United Tuna Packers by its purported officers and directors, elected as officers in the way and manner hereinbefore recited.

"(15) That at the time of the execution of the instrument sued on, and claimed by the plaintiff to be a contract, none of the persons executing the same, or who were then connected with or had any interest in defendant corporation, had any actual knowledge or notice that the charter of the defendant the United Tuna Packers had been forfeited, or the license tax for 1917 had not been paid, and all the persons then purporting to act as directors of said corporation, and as officers thereof, as well as the said plaintiff herein, acted upon the belief and assumption that the said corporation was lawfully existing, and that the persons then purporting to act as its directors were duly, regularly, and lawfully acting as its directors. That neither the plaintiff, nor said Ward, A. L. Abrahams, John W. Austin, Samuel D. Weil, John Tweeddale, or A. Boyd, on or prior to March 7, 1918, had any actual knowledge or notice that said license tax for 1917 had not been paid. That since the issuance of the certificate of revivor, and the receipt thereof by the defendant, the said defendant has not recognized in any manner the said contract as its act or deed, nor has it done anything to ratify said contract, and when the plaintiff demanded performance by it of said contract it repudiated the same, and plaintiff does not claim any estoppel against the defendant by reason of any act or thing done by it subsequent to the issuance and receipt of the said certificate of revivor.

"(16) That prior to the time the annual license tax due for the year 1918 became delinquent the said persons acting as directors of said corporation, to wit, A. L. Abrahams, C. E. Van Landingham, and said Ward, caused the full amount of money due for the license tax for the year 1918 to be duly and regularly forwarded to the proper officers of the state of California for the payment of said tax. That after the execution of the said instrument set out and attached to the complaint as Exhibit A, the money so tendered as a license tax was returned to A. L. Abrahams, with the statement that the charter of said company had been forfeited for the failure to pay the license tax for the year 1917, and thereafter the said persons then acting as directors of the United Tuna Packers caused all necessary steps to be taken to have the said charter revived as stated in the next paragraph.

"(17) That, upon learning that the said license tax had not been paid for the year 1917, the said A. Boyd, John W. Austin, and John Tweeddale caused all the persons who composed the board of directors of said defendant on the 3d of March, 1917, to wit, said A. D. Pearce, W. Von Bergen, F. H. Johnson, Bertha V. Johnson, and Arthur J. Abbott, to sign the necessary application to have the said franchise revived, and the said A. Boyd, John W. Austin, and John Tweeddale caused to be forwarded with the said application the necessary and sufficient money to the secretary of state to revive the charter of said corporation, and on the 12th of March, 1918, a certificate of revivor was duly issued by the controller of the state of California, and said defendant ever since has been, and now is, existing and doing business under the laws of the state of California, and all annual license taxes thereafter have been duly and regularly paid.

"(18) That, upon the said certificate of revivor being received, the said A. Boyd, John W. Austin, and John Tweeddale caused the meeting to be held on the 13th day of March, 1918, by the said persons who had been directors on the 3d of March, 1917, to wit, A. D. Pearce, W. Von Bergen, F. H. Johnson, Bertha V. Johnson, and Arthur J. Abbott, and at said meeting each of said persons successively tendered his or her resignation as a director, and, as each resignation was accepted, first the said John W. Austin, then John Tweeddale, then A. Boyd, were elected directors of said corporation, and thereafter the said business of said corporation has been duly and regularly conducted and carried on by said directors.

"(19) That there was no change or sale of any of the capital stock of said defendant corporation during the interim between the said 7th of March, 1918, when said plaintiff transferred all his stock and interest to said John W. Austin and A. Boyd, and the said 13th of March, 1918, when the said John W. Austin, John Tweeddale, and A. Boyd were elected directors as hereinbefore recited.

"(20) Between the 1st day of April, 1918, and the commencement of this action, there was packed by said defendant canned fish and fish products to the value of $305,576.40, and that of the fish and fish products canned $109,955.50 was the value of standard tuna.

"(21) That neither the government of the United States of America, nor any duly authorized agent of said government, has confiscated or commandeered, or otherwise taken, the fish or fish products mentioned, but the same have been sold by the defendant through agents other than plaintiff in the open market or are in the hands of the defendant in marketable condition.

"(22) That the plaintiff has demanded performance of said purported contract, but that defendant, believing and relying upon the defense that the nonpayment of said annual license tax rendered said contract not its act or deed, refused to carry out the same, and has delivered and sold its said fish and fish products through other brokers.

"(23) That there was a market for all the canned fish and fish products of said defendant canned between the 1st day of April, 1918, and the commencement of this action, and that the same could have been sold by said C. E. Van Landingham, if delivered to him, for the value of said fish and fish products as set out in paragraph 20. That the cost and expense to said plaintiff of selling the said product would have been $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the entire value of the fish and fish products canned by said defendant, and that said plaintiff would have realized a net profit of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on \$109,955.50 of tuna canned by defendant, and of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the balance of the fish and fish products canned by defendant.

"(24) It is expressly understood and agreed that the agreed cost, to the plaintiff for marketing the said fish of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is without prejudice to any other suit by plaintiff against the defendant for any loss of profits occurring after the commencement of this suit, and that, should plaintiff bring any subsequent suit for loss of profits or damages sustained subsequent to the bringing of this action, the stipulation contained herein of a cost of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to the plaintiff for selling said fish and fish products shall not be admissible in said action for or against either party.

"(25) The defendant further stipulates that it has no defense to this action, except its contention that the nonpayment of the license tax for 1917, as hereinbefore recited, rendered the defendant incapable of making any contract whatever until after the issuance of the certificate of revivor, and that solely because of the failure to pay the said tax and the action of the secretary of state thereupon as hereinbefore set out, and not otherwise, this defendant did not exist at the time of the execution of said contract, and said A. L. Abrahams, Ward, John Tweeddale, John W. Austin, C. E. Van Landingham, and A. Boyd were not, at any of the times referred to in paragraphs 7 to 12 hereof, elected directors of said corporation, and that solely because of the failure to pay said license tax and the action of the secretary of state thereupon, as hereinbefore recited, and not otherwise, the said election of said A. L. Abrahams, John W. Austin, John Tweeddale, and A. Boyd was utterly void, and that at the time of the execution of the agreement sued on herein said John W. Austin, John Tweeddale, and A. Boyd were not directors of said corporation, or officers thereof, and that the act of said John Tweeddale and A. Boyd in signing said contract as vice president and secretary of said corporation was not the act or deed of the said corporation, nor was the act of the purported directors in authorizing said contract the act of said corporation, and the contract was not the act or deed of said corporation.

"(26) No recitals of the defense relied on by the defendant in the foregoing paragraph, or in any other paragraph of this stipulation of facts, shall be deemed or construed as any admission or concession by the plaintiff herein that the said contract was not the contract of said defendant, or that it was incapable of making or executing a contract, or that it was not bound by the acts of the persons who, as herein recited, purported to act as directors and officers of said corporation, or that the meetings hereinbefore set forth were not directors' meetings of said corporation."

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court rendered its judgment in the defendant's favor, that the plaintiff take nothing by his action. It is from such judgment that the present appeal has been taken.

[1] The sole question presented upon this appeal is as to the validity of said contract between the parties hereto, in view of the fact that it was purported to have been made and entered into on the part of said defendant at a time when its charter as a corporation was in a state of forfeiture for the nonpayment of its license tax, due January 1, 1917, under the provisions of the act of the Legislature entitled "An act prescribing terms and conditions upon which corporations may transact business in this state, and providing penalties and forfeitures for noncompliance," approved May 10, 1915. Stats. 1915, p. 422. This act was amended and practically re-framed by an act of the Legislature approved on May 11, 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 371), which amendatory act contains certain changes in verbiage from the former act, hereafter to be noted. It is the contention of the appellant herein that, notwithstanding the forfeiture of the charter and suspension of the powers of said corporation under either or both of these acts, it continued to act and function as a corporation de facto subsequent thereto and as shown by the stipulated facts herein, and that in the capacity of such de facto corporation it made and entered into the contract in question, and that such contract was and is valid as the act and contract of such defendant corporation.

The question thus presented is this: Can a de jure corporation, whose charter has been forfeited, and whose powers and functions have been suspended under either or both of the foregoing acts of the Legislature, continue to function as a de facto corporation, so as to give validity to its acts and contracts entered into during the period of its forfeited charter and suspended powers? We are of the opinion that this question must be answered in the negative. The act of the Legislature of 1915 states in its title that its purpose is that of "prescribing terms and conditions upon which corporations may transact business in this state." It provides in section 3 of said act that:

"No corporation heretofore or hereafter incorporated under the laws of this state, or any other state, territory, or foreign country, shall do or attempt to do any intrastate business within this state by virtue of its charter, or certificate of incorporation, without a state license therefor."

By section 4 of the act it is made the duty of every such corporation "to procure annually from the secretary of state a license authorizing the transaction of such business in this state, and pay therefor the license tax prescribed herein." The act then proceeds to fix the basis upon which the said corporate licenses shall be computed and then provides that:

"Said license tax shall be due and payable to the secretary of state on the first day of January of each and every year. Such license tax shall be paid on or before the hours of six o'clock p. m. on the first Monday of February of each year and if not so paid shall at said hour become delinquent."

By section 7 of said act it is provided that:

"Sec. 7. At the hour of six o'clock p. m. of the Saturday preceding the first Monday in March of each year the charters of all corporations organized under the laws of this state and which have failed to pay the license tax and penalty prescribed by section four of this act shall be forfeited to the state of California, and the right of all foreign corporations to do intrastate business in this state, which have failed to pay said license tax and penalties shall be likewise forfeited."

Section 12 of said act provides:

"Sec. 12. It shall be unlawful for any corporation, either domestic or foreign, which has not paid the license tax, as in this act prescribed, to exercise the powers of such corporation, or to transact any intrastate business in this state, after six o'clock p. m. of the Saturday preceding the first Monday in March next following the delinquency. Each and every person who exercises any of the powers of a corporation which has forfeited its charter or right to do intrastate business in this state, or who transacts any business for or in behalf of such corporation, after such forfeiture, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than fifty days or more than five hundred days, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

By section 13 of said act it is provided:

"Sec. 13. In all cases of forfeiture under the provisions of this act, the directors or managers in office of the affairs of any domestic corporation, whose charter may be so forfeited, or of any foreign corporation whose right to do business in this state may be so forfeited, are deemed to be trustees of the corporation and stockholders or members of the corporation whose power or right to do business is forfeited and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation and to maintain or defend any action or proceeding then pending in behalf of or against any of said corporations, or to take such legal proceedings as may be necessary to fully settle the affairs of said corporation, and such directors or managers, as such trustees, may be sued in any of the courts of this state by any person having a claim against any of said corporations."

In section 14 of said act the manner is provided by which a corporation which has suffered the forfeiture prescribed in the act may be restored to its former corporate status and have reissued to it a license entitling it to do intrastate business in this state. This section contains the following proviso:

"Provided, however, that no corporation organized under the laws of this state which suffers * * * forfeiture shall be relieved from the effect thereof, nor shall such license be issued, in the event that subsequent to the date of forfeiture its corporate name, or a name so closely resembling said name as will tend to deceive, has been adopted and is in use by another domestic corporation."

The foregoing provisions of the act of 1915 were re-enacted in substance from the act of 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 493), which act has been repealed in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 680). This court has had occasion in several recent cases to discuss the foregoing features of this and the earlier act, and their effect upon the existence and powers of corporations, which have suffered the forfeiture of their charters under its terms. In the case of Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 89 Pac. 335, this court held that a corporation which had been dissolved under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the voluntary dissolution of corporations had its existence so far terminated as a legal entity as to render it incapable of suing or being sued as a corporate body or in its corporate name. The court says (150 Cal. 580, 89 Pac. 337):

"It is dead, and can no more be proceeded against as an existing corporation than could a natural person after his death. There is no one who can appear or act for it, and all actions pending against it are abated, and any judgment attempted to be given against it is void. As to this, all the text-writers agree, and their statement is supported by an overwhelming weight of authority"—citing many cases.

In the case of Newhall v. Western Zinc Mining Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 Pac. 1040, an action had been brought against the defendant corporation for goods sold and delivered. The defendant appeared and answered as a corporation, its answer being verified by one of its directors. The answer admitted, but failed to deny, the corporate capacity of the defendant. The action was tried upon the pleadings as thus framed, and a judgment rendered against the corporation for a considerable sum of money. Thereafter a stockholder of the corporation appeared and moved to set aside such judgment, upon the ground that prior to the commencement of said action the charter of the corporation had been forfeited under the act of 1905 by its failure to pay its license tax, which motion being denied, he appealed to this court, which decided that the motion should have been granted, holding, upon the authority of Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., supra, that a corporation whose existence has been terminated, whether by judicial decree or by forfeiture of its charter under the act of 1905, cannot be sued and cannot exercise any corporate powers. The court says:

"For that act clearly and unmistakably declares and provides for a forfeiture not dependent upon judicial determination and decree, but a forfeiture which is self-acting and operating. The language of the act does not even permit a doubt upon this question. It not only declares the day and the hour when the forfeiture shall arise, but it makes it a penal offense for any officer or agent thereafter to exercise any corporate powers on behalf of the corporation, and, finally, it provides that the winding up of the corporate affairs is imposed upon the directors or managers of the corporation who 'are deemed to be trustees of the corporation * * * whose power or right to do business is forfeited.' These trustees, and not the corporation, may sue or 'may be sued in any of the courts of this state by any person having a claim against said corporation.'"

In that case it was argued that the corporation, having acted as such defending the action, was estopped and hence its stockholders were also estopped from setting up its nonexistence in an attack upon the judgment. But the court said:

"To this it must be replied that the law authorizes the directors, and not one of them, to act as trustees. It empowers them as trustees to sue and be sued, but not to answer suits in the name of the defunct corporation. Brangier's answer was therefore, not only without authority of law, but in direct violation of the law. And finally, if, notwithstanding these plain violations of the law, assent be given to the statement of respondent that 'the business of the Western Zinc & Mining Corporation was continued by defending this suit in its name,' it must inevitably result that the trustee who thus did continue the business of the Western Zinc Mining Company, not only did so in violation of his powers and of the express mandate of the statute, but made himself criminally liable for his conduct, under section 9 of the amended act." 164 Cal. 383, 384, 128 Pac. 1041.

This subject again came before this court in the case of Aalwyn's Law Institute v. Martin, 173 Cal. 21, 159 Pac. 158. The plaintiff, alleging itself to have been a stockholder in the Ocean Shore Railway Company, a corporation, prior to the forfeiture of its charter under the act of 1905, sought, on behalf of said corporation, to have the title to certain of its property quieted as against certain persons who were formerly its directors, but who had become trustees of the defunct corporation upon the forfeiture of its charter. This court denied the plaintiff that relief, holding that:

"When a corporation has failed to pay its license tax, and a forfeiture of its charter has been declared, it ceases to be a corporation. Newhall v. Western Zinc Mining Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 Pac. 1040. The title to the property formerly owned by the corporation vests in the former directors as trustees. The complaint in the case at bar does not seek to have the title of the trustees quieted, but, on the contrary, asks that the title of the Ocean Shore Railway Company be quieted, and the whole action is based upon the alleged ownership of the property by the said company. But the company is dead and may not own property. Even if we concede the plaintiff's capacity to sue, it is seeking relief upon a false theory, and a general demurrer to its complaint will lie."

In the case of Rossi v. Caire, 174 Cal. 74, 161 Pac. 1161, the question of the effect of the forfeiture of the charter of a corporation under the act of 1905, and also under the amendment thereto in 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 746), upon the ownership and administration of its property, came up for consideration, this court holding that the corporation having ceased to exist under the provisions of said acts it was no longer capable of holding the title or possession of its former property, which thereafter belonged to the persons who were its stockholders at the time it ceased to be a corporation. In the later case of Rossi v. Caire (Cal. Sup.) 199 Pac. 1042, the court went somewhat more fully into the question of the status of a corporation which had suffered the forfeiture of its charter under the act of 1905 and the acts amendatory thereto, and in so doing said:

"The status of a corporation whose charter is forfeited under the License Tax Act referred to is well settled by decisions of this court. The penalty imposed by the act for nonpayment of the license tax prescribed was exceedingly severe, and the consequence doubtless often disastrous. But in view of our constitutional provisions the absolute power of the state over corporation charters was such, and the intention of the act to accomplish this end was so clearly and unambiguously shown thereby that there could not be any well-founded difference of opinion as to the result. The Governor's proclamation having been duly made, and the corporation having failed to pay within the specified time thereafter, the corporation simply ceased to exist, just exactly as in the case of a forfeiture for cause by judicial decree, without any existing provision of law for rehabilitation as a corporation."

In the case of National Supply Co. v. Flack, 183 Cal. 124, 190 Pac. 634, the status of corporations which had failed to pay their license tax under the act of 1915 arose, and this court, citing as authority therefor the foregoing cases, held that the failure to pay a license tax ipso facto terminated the corporate existence, and that a judgment rendered against a corporation after the forfeiture of its charter was void.

Thus far in the foregoing line of decisions the court has been dealing with the status of corporations under the act of 1905 and the several acts amendatory thereto, and in the latter case applied the same doctrine to the status of corporations whose charters had been forfeited under the act of 1915. The United Tuna Packers Corporation, defendant herein, had, as we have seen, suffered the forfeiture of its charter in March, 1917, and under the terms of this later act.

Thereafter, and during the year or more which followed, according to the agreed statement of facts and findings of the trial court, the persons who had formerly constituted its board of directors undertook to continue to function as such, notwithstanding the forfeiture of the charter of the corporation. In the month of May, 1917, at a purported meeting of said board of directors of said defunct corporation, by successive resignations and elections, the entire membership of said board of directors was changed, all of its former members resigning, and in their place and stead three other persons being elected directors of the corporation, and two vacancies being left unfilled. These acts were done prior to the adoption of the act of the Legislature of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 371), which effected certain changes in the act of 1915, the effect of which will be hereinafter considered. These attempted changes in the personnel of the board of directors of the defunct corporation were therefore done, or attempted to be done, while the corporation was, as to its status, in the condition described by the language of the decisions of this court above quoted. Subsequent to the taking effect of the act of 1917, above referred to, it was these persons, together with two others who had been added to their number by the same method of election, who assumed as directors of said corporation to enter into and execute the contract with the plaintiff, which forms the basis of this action. The question has arisen in the case as to the effect of the enactment of certain provisions of the act of 1917, which, while it purports to be an amendment, amounts to a revision, of the act of 1915, upon the status of this corporation at the date of said contract. Under section 7 of the act of 1915 the charters of all corporations which failed to pay their license tax were declared to be "forfeited to the state of California." Under section 11 of the act of 1917 it was declared that:

"The corporate rights, privileges and powers of every domestic corporation which has failed to pay," etc., "shall * * * be suspended and incapable of being exercised for any purpose or in any manner" (except for certain limited purposes).

The act further declares that after such suspension "every person who attempts or purports to exercise any of the rights, privileges or powers of any delinquent domestic corporation except as permitted by this act, or, who transacts or attempts to transact any intrastate business in this state in behalf of any forfeited foreign corporation, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor," and further provides that "every contract made in violation of this section is hereby declared to be void." There is some discussion in the briefs of counsel herein as to the effect of the foregoing changes in the verbiage of the law affected by the adoption of the act of 1917, but in view of our conclusions herein we do not think these verbal changes in the law material to the matter in controversy here, particularly in view of what was said by this court in the case of Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 205 Pac. 446, wherein these changes in the language of the law were noted and discussed. In that case the suspension of the powers of the corporation had occurred under the act of 1917 and the court significantly says:

"During the time its taxes were unpaid, petitioner was shorn of all rights save those expressly reserved by the statutes. The right to institute or maintain actions is not included in this reservation, but is denied to corporations as a part of the penalty."

And the court further declares:

"Furthermore, we are of the opinion that the subsequent revival of the corporate rights, powers, and privileges did not have the effect of validating the acts attempted during the period of suspension. The revival is not made retroactive by the statute. The suspension of the rights, powers, and privileges is a disability imposed on a corporation as a penalty, and it would tend to deprive the statute of its force and encourage a corporation in default to postpone payment of its taxes indefinitely, if it were held that, by subsequent payment of the delinquent taxes, all the benefits of the attempted acts denied to the corporation could be secured. That it was not intended that the acts, during the time of the suspension, should have any effect whatever is shown by the fact that both the sections of the Political Code and the Statutes of 1917, above referred to, make the performance of such acts by any person on behalf of the corporation a misdemeanor."

In view of the language of the foregoing decisions of this court, and of the terms of the statute under which the charter of this corporation had been forfeited for the non-payment of its license tax, we are of the opinion that during the period of such forfeiture of its charter said corporation could not become, be, or act as a corporation de facto, so as to permit the execution of or give any validity to the contract upon which the plaintiff herein relies as the basis of this action. The corporation, when it had failed to pay its license tax and the forfeiture of its charter had resulted, ceased to be a corporation. It was dead. It had no longer a board of directors, or other body of officers or agents. The persons who had been its directors prior to its decease ceased to be such, and became the trustees of an express trust, with such powers only as were expressly conferred by the statute declaring the forfeiture of its charter, but with no power to select, appoint, or authorize others to take their places or perform their duty as such trustees. Under the express terms of the statute it was declared to be unlawful for such a defunct corporation to transact any intrastate business whatever, and every attempt of any of its former officers to exercise any of the former powers of the corporation, or to transact any such business for or on behalf of such corporation, after and during the period of such forfeiture of its charter was made a misdemeanor. Under the terms of the statute of 1915, the contracts of such a corporation were not expressly declared to be void; but such we think was the effect of the language of the statute making them unlawful. However, under the statute of 1917, section 11, the omission to expressly so declare was supplied by the express statement that "every contract made in violation of this section is hereby declared to be void."

It is to be noted that the contract upon which the appellant herein counts and relies was entered into after the statute of 1917 had come into effect, and that it was attempted to be made and entered into on behalf of such defunct corporation by a set of persons who were not its directors at the time of its demise, but who had attempted to be made such by the members of its former board of directors, whose powers to act as such had ceased, and who at the time of such purported change possessed only the limited powers of trustees of an express trust under the terms of the statute in which the power to choose others to administer their trust was not embraced. To hold that such a corporation could, after its death, after it had ceased to have officers, directors, agents, or attorneys, after it had been stripped of all its property, after it had become incapable of suing or being sued or of having judgments obtained against it, after its every attempted act in the way of the transaction of any intrastate business had been expressly made unlawful, and after those of its former officers or agents who attempted to do or transact any act of business on its behalf during the period of such forfeiture of its charter had been declared guilty of crime, still function as a corporation de facto, would be to practically nullify both the language and intent of the statute under which the forfeiture of its charter and powers had been declared, and would be, in effect, to cast upon the state the burden of instituting judicial proceedings in the nature of quo warranto against every such corporation to have decreed the forfeiture which the statute had itself expressly declared.

The appellant herein, however, cites section 358 of the Civil Code as supporting his contention, and also strongly relies upon the cases of McCann v. Children's Home Society, 176 Cal. 359, 168 Pac. 355, and First National Bank, etc., v. Pennig, 28 Cal. App. 267, 151 Pac. 1153, as sustaining his claim that the respondent, having continued to act as a corporation after the forfeiture of its charter, and having entered into this contract while purporting so to act, is estopped to deny its corporate existence and powers in this action. He also cites cases from other jurisdictions to the same effect. It is to be noted that the cases upon which the appellant relies are in no instance cases in which the acts of the corporation relied upon to sustain its de facto status in relation to the particular transaction sued upon were acts done or attempted to be done, or powers exercised or sought to be exercised, in express violation of law. They are, without exception, cases where, through some defect or oversight in attempting to organize or continue to do business as a corporation de jure, the institution had nevertheless in good faith assumed to act as such in entering into the particular transaction. Such a state of things is well illustrated by the case of McCann v. Children's Home Society, supra, in which, manifestly, the institution purporting to act as a corporation was violating no express statute in so doing, but was merely assuming to do de facto and in good faith that which it could have done de jure, but for the defect in its attempted organization or exercise of corporate powers. But that is not this case, since the law has expressly declared that a corporation, the charter of which has been forfeited under the terms of the statute in relation to the payment of license fees cannot do any act either de jure or de facto, and that any attempt whatever so to do is unlawful, and that those of its former officers or agents making such attempt shall be guilty of a crime.

[2] As to section 358 of the Civil Code it must be held to have application only to such corporations as are not forbidden by positive law to do business as de facto corporations, and cannot be given application to the attempted acts of corporations whose charters have been forfeited, and whose acts thereafter have been expressly made unlawful by the terms of the statute declaring such forfeiture.

The judgment is affirmed.

On Application for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [3] The application for a rehearing is denied. While the facts in relation to the forfeiture of the corporate charter were actually unknown to all the parties concerned, the means of knowledge thereof were equally available to all. It further appears that the plaintiff did not expend any money or services or change his situation in any respect in reliance upon the contract, and that the defendant has not received and retained any benefit accruing therefrom. There is, therefore, no basis here for the application of the equitable doctrine of estoppel.

Counties 150(2)—Repayment of illegal tax not contract obligation incurred in excess of constitutional limitation.

The obligation of a county to repay an illegal tax paid under protest is an obligation imposed by law, and not one implied in fact, so that an application for mandamus to compel the levy of a tax to pay a judgment for the refund of the illegal tax does not seek to compel the county to incur an indebtedness exceeding its income, contrary to Const. art. 11, § 18.

Application for mandamus by Oscar Heyman & Bro. a corporation, against Edwin C. Bath and others, to compel the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco to levy and collect a tax sufficient to pay a judgment for taxes paid under protest. Writ granted.

Jacob Samuels and Joseph H. Mayer, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

George Lull, City Atty., and Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. This is an original proceeding in mandamus to require the respondents, as members of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, to take the appropriate proceedings for the levy and collection of a tax sufficient to pay a judgment which the petitioner holds against the said city and county. The judgment involved the legality of a tax previously assessed and paid by petitioner under protest. It was a final determination of the illegality of the tax and of the obligation of the city to make repayment.

In this proceeding the respondents filed a general demurrer, and in argument rely upon the provisions of section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution, which provides that "no county * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year. * * *". It is said that by judicial decisions this section has been interpreted as applying only to actions ex contractu, and not to actions ex delicto, or to obligations directly imposed by statute, such as salaries of public officers. In support of the position that the obligation to pay taxes illegally collected comes within the terms of the section, respondents argue that this obligation is one based upon an implied contract, because, the taxpayer having been given the option to either pay under protest or to suffer seizure, the payment must be deemed to be a voluntary one.

We are satisfied that the payment of the tax involved here was involuntary, and that the judgment is evidence of an obligation imposed by law, rather than one implied in fact. Such being the case, the city is not asked to "incur" an indebtedness in excess of its income and revenue, but is asked to provide the necessary income and revenue sufficient to meet an indebtedness imposed upon it by law. All other points urged were determined in Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Deasy, 41 Cal. App. 667, 183 Pac. 243.

Brokers $\Leftrightarrow$ 65(1)—Consideration for agreement to pay commissions held to have failed, because of broker's fraud.

There is failure of consideration for contract of landowner to pay a broker commissions for selling the land preventing recovery thereon, the broker having induced the owner to make the sale by false and fraudulent representations as to the financial ability of the purchasers to make payments and perform the conditions of their contract, as to all of which they failed.

Action by J. W. Henderson against the Vernalis Farming Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Henderson, of Eureka, and Fabian D. Brown, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. G. Irving, of Riverside, and Philip C. Boardman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Action to recover commissions under a contract between plaintiff's assignor, one W. C. Walker, and defendant. Judgment went for defendant in the trial court, and plaintiff appeals.

The contract, which is made a part of the answer, provides as follows:

"Whereas, said Vernalis Farming Company has agreed with said Walker that upon the sale by said Walker, or through his efforts, of a certain tract of farming land belonging to said Vernalis Farming Company to F. M. Cale and Theodore Schieve, the said Vernalis Farming Company will pay said Walker a commission of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per centum upon the purchase price of said land, which $2\frac{1}{2}$ per centum amounts to fifty-four hundred and sixty (\$5,460) dollars, and a like commission of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per centum, amounting to fifty-four hundred and sixty (\$5,460) dollars, to Estelle Nelson Avery, it is hereby agreed that, in the event that such sale shall be concluded, the said Vernalis Farming Company will pay said commission to said Walker, as follows: \$460.00 thereof in the promissory note of said Vernalis Farming Company, payable six months after date, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum; and \$5,000 thereof in one year from the date of such sale to said Cale and Schieve, with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum, provided said Cale and Schieve shall within said period of one year pay to said Vernalis Farming Company the sum of \$60,000 on account of said purchase price. If, however, said Cale and Schieve shall default in said payment of \$60,000, and by reason of such default said Vernalis Farming Company shall take those certain pieces of real estate which have been conveyed to it by said Cale and Schieve as security for the payment of said first installment of \$60,000, then and in that event, and in lieu of the said cash commission to said Walker, the said Vernalis Farming Company will convey to said Walker an undivided one-half interest in that certain real estate situate in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on the corner of Fourth avenue and Hugo street, more fully described in the deed of said Cale and Schieve to Vernalis Farming Company, said property to be subject to the mortgage now existing thereon, and said Walker will return to said Vernalis Farming Company said sum of \$460, with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum."

On the same day that this contract was executed (July 30, 1913) Cale and Schieve entered into a written agreement with defendant for the purchase of the property described in the commission agreement. By its terms Cale and Schieve agreed to pay for the property $218,400 in the following manner: $60,000 within one year from the signing of the contract, with interest on the whole amount of the purchase price from the date of the contract at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum net, interest to be payable semi-annually; one-half of all moneys emanating from any contract sales of said lands, and any advance payments made by the prospective purchasers of said lands during said year; $60,000 annually thereafter, and interest on the remaining unpaid portions of said purchase price; and one-half of all moneys from land sales as above mentioned, until the principal sum of $218,400 and interest shall be fully paid and satisfied. In addition they agreed, at their own cost and expense, within 6 months from the date of the contract, to commence the actual reconstruction of the broken levee on said premises, and to complete the reconstruction of the levee system on the river side of said property and place the property in a watertight condition within one year from date thereof; also that they would, within 6 months from date thereof, at their own cost and expense, install and complete a second pumping plant in addition to the one then on said premises, and lay main and lateral pipe lines of sufficient capacity and extent to cover all portions of said land not then covered by the existing irrigation system. The contract provided that Cale and Schieve should have immediate possession of the land, and the right at their own cost and expense to farm and cultivate the same during the continuance of the contract; that they would pay all taxes and assessments that might thereafter be levied against said property; also that they would pay the Pacific Gas & Electric Company all sums of money thereafter to become due under the provisions of a power contract between defendant and that company, obligating defendant to pay a minimum charge for power of $1,200 per annum. Cale and Schieve were given the right to negotiate sales by contract or otherwise of such parts or portions of said land as defendant might designate, 50 per cent. of all moneys arising in any manner from such contract sales to be immediately paid over to defendant. The contract then provided:

"And as security for the performance of all the conditions and terms of this agreement, the parties of the first part [Cale and Schieve] agree that, within 18 days from the date hereof, they will cause to be executed deeds of conveyance of the property hereinafter described in which the party of the second part herein [defendant] shall be named as grantee, said deeds being sufficient to convey the title in fee, subject to existing incumbrances, and will place said deeds in escrow with the Mercantile Trust Company, of the city of San Francisco, with escrow instructions to said trust company to hold said deeds during the lifetime of this contract, and, if default be made in any of the terms of this contract by the parties of the first part, then and in that event to deliver said deeds to the party of the second part, as fixed, settled, and liquidated damages for the breach of this obligation. The equities in the lots or pieces of property hereby agreed to be so conveyed are of the value of eighty-one thousand dollars ($81,000) over and above incumbrances, and, should their valuation fall below that amount when appraised under direction of the second party, the first party agrees to deed additional property to bring the valuation up to said $81,000. [Here followed a description of the properties referred to, including the Hugo street property, together with the amount of the income, if any, derived therefrom, the owner's valuation, the amount of the incumbrance thereon, and the owner's equity therein.] And upon final payment being made covering the full purchase price of the said 2,730 acres, together with all accrued interest thereon, the said party of the second part agrees to execute a good and sufficient deed of conveyance in favor of the parties of the first part, covering the above-described 2,730 acres, more or less. Time is of the essence of this contract, and in the event of a default in any of the terms and conditions hereof by the parties of the first part this contract shall cease and determine, and in addition to the delivery of the escrow deeds hereinbefore provided for as liquidated damages, the parties of the second part shall retain for their own use and benefit all pumping plants, pipe lines, improvements, and works and structures of every kind and character which may have been placed upon said premises by the parties of the first part, and all contracts of sale made in respect to said 2,730 acres, or any part thereof, shall be freed and discharged of and from any and all claims of the said parties of the first part, or either of them, and the parties of the first part will immediately vacate and surrender the possession of all the premises described in this agreement to the party of the second part. The said party of the second part shall be allowed fifteen (15) days from the date hereof in which to complete the examination and appraisal of the properties herein described, as owned by the parties of the first part."

Cale and Schieve executed and deposited with the Mercantile Trust Company the deeds provided by the agreement to be escrowed as security for its performance on their part. They then took possession of the Vernalis ranch in pursuance of the terms of the agreement, and remained in possession for about a year, but failed to further perform its terms. While so in possession they defaulted in the payment of the interest which became due January 30, 1914, 6 months from the date of the contract, and also in other particulars which they had agreed to perform within 6 months from its date—the completion of a second pumping plant, etc. About February 7, 1914, defendant notified Cale and Schieve that they had forfeited their right to the property because of such default and demanded immediate possession. They, however, continued in possession for several months thereafter, but failed to repair the broken levee or to pay the taxes, the bills of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. for electricity furnished to the ranch, or the first installment of $60,000 on the purchase price, or to do any of the things which they had agreed to do other than as above stated. Pursuant to its escrow instructions, and in accordance with the provisions of the sale contract, about February 15, 1914, the Mercantile Trust Company delivered to defendant the deeds escrowed with them as security for performance by Cale and Schieve. The trial court found as a conclusion of law that the covenant referred to in the sale contract provided for a penalty and was void. About March 5, 1914, defendant, for the purpose of satisfying the terms of the commission contract, offered to deliver to plaintiff's assignor a deed running from the former to the latter and purporting to convey a one-half interest in the Hugo street property, which was refused on the ground that it was insufficient to convey title. April 3, 1914, Cale and Schieve brought suit against defendant herein to compel it to reconvey these properties to them. July 22, 1914, the owner of one of the incumbrances on the Hugo street property commenced foreclosure proceedings, making defendant herein, Cale Schieve, and others defendants in that action. On or about September 1, 1915, defendant voluntarily deeded all the property referred to which it had received from Cale and Schieve, including the Hugo street property, to the nominee of Cale and Schieve, and neither of the actions mentioned were ever prosecuted to judgment.

Respondent's theory, and the theory upon which, from the findings, it appears the trial court rendered judgment in its favor, is that appellant's assignor (Walker) induced defendant, by means of false and fraudulent representations as to the financial ability of the prospective purchasers, to enter into the contract of sale, and that by reason of the default of the purchasers in carrying out its terms there was a total failure of consideration for the commission contract, and that, assuming that appellant's assignor was entitled to the commission provided in the contract, this obligation was discharged by respondent's offer to deliver to Walker a deed of an undivided one-half of the Hugo street property. The trial court found:

"The said W. C. Walker, plaintiff's predecessor in interest, prior to the 30th day of July, 1913, and for the purpose of inducing the defendant herein to enter into the said agreement of sale with the said Cale and Schieve, represented to the said defendant that the said F. M. Cale and the said Theo. Schieve were men of large financial means, and were amply able to make the payments in said agreement of sale on their part to be made, and to perform all the other conditions and covenants therein contained and on their part to be performed. The said defendant, believing said representation and relying thereon, was induced thereby to make and enter into said agreement of sale with the said Cale and Schieve. In truth and in fact the said Cale and Schieve were not at the time said representations were made by the said Walker, and were not at any time thereafter, financially able, and had not at any time whatsoever the financial means, or any means whatsoever, sufficient to enable them to make the payments required to be made by them in accordance with the provisions of said agreement of sale, which fact was at all times, and at the time said representations were made, well known to the said W. C. Walker. Had it not been for said false and fraudulent representations of said W. C. Walker, the said defendant would not have entered into the said agreement of sale with said Cale and Schieve. The said defendant received no consideration whatsoever for the execution of said commission contract."

There is no doubt that plaintiff's assignor made the representations found, and there is some evidence to support the finding that they were false and fraudulent. This supports the conclusion of the trial court that the sale contract was void, because procured by fraud. From this follows the finding of failure of consideration for the commission contract, all of which precludes recovery by appellant.

Judgment affirmed.

Action by F. R. Noyes against the Vernalis Farming Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Henderson, of Eureka, and Fabian D. Brown, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. G. Irving, of Riverside, and Philip C. Boardman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Judgment in this action was rendered in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff sued as assignee of Estelle Nelson Avery for the specific performance of a contract between Estelle Nelson Avery and defendant, dated July 30, 1913, providing as follows:

"Whereas, said Vernalis Farming Company has agreed with W. C. Walker that, upon the sale by said Walker, or through his efforts, of a certain tract of farming land belonging to said Vernalis Farming Company to F. M. Cale and Theodore Schieve, the said Vernalis Farming Company will pay said Walker a commission of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per centum upon the purchase price of said land, which $2\frac{1}{2}$ per centum amounts to fifty-four hundred and sixty (\$5,460) dollars, and a like commission of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per centum, amounting to fifty-four hundred and sixty (\$5,460) dollars, to Estelle Nelson Avery, it is hereby agreed that in the event that such sale shall be concluded, the said Vernalis Farming Company will pay said commission to said Estelle Nelson Avery as follows:" The balance of the agreement is in the exact language of the corresponding portion of the agreement between Walker and defendant, quoted in the decision filed this day in an action by Walker's assignee against this defendant, numbered 4111, and entitled "J. W. Henderson, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. Vernalis Farming Co. (a Corporation), Defendant and Respondent," 208 Pac. 982, except that, where the name Walker appears therein, the name Estelle Nelson Avery is substituted in this agreement.

The parties herein stipulated to facts similar to those set out in the statement of that case, and in addition stipulated that, at the time of the making of the agreement between Cale and Schieve and defendant, the property referred to therein as escrowed by the former as security for their performance of the agreement, was of the clear value of $15,000. The evidence in this case is such that what has been said in the decision in the Henderson Case applies equally here, and for the same reasons there given the judgment is affirmed.

TAYIAN v. YERETZIAN. (Civ. 4189.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 5, 1922.)

1. Set-off and counterclaim §49(3) — Maker entitled to set off agreed value of his services against payee's assignee after maturity.

Where payee of a note agreed to pay maker a stated sum for rendering designated services, which services maker performed, and subsequently payee assigned the note after maturity, maker was entitled to set off against assignee the agreed value, and not merely the reasonable value, of his services.

2. Appeal and error §984(5) — Trial court's allowance of attorney's fees scaled down.

While the action of the trial court in allowing attorney's fees will not ordinarily be reviewed on appeal, where the note sued on was assigned after maturity, plaintiff had notice of defendant's counterclaim, defendant made an effort to adjust the claim, and only a balance of $51 was due, an allowance of $50 as attorney's fees was scaled down to $20.

3. Appeal and error §122(2) — Appellate court cannot supplement findings of trial court.

The appellate court cannot supplement the findings of the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by Harry Tayian against Arsen Yeretzian. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, unless a stipulation is filed for reduction of the judgment as stated.

Arsen Yeretzian, of Fresno, for appellant.
K. Ohanian, of Fresno, for respondent.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. This action is founded upon a promissory note in the sum of $333, executed by appellant to one Lillian, and by him assigned after maturity to the respondent. The appellant admits the execution of the note, and he makes no pretense that he has liquidated it by direct cash payments. He claims, however, that he has certain counterclaims thereto, aggregating nearly the sum due on the note. He brought a suit in the justice's court against said Lillian on these counterclaims, and recovered therein a judgment against him in the sum of $286.50. Lillian thereupon appealed from the judgment of the justice, and it was stipulated that the two actions should be consolidated and tried as one, and that the justice's court proceedings and judgment should be deemed and treated as a sufficient plea based upon said counterclaims.

The findings show that the sum of $333 and an attorney's fee of $50 were due on the promissory note, and that appellant was entitled to a credit of $251 on account of his counterclaims. The court further found that all the alleged items of counterclaim were due, save and except that the reasonable value of the services of appellant in making a trip from Fresno to Modesto was but $25, instead of the sum of $50, claimed by appellant. It is seen that this leaves a balance of $261.50, in which sum the appellant should have credit.

[1] Appellant further claims that he should have been credited with the full sum of $50 for the Modesto trip, in view of the fact that that sum was agreed upon prior to the rendition of the service; also, he insists that the respondent should not receive an attorney's fee of $50. Both these contentions must be sustained. As to the trip to Modesto, the evidence is clear and uncontradicted that Lillian and another were partners; that these partners, through the other, contracted with appellant to make the trip to Modesto, agreeing to pay him $50 for the service; and that upon the dissolution of the partnership Lillian agreed to assume and pay all the partnership debts, one of which was this item of $50. Under this state of facts, the appellant was clearly entitled to credit for the full sum of $50.

[2] As to the attorney's fee of $50 allowed by the court to the respondent for services of his attorney in this suit, it should, under the circumstances of the case, be scaled down to $20. It is true that the action of the trial court in allowing or scaling attorney's fees will not ordinarily be reviewed by a court on appeal, but in this case the note was assigned after maturity, and the attorney for the respondent was informed, weeks before the action was commenced, that the appellant had certain defenses to the note. There is much in the record to suggest that the respondent is merely an assignee for purposes of collection. The respondent is entitled to a balance of but $51.50. He should have brought his action in a justice's court, and before so doing he should have made at least some effort to ascertain the amount due to him. The evidence shows that the appellant made efforts to adjust the differences with the attorney for the respondent, but the matter never reached a conference. Crediting the respondent with the $358 for principal, interest, and attorney's fees, and the appellant with the full amount of his counterclaim, $286.50, there remains a balance in favor of the respondent in the sum of $71.50, in which sum he should have judgment.

[3] The court cannot on appeal supplement the findings of the trial court, and the judgment must accordingly be reversed, unless the respondent shall see fit to remit the excess. If the respondent shall within 30 days file in this court a stipulation to the effect that the judgment may be modified, by reducing the amount thereof to $71.50, the judgment, when thus modified, is affirmed; otherwise, the judgment is reversed. The appellant shall recover his costs on this appeal.

MEYROSE v. PACIFIC ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION et al. (Civ. 3927.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 5, 1922.)

Corporations — §503(3) — Corporation, sued with nonresident individual defendants in county where obligation arose, held not entitled to change of venue.

The joinder with a corporation of individual defendants, who made no demand for a change to the residence of either, and who did not show where they resided, other than that they did not reside in the county where the corporation was sued and where the obligation arose, did not take away the privilege of suing it in that county, pursuant to Const. art. 12, § 16, and the court was not warranted, on the showing made by the individual defendants, in granting a motion for a change to the county wherein corporation's principal place of business was situated.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Replevin by Grover Meyrose against the Pacific Acceptance Corporation and others. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Brownstone & Goodman, of San Francisco, Kaye & Simon, of Bakersfield, and L. E. Nathan, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, of Pasadena, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover possession of an automobile, alleging that defendants wrongfully took the property from his possession on the 4th day of August, 1921, at a place in the county of Kern, and that defendants refused, upon the demand of the plaintiff, to return it to him. There was the usual allegation also that plaintiff was at all times the owner and entitled to the immediate possession of the property. To that complaint a demurrer was filed on behalf of the corporation defendant and defendants Dalton and Russell, which defendants at the same time made written demand for change of place of trial, and gave notice of a motion for an order to transfer the cause from the county of Kern to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The motion was based on the files in the case and an affidavit of the secretary of the defendant corporation. In denying the motion the court made the following order:

"This action came on regularly for hearing of motion for defendants for change of place of trial of cause from the county of Kern to the city and county of San Francisco, and it appearing that the defendant Pacific Acceptance Corporation is a corporation, and has its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, and from an affidavit on file herein that defendants Dalton and Russell do not reside in the county of Kern, it nowhere appearing from affidavit or otherwise in what counties said defendants Dalton and Russell do reside, or that they reside at all within the state of California, it is therefore ordered that said motion for change of venue be and the same is hereby denied."

The defendants hereinbefore named have appealed from the order refusing to change the place of trial.

It was a fact, as recited in the court's order, that the place of residence of the defendants Dalton and Russell was not made to appear. As to these individual defendants the affidavit presented to the court showed only that they were not residents of the county of Kern at the commencement of the action. It did appear by the affidavit that the principal place of business of the corporation defendant was at the city and county of San Francisco. If the matter be considered for the moment as though the corporation had been the only defendant, it is clear enough that the order denying the change of place of trial was proper to be made. The Constitution (section 16, art. 12) provides that a corporation may be sued "where the obligation or liability arises," or in the county where the principal place of business is situated. By the allegations of the complaint it appeared that the obligation of that defendant arose immediately upon its having taken possession of plaintiff's automobile, which act occurred, as alleged, in the county of Kern. Trezevant v. Strong Co., 102 Cal. 47, 36 Pac. 395; Cook v. Ray Manufacturing Co., 159 Cal. 694, 115 Pac. 318.

Appellants insist, however, that because of the joinder of the individual defendants, who were not residents of the county of Kern, the privilege accorded to the plaintiff by the Constitution to bring this action in the county where the obligation arose was taken away, and the cases of Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 56, 39 Pac. 209, Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia & Healdsburg Fruit Cannery Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 Pac. 495, and Sourbis v. Rhodes (Cal. App.) 194 Pac. 521, are cited as sustaining this proposition. Those decisions upon examination will show that the court determined only that the right of individual defendants, resident in a county other than that in which the action was commenced, to have the place of trial changed to the county of their residence (Code Civ.

Proc. § 395), could not be affected by the fact that a corporation had been joined with them as party defendant. The individual defendants in this case made no demand upon the court that it should change the place of trial to the residence of either of them. They made no showing as to where they resided, beyond that they did not reside within the county of Kern. Strassburger v. Santa Fé Land Improvement Co. (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 1065. The defendant corporation could not complain of the order, because of its effect upon the right of the individual defendants, and the showing made by the latter was insufficient, for the reason stated, to warrant the court in granting the motion for the change.

The order is affirmed.

In re PERRY'S ESTATE. (Civ. 4215.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. July 1, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 28, 1922.)

1. Marriage ⚭40(1)—Presumed legal.

Where a marriage has been duly solemnized, there is a strong presumption that it is legal.

2. Marriage ⚭40(5)—Burden of proving invalidity on contestant.

A party claiming that a second marriage of another is void because of a prior marriage has the burden of proving that the prior marriage was not ended before the second marriage.

3. Marriage ⚭50(1)—Evidence held to support finding of desertion by first husband.

In an action contesting the validity of a wife's second marriage on the theory of a prior existing marriage, evidence and divorce decree held to support finding that first husband deserted his wife.

4. Marriage ⚭50(1)—Findings sustaining validity of second marriage supported by evidence of absence of first husband for statutory period.

Where a husband had been absent from his wife for 15 years, a finding of the trial court sustaining the validity of the wife's second marriage, under Civ. Code, § 61, subd. 2, providing that, where a husband or wife is absent and not known to the other spouse to be living for 5 years immediately preceding the second marriage, the latter marriage is valid until adjudicated invalid, held sustained by the evidence, notwithstanding that during the 5 years in question the wife commenced and prosecuted a divorce proceeding, and testimony that first husband visited wife's attorney, and admissions by wife while testifying.

5. Marriage ⚭11—Wife not required to search for long absent husband before marrying again.

Where a husband deserted his wife and remained absent for 15 years, the wife, having no knowledge of his whereabouts, is under no duty to make inquiries and search for him before marrying again.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Frank Perry, deceased. From an order granting letters of administration to Minnie Perry, and an order denying letters of administration to Mary Ella Crabtree, the latter appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. L. Held, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Will Van Dyke and Hale McCowen, Jr., both of Ukiah, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice pro tem. On July 22, 1921, the superior court of Mendocino county made its order appointing the respondent, Minnie Perry, as administratrix of the estate of Frank Perry, deceased, upon the ground and for the reason that she was the surviving widow of said deceased, and by the same order denied the application for letters of administration of Mary Ella Crabtree, a daughter of said deceased by a former marriage. Mary Ella Crabtree has appealed.

On August 27, 1887, the respondent, Minnie Perry, who is the issue of a marriage between a white man and an Indian woman, at the age of 13 years married one Charles Wathen, with whom she lived, in Sierra City, until about November 1, 1888. Wathen at that time left his wife, intending, as he stated, to go to Brown's Valley to pasture some stock, but instead of doing so went to Chico. Failing to return, Mrs. Wathen, about December 1, 1888, left Sierra City and returned to her folks at Covelo, in Round Valley. Before she left, however, she wrote to Wathen, stating where she was going and where he might find her upon his return. Within a few days after receiving that letter Wathen returned to Sierra City, but, finding that his wife had already gone, gathered his belongings and returned to Chico. Wathen and his wife did not thereafter see each other until subsequent to the death of Perry, when Wathen was produced as a witness in this proceeding. Neither did they correspond with each other after their separation, except that Wathen claims he wrote to his wife once or twice within 6 months or a year after their separation.

On October 11, 1903, 15 years subsequent to the date of the desertion of Mrs. Wathen by her husband, she assumed the relation of wife with Perry, and continued to live with him, as his wife, until his death. In September, 1904, while living with Perry, the respondent consulted an attorney concerning her marital status with Wathen, with the result that an action for divorce was commenced by her against Wathen upon the ground of desertion. The summons was served by publication, and on October 22, 1906, respondent obtained an interlocutory judgment of divorce. Respondent claims that a year later, in November, 1907, her attorney exhibited to her a document which she understood was the final judgment of divorce, and said:

"You and Frank (meaning Perry) go ahead and get married; you are all right now."

The truth of this testimony could not be corroborated by respondent, for the reason that said attorney died some 6 years prior to the date on which the present proceeding was tried. Respondent and Perry did not marry, however, until 18 months after she was shown said document, to wit, on May 8, 1909, at which time they were married by a minister of the gospel, under a license duly issued by a special United States Indian agent.

As a matter of fact, the document shown respondent by said attorney in November of 1907 was not the final judgment of divorce, because the judgment roll in the divorce proceeding shows that said final decree was not rendered or entered until November 30, 1909, a period of about 6 months subsequent to the date of the marriage of respondent to Perry. There is no proof in the record showing that respondent ever knew, prior to Perry's death, of the entry of said final decree, other than the statement made to her by her attorney in 1907.

[1, 2] The sole question presented by the appeal is whether or not there is sufficient evidence in the record to support the finding of the trial court that Perry's marriage to respondent was legal. It is conceded that said marriage to Perry was regularly and duly solemnized. There is, therefore, a presumption, "a very strong one," as the Supreme Court has said (Wilcox v. Wilcox, 171 Cal. 770, 155 Pac. 95), that said marriage is legal. Furthermore, it is the well-established law that "the burden is cast upon the party asserting guilt or immorality to prove the negative—that the first marriage had not ended before the second marriage." Wilcox v. Wilcox, supra.

[3, 4] Subdivision 2 of section 61 of the Civil Code provides:

"A subsequent marriage contracted by any person during the life of a former husband or wife of such person, with any person other than such former husband or wife, is illegal and void from the beginning, unless: * * * 2. Unless such former husband or wife is absent, and not known to such person to be living for the space of five successive years immediately preceding such subsequent marriage, or is generally reputed or believed by such person to be dead at the time such subsequent marriage was contracted. In either of which cases the subsequent marriage is valid until its nullity is adjudged by a competent tribunal."

If, therefore, Wathen was absent from respondent, and was not known to her to be living for the space of 5 successive years immediately preceding her marriage to Perry, her marriage to Perry is valid.

The legality of the Perry marriage is attacked by appellant upon two principal grounds: First, upon the ground that Wathen was not "absent" from respondent, within the meaning of the Code section quoted, for the reason, as appellant contends, that the desertion was committed by respondent, and not by Wathen; secondly, upon the ground that the evidence offered and received in the present proceeding proves that "respondent must have known her husband to be living for the space of 5 successive years immediately preceding her marriage to Frank Perry."

The answer to the first contention is to be found in the terms of the judgment for divorce itself, wherein it is decreed that it was Wathen, and not respondent, who was guilty of desertion, and again, in the evidence in the present proceeding, from which it would appear that in the fall of 1888 Wathen, without cause, left his wife, then only 14 years of age, among strangers, and went away without informing her how long he was going to be gone, or when he would return. After waiting 6 weeks for his return, she notified him by letter that she intended to go back to her folks at Covelo and requested him to come for her there. He did not return to Covelo, however, for 20 years, and then only temporarily, and did not see respondent. Neither did she see him or know he was there, or had been there. In fact, Wathen did not see respondent for approximately 32 years from the day he left her, although he knew, at all times, where she was and where he might find her. This evidence is amply sufficient, we think, to support the conclusion reached by the trial court that the desertion was committed by Wathen.

Appellant's second contention, to the effect that respondent must have known, within 5 years next before she married Perry, that her husband was living, is based upon three points, viz.: The commencement and prosecution of the divorce proceeding, and the testimony given by respondent therein; the admissions made by respondent while testifying in the present proceeding; and the asserted fact that Wathen visited and conversed with respondent's attorney within said 5-year period. Opposed to appellant's contention is the positive testimony of respondent, given in this proceeding, to the effect that for five years next preceding her marriage to Perry she knew nothing of Wathen's whereabouts, or whether he was dead or alive. Upon this conflicting evidence the trial court found adversely to appellant's contention, and there is sufficient evidence before us, we believe, to fully support the trial court's conclusions.

So far as the divorce proceedings are concerned, the trial court may well have concluded, as it doubtless did, that respondent, being uncertain as to her marital status with Wathen, consulted her attorney, and that it was upon the advice and suggestion of her attorney that a divorce should be obtained simply as a precautionary measure to legally establish respondent's status as a single person. It may be, as contended by appellant, that the one or two excerpts from the affidavit for publication of the summons, and from the testimony given by respondent in support of her suit for divorce, might, if standing alone, imply that respondent entertained a belief that Wathen, at that time, might be living; but, when the affidavit and the testimony are read in their entirety, we do not think that either is fairly susceptible of such construction. It is stated in the affidavit, in plain terms, that for over a year every effort had been made to obtain service on Wathen, but without avail; that the summons had been sent for service to the sheriff of Butte county, and also to two constables in other localities, but Wathen could not be found. Furthermore, we are unable to say whether or not the trial court gave any weight at all to said affidavit, for the reason that respondent testified that she neither read said affidavit nor knew its contents before she signed it; that it was presented to her for signature by her attorney, and she signed it without question. And, whatever conflict there may have been in respondent's testimony in the divorce proceeding, she did positively testify therein

"We came back to Sierra county and stayed a month or two, and one day he left and said he was going to Brown's Valley; but he did not go there, and I never heard of him since."

[5] Concerning the testimony given by respondent in the present proceeding, appellant contends that it shows that respondent was possessed of sufficient knowledge of the whereabouts of Wathen to place her upon inquiry, and that, had she pursued those inquiries and searched for him, she would have discovered that he was alive. We do not understand that under the circumstances here shown, and in view of the fact that Wathen deserted respondent, the law imposed any such duty upon her. In Estate of Harrington, 140 Cal. 244, 73 Pac. 1000, 98 Am. St. Rep. 51, the same contention was made under a quite similar state of facts, and the court said:

"Counsel's principal claim in this respect is that it does not appear from the evidence that appellant, previous to her marriage with Carley, made any endeavor to ascertain the whereabouts of Harrington. This she was not required to do. It was the duty of the latter to keep her advised of his whereabouts, and she had a right to believe, as she testified she did, from silence for 10 years, that he was dead. Jones v. Zoller, 39 N. Y. 285."

Neither do we find any force in the argument of appellant that, because Wathen, during the course of the divorce proceedings, conversed with respondent's attorneys unknown to respondent, the latter is charged with the knowledge of her attorney. Appellant sought to prove that conversation by the testimony of Wathen; but the court, on account of Wathen's conduct toward respondent, may not have believed him. Even if Wathen's testimony is to be accepted as true, we are not prepared to say that the situation presented is one which calls for the application of the doctrine of constructive notice.

After fully and carefully examining the record, disclosing, as it does, a conflict on the vital point at issue, we are not prepared to say that the trial court's conclusions on the question of the Perry marriage are erroneous. In fact, we believe, from the evidence presented, that its decision was just and in accordance with the expressed policy of the law, which is to uphold, if possible, the legality of marriage. In McKibbon v. McKibbon, 139 Cal. 448, 73 Pac. 143, the trial court, in speaking of a situation like the one presented here, said:

"I am inclined to take the view that proof of solemnization, aided by the presumption that the solemnization was regular, would overcome the presumption of bigamy that would result if she had two husbands."

With these views the Supreme Court agreed. The doctrine of McKibbon v. McKibbon has since been expressly approved in Wilcox v. Wilcox, supra. In each of those cases the court quotes approvingly from 1 Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, §§ 946-948, as follows:

"Every intendment of the law leans to matrimony. When a marriage has been shown in evidence, whether regular or irregular, and whatever the form of proof, the law raises a strong presumption of its legality—not only casting the burden of proof on the party objecting, but requiring him throughout, in every particular, to make plain, against the constant pressure of presumption, the truth of law and fact that it is illegal and void."

The technical objections made by appellant against the validity of the judgment of divorce upon the grounds that neither the complaint nor the affidavit on which constructive service of summons was based stated a cause of action, are immaterial, in view of the fact that the legality of the Perry marriage in no wise depends upon the validity of the divorce proceeding.

For the reasons above stated, the order appealed from is affirmed.

SNIDER v. DUNN et ux. (Civ. 3862.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 6, 1922.)

1. Husband and wife — 233/4—Finding that owner's wife was not authorized to contract for sale of realty supported by evidence.

The trial court's finding that owner of realty had no knowledge of any contract between his wife and the alleged purchaser for the sale of his realty, and that owner's wife had no authority to make such a contract, held supported by the evidence.

2. Appeal and error — 1011 (1)—Findings supported by conflicting evidence not disturbed.

Where there is a direct conflict in the evidence, the findings of the lower court will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Husband and wife — 21—Failure of wife as agent to collect rents did not estop husband to deny her agency to sell the property rented.

Where husband left the control of his realty to his wife, except as to alienation, and wife without his knowledge or consent contracted with lessees to sell them the leased realty, the husband under Civ. Code, § 2317, providing that ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe the agent to possess, was not estopped, by the wife's failure for about a year to collect rent, from claiming that the contract to sell was unauthorized.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge, Ejectment by George W. Snider against Frank P. Dunn and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Fred N. Arnoldy, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg and Alex W. Davis, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ORRIG, J. This action is one of ejectment to recover possession of a house and lot. Plaintiff is the owner of the property in question, and the defendants originally entered thereon under a month to month tenancy. The monthly rental was $20. This was paid until April 6, 1919. At this date defendants discontinued the payment of rent. They allege that they then entered into an agreement for the purchase of the premises for the sum of $2,500, to be paid on or before May 4, 1921, and that they thereafter continued in possession under this contract, which was an oral one.

[1] The trial court found that the plaintiff did not at any time make a contract for the sale of the premises to the defendants. The evidence showed without contradiction that whatever arrangements were made by defendants to buy, were negotiated solely with Johanna Snider, the wife of plaintiff. However, defendants insist that Johanna Snider was the authorized agent of plaintiff, and that, if it be held that she did not have actual authority to sell the property, she at least was his ostensible agent for that purpose. The trial court found to the contrary on both of these propositions. Appellants urge as ground for reversal that such findings are not supported by the evidence. Finding 8 reads as follows:

"That on or about May 20, 1920, the defendants notified plaintiff that they claimed to be in possession of said premises under a contract to purchase the same for twenty-five hundred ($2,500.00) dollars, and that they would continue in possession thereof under such alleged contract, and denied that plaintiff had any rights in said premises, other than the right to receive the sum of twenty-five hundred ($2,500.00) dollars as the purchase price thereof and the interest thereon. That prior to the receiving of said notice plaintiff had no knowledge that the defendants claimed to hold possession of said premises under such alleged contract, or any contract for the purchase of said premises, and at no time acquiesced in the said claim, and immediately on obtaining knowledge of such claim plaintiff gave notice to the defendants that no such agreement existed, and demanded of defendants that they pay rent for the use of said premises. That defendants refused to pay said rent, and denied that they were in possession of said premises as tenants of the plaintiff, and refused, and ever since have refused, to quit possession of said premises, and ever since have continued and are now in possession thereof, and have claimed to hold said premises under such alleged contract of purchase, and have withheld the possession of said premises from the plaintiff."

There is no dispute concerning the truth of the above finding or that it is supported by the evidence, except that part which states that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the defendants' claims, or that the defendants had made any agreement with any one to purchase the property in question. Concerning that matter the plaintiff testified on direct examination that he knew the Dunns moved upon the property; that he made no objection to their doing so; that he did not know of his own knowledge that they paid rent; that he had heard they were paying $20 a month; that at no time did he have any conversation with them in which arrangements were made concerning their occupying the property. On cross-examination he testified that he had had no discussion with Mrs. Snider about the defendants buying the property, except as follows:

"Q. But you did have a discussion with your wife at about that time, about April 1, 1919, in regard to selling this property to the Dunns, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, what was that discussion? A. She said they wanted to buy the property, and I said, 'Well, we will figure it up and see what it has cost us,' and she made it about $3,800, and I made it $4,200.

"Q. Now, is that all that was said? A. There was something about the payments, and I said, 'Whatever arrangements you make, we must have interest on $4,200.'

"Q. And is that all? A. That is all there was said about it.

"Q. Did you have any further conversation with your wife during that month, or the month of May, 1919, in regard to selling this property to the Dunns? A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you have any talk with Mrs. Dunn in the month of May, in regard to the sale of this property and purchase of it by them? A. No, sir."

[2] It is true that other witnesses contradicted George W. Snider, but the doctrine is too well settled to require the citation of authorities that, where there is a direct conflict in the evidence, the finding of the lower court will not be disturbed upon appeal. If the agreement was made by defendants with Johanna Snider, and if the plaintiff had no knowledge of the execution of such a contract, clearly he cannot be bound by its terms, unless he had authorized Johanna Snider to sell the property, or clothed her with an ostensible agency to sell it. The trial court found that Johanna Snider assumed to act as the agent of the plaintiff "without any authority of the plaintiff so to do." This finding is supported by the testimony of the plaintiff, who declared that he had not authorized his wife to sell the property, except as discussed in the conversation above quoted.

[3] Appellant relies principally on the provisions of section 2317 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess."

The trial court found that the plaintiff's wife, Mrs. Snider, "at all times mentioned, and until the 20th day of May, 1920, assumed and had full charge, management, and control of said real property, with the knowledge, consent, and approval of the plaintiff," except as to the alienation of the property. Appellant argues that she therefore, as her husband's agent, had power to collect the rents, and that if the defendants discontinued paying rent April 6, 1919, the plaintiff must be deemed to have had notice of that fact, and that, because he made no objections to their remaining in possession without paying rent until May 20, 1920, by such failure to object he became estopped to assert that he did not know of the agreement entered into by his wife and the defendants.

The situation presented falls far short of creating an estoppel. Respondent, as the owner of the property, owed no duty to the appellants to compel them to pay rent or require them to vacate. The ordinary care referred to in section 2317 of the Civil Code clearly refers to the care required by the law concerning matters having to do with agency. The fact that respondent permitted appellants to remain in possession for a year without paying rent has no relevancy to the question of the scope of Mrs. Snider's agency in dealing with the property.

There is testimony in the record from which it may be inferred that the plaintiff and respondent is an old man; that his wife is the mother of Mrs. Dunn, a daughter by a former husband. It appears that the Dunns did not discuss the transaction with Mr. Snider, although there seems to be no sufficient reason why they should not have done so; that they dealt entirely with Mrs. Snider in their alleged purchase of the property, although they knew it was the separate property of Mr. Snider, and as far as they knew, Mrs. Snider had no authority to alienate it. The trial court observed the witnesses on the stand, and no doubt gave serious consideration to their appearance and demeanor in arriving at its conclusions as to the truthfulness of their testimony and their probable conduct. The findings to the effect that the plaintiff had no knowledge of any contract between his wife and the defendants, and that his wife had no authority from him to make such a contract, have substantial support in the evidence, and it can serve no good purpose to review portions of the transcript in which George Snider's testimony is contradicted.

The judgment is affirmed.

BORGERSON v. BORGERSON. (Civ. 4212.)

1. Divorce — 312—Conclusions of trial court relating to custody of minor children will not be disturbed.

The custody of minor children is a matter within the discretion of the trial court, and his conclusions will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of evidence showing an abuse of the discretion.

2. Divorce — 303(3)—Evidence held insufficient to show abuse of discretion in awarding custody of minor child.

On hearing of defendant husband's motion to modify divorce decree relating to the custody of a minor child, evidence held insufficient to show an abuse of discretion by the court in awarding custody of the child to plaintiff wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Suit for divorce by Hazel Borgerson against Oscar Borgerson. From an order denying defendant's motion to modify the final judgment of divorce, defendant appeals. Order affirmed.

Dahlin & Jackson, of San Francisco (Ivan T. Crase and L. W. Perley, both of San Francisco, of counsel) for appellant.

Arthur A. Chazel, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant Oscar Borgerson from an order denying his motion to modify a final judgment of divorce with respect to the custody of a minor child of the age of five years, the issue of the marriage of plaintiff and defendant. The motion was based upon the alleged misconduct of the plaintiff. The grounds of appeal are that the trial court erroneously excluded certain material evidence offered by appellant and that it abused its discretion in denying defendant's motion.

It should be stated in the beginning that the record on this appeal is, unfortunately, incomplete and unsatisfactory, and does not allow us full opportunity to fairly and intelligently review either of the questions presented by the appeal. Explanatory of the condition of the record, appellant, in his opening brief, says:

"Here, we desire to say a word about the reporter's transcript. The hearing in the lower court covered a portion of two days, June 30th and July 1st. During the hearing on the first day, it was impossible to get a court reporter, and, although notes of the testimony were taken and we have endeavored to have counsel stipulate as to the testimony for the purpose of assisting this court in its decision, it has been impossible to get anything that happened on the first day into the transcript."

The record on appeal was prepared pursuant to section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and consequently the reporter's transcript covers only the evidence and proceedings reported on the second day of the hearing. We are therefore unable to ascertain what occurred during the first day of the hearing, and we are consequently not informed upon what facts and circumstances the trial court finally acted in denying defendant's motion.

[1] It has been repeatedly held that the matter of the award of the custody of children, in divorce proceedings, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and that on appeal interference will be justified only where there is shown to be clear instances of an abuse of such discretion. In Crater v. Crater, 135 Cal. 633, 67 Pac. 1049, it is said:

"The good of the child is regarded as the controlling force in directing its custody, and the courts will always look to this rather than to the whims and caprices of the parties. The morals of the parents, their financial condition, their subsequent marriage, the age of the child, and the devotion of either parent to its best interests, are all factors to be weighed and considered by the court. All such applications are addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court below, and its conclusion will not be disturbed here, except it should clearly appear that its discretion has been abused."

It must therefore be presumed, on this appeal, in the absence of any evidence showing to the contrary, that the trial court fully and fairly inquired into all such elements, that it was at all times mindful of the welfare of the child, and that its final conclusions were reached only after it had duly considered the entire situation before it. With those conclusions we are not permitted to interfere. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 352, 173 Pac. 582.

[2] The incomplete condition of the record likewise makes it quite impossible for us to declare that the exclusion of the evidence offered by defendant on the second day of the hearing, concerning the previous relations of plaintiff with a man named Balin, was prejudicial, for the reason that evidence on that point may have been received and considered by the court, so far as the record discloses, on the first day of the hearing. It vaguely appears from the reporter's transcript that plaintiff was legally married to Balin on the first day of the hearing on this motion, and that the consummation of said marriage doubtless prompted the trial court, in some degree, at least, to refuse, on the second day of the hearing, any further inquiry by the defendant into the previous conduct of plaintiff. However that may be, enough appears in the record to show that the trial court was aware of the conditions which defendant sought to prove by the excluded evidence, and that, notwithstanding those conditions, it was its best judgment that the welfare of the child demanded that it should continue to remain in the care of its mother. That being so, it would necessarily follow, we think, that the defendant suffered no prejudice by the exclusion of such evidence.

There was very little testimony, if any, taken on the day on which the proceedings were reported. The record consists mainly of discussions between court and counsel, and the expression of the court's views upon the question of the welfare of the child. From the clerk's transcript, however, it appears that plaintiff's grounds for divorce were extreme cruelty and that the defendant defaulted. The interlocutory and final judgment of divorce awarded the child to plaintiff. Subsequently, on stipulation, it was given into the custody of plaintiff's mother. After defendant served and filed this motion, to modify the final decree so as to allow him the custody of the child, and pending the hearing thereof, the custody of the child was again awarded to plaintiff. Although these decrees and orders were rendered and made by another department of the same court, the entire record of the case was evidently taken into consideration by the trial court before it ruled upon this motion.

From the fragmentary parts of the evidence presented, we are not prepared to say that there has been an abuse of discretion shown in denying defendant's motion, or that prejudicial error was committed in the exclusion of evidence. The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

1. Divorce ⚭255—Intrinsic fraud by wife in her divorce complaint held not ground to attack decree in her favor.

A fraudulent allegation by the wife in her divorce complaint that there was no community property constituted intrinsic fraud, and was not ground for an attack on the judgment in an action by the husband to determine his rights in the community property.

A default divorce decree affecting community property in favor of the wife is not void, under Code Civ. Proc. § 580, providing that the relief to be granted plaintiff, where no answer is filed, cannot exceed that demanded in the complaint, where the complaint alleged that there was no community property, and prayed for a decree of divorce and for general relief, and where the husband had knowledge of the allegations of the complaint 1 month after entry of interlocutory decree, and 11 months prior to entry of final decree, but the husband's remedy was a proceeding under section 473, providing that, where defendant has not been served personally, the court may allow him to answer to the merits within 1 year after rendition of the judgment.

On plaintiff's failure to amend within the time allowed, judgment was entered in favor of defendant. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals. The sole question presented is whether the amended complaint states a cause of action.

The complaint alleges that prior to December 17, 1919, the parties were husband and wife; that at the time of the commencement of the action for divorce, hereinafter referred to, the parties owned community property, "consisting of money in bank and bonds and securities and other property, all of which was, at all times herein mentioned, well known to defendant"; that such money was "deposited in a joint bank account of the said parties, * * * payable to either of said parties"; that "at some time subsequent to April 1, 1918, the exact time or times being unknown to this plaintiff, defendant herein, * * * without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff herein, * * * willfully and wrongfully withdrew the whole of the said community property and funds * * * and converted the same to her own use and converted the same into other forms of property, or deposited or placed the same in another bank or in other banks," and mingled the same with other funds belonging to the defendant, "so that defendant herein then and there constituted herself in appearance the absolute owner of the said total sum"; that July 23, 1918, defendant commenced an action for divorce against plaintiff; that in her complaint she alleged "that there is no community property belonging to the parties herein"; that the prayer of the complaint was for a decree of divorce, and "for any further relief that this court may deem meet"; that plaintiff herein was not served personally in that action, but that service was made by publication; that plaintiff had no notice, and was without knowledge of the allegations contained in the complaint therein, "until about the month of January, 1919"; that the defendant omitted to mention such community property in her divorce complaint, "with intent then and there to cheat and defraud plaintiff herein * * * of his right and interest in and to" such community property; that defendant was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce December 3, 1918; that in the divorce action the court found "that all the allegations and averments of the complaint are true"; that the divorce was granted on the ground of extreme cruelty; that "the disposition of the community property * * * was not made a part of, or determined by, either the interlocutory decree or the final decree made and entered in said action"; and that the respective rights of the parties in and to such community property has never been settled by agreement or otherwise. The prayer is for an adjudication of the rights of the parties in and to the community property and for other relief incidental thereto.

[1] The alleged fraudulent allegation that there was no community property constituted intrinsic and not extrinsic fraud. Benning v. Nevis (Cal. App.) 204 Pac. 866, and cases cited therein. Since intrinsic fraud is not ground for the attack upon the judgment, the allegation of such fraud may be eliminated from consideration. In Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 Pac. 1168, and Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 8, 147 Pac. 1171, the court held that where the complaint in an action for divorce alleges that there is no community property, and the defendant, after personal service, makes default, and final judgment is rendered dissolving the marriage, but making no order, direction, or even mention of property or other right, such judgment operates as an adjudication that at the time the action was begun there was no community property. In that case the service on the defendant was personal; in this it was by publication, and the defendant had no actual knowledge of the contents of the complaint until a month after the interlocutory decree was entered. In the Brown Case the divorce was granted on the ground of willful neglect; in this, on that of extreme cruelty. In other respects the two cases are identical in principle.

[2] Appellant relies on the provision of section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "the relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint," and Staacke v. Bell, 125 Cal. 309, 57 Pac. 1012, to the effect that the prayer for general relief cannot "enlarge the power of the court to grant relief not prayed for against a defaulting defendant." In Cohen v. Cohen, 150 Cal. 99, 102, 88 Pac. 267, 269 (11 Ann. Cas. 520), it is said:

"Section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure * * * does not make the judgment void in a case where the relief given is within the terms of a prayer for general relief and is germane to the cause of action stated, although it may not be authorized by the facts alleged. In such cases the judgment may be erroneous as to the excess and subject to reversal or modification on appeal, but it is not void, nor subject to collateral attack on that ground. * * * It can be modified in the lower court only by proceedings under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or by proceedings in equity. It has indeed frequently been held that a judgment for more relief than is prayed for is not void as to such excess, and cannot be attacked in collateral proceedings, although there is no prayer for general relief."

In this case the plaintiff is not seeking to have the judgment in the divorce case, or any part thereof, set aside; but he is asking for a decree establishing his alleged interest in property which, under authority of the Brown Cases, has been judicially determined in the action for divorce not to be community property and his attack upon the judgment therein is clearly collateral. His complaint is based upon the assumption that the judgment is void in so far as it adjudges that there was no community property at the time the action was commenced. Plaintiff had knowledge of the allegations of the complaint, and presumably of the terms of the interlocutory decree, within a month after that decree was entered, and 11 months prior to the entry of the final decree. He had full opportunity to seek relief from the judgment under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides:

"When from any cause the summons in an action has not been personally served on the defendant, the court may allow, on such terms as may be just, such defendant or his legal representative, at any time within one year after the rendition of any judgment in such action, to answer to the merits of the original action."

Under this provision, the trial court, on proper application by defendant, would have been authorized—

"to set aside the judgment as to him and allow him to answer to the merits at any time within one year after the rendition of the original judgment against him, even though the proceedings by publication were entirely regular, and the judgment, therefore, valid on its face." Fox v. Townsend, 149 Cal. 659, 661, 87 Pac. 82, 83.

Had the defendant made such application on the grounds alleged in his complaint, the court doubtless would have set the judgment aside and permitted the defendant to answer. Having failed to make such application, the defendant, in the language of the Supreme Court in the first of the Brown Cases—

"is presumed to have acceded to the proposition embraced in the complaint and to have consented that plaintiff should obtain the relief therein prayed for, upon the conditions and facts set forth in the complaint."

The case of Lang v. Lang, 182 Cal. 765, 190 Pac. 181, cited by appellant, is not in point. In that case there was no allegation relative to community or other property and the prayer was simply for a decree of divorce.

The fact that the summons was served by publication, rather than personally, is not material under the facts of this case. "The presumption in support of a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is not made to depend upon the way in which a summons is required to be served." McHatton v. Rhodes, 143 Cal. 275, 279, 76 Pac. 1036, 1038 (101 Am. St. Rep. 125). Appellant contends, however, that his allegation that the service of summons was by publication is at least a defective and informal allegation that the defendant in the action for divorce was a non-resident, and that therefore the court was without jurisdiction to adjudicate the property rights of the parties, citing De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165. Whether or not the fact of nonresidence is material in such a case, the allegation in question cannot be construed as the averment that defendant was a nonresident. Section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the service of summons by publication where the defendant—

"resides out of the state; or has departed from the state; or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state; or conceals himself to avoid the service of summons."

The court cannot presume that publication of summons was ordered by reason of non-residence or absence from the state rather than upon the other grounds justifying such publication. The presumption is that the plaintiff pleaded all the facts which would tend to support his cause of action. He filed a complaint and an amended complaint, and was granted leave to again amend. If he in fact was absent from the state or a nonresident at the time of service of summons in the action for divorce, he would not have failed to so allege, in view of his contention as to the effect of such absence or nonresidence.

There being no difference in principle between this case and the Brown Cases, the decisions in those cases must control in this.

The judgment is affirmed.

58 Cal. App. 524

GAMBRILL et al. v. DWORACK et al.
(Civ. 2475.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 14, 1922.)

1. Alteration of instruments ⚡29 — Finding that words in assignment were not inserted after it was signed supported by evidence.

Finding that words in an assignment of a mortgage, to the effect that the assignment was not only as security for one debt, but as additional security for another debt, were written in the assignment before it was signed, and not fraudulently caused to be inserted therein by the assignee after the signing, without assignors' knowledge, held supported by sufficient evidence.

2. Bills and notes ⚡370—Defense of want of consideration not available against bona fide purchaser.

Defense that a note and an assignment of another note and its mortgage security as collateral security for the first note were without consideration is not available as against a purchaser for value, without notice of any infirmity, before maturity, of the first note, with its collateral security.

3. Estoppel ⚡17—Mortgagor estopped to assert no title at time of execution.

A mortgagor is estopped to assert, as against holder of the mortgage, that at time of executing it he had no title, or that there was an outstanding title.

4. Alteration of instruments ⚡22—One whose name is inserted in deed in place of grantee's with consent of all estopped to assert invalidity of transaction.

Under the principle of equitable estoppel, one whose name was, with consent of all interested, inserted in a deed in place of that of the grantee, whose name was erased, cannot assert invalidity of the transaction against one of the others, thereby induced to change his position to his disadvantage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by A. L. Gambrill and another against Charles A. Dworack and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Everts, Ewing & Wild and J. R. Fitch, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Conley & Conley, of Madera, and Roy B. Maxey, of Modesto, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. On November 23, 1918, Chas. A. Dworack and Adelia Dworack, his wife, deeded to Chas. Van B. Wright certain properties in the city of Madera, this state, and as payment therefor received a note for the sum of $16,000, due on or before two years after date, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable annually, secured by a mortgage upon said properties. The properties covered by said deed and mortgage were described in the instrument as lots 2, 3, 4, and 5 in block 23 of the Floto Tract, but, through a mutual mistake of fact, lots 6 and 7 of said block were omitted, both in the deed and in the mortgage. On the 14th day of October, 1918, one Frank M. Harris and Olive G. Harris, his wife, made, executed, and delivered to one A. L. Gambrill a certain deed to lot 6 and the west half of 7 in block 11 in the city of San Jacinto, county of Riverside. On said 23d day of November following Gambrill sold to Chas. A. Dworack this property for the sum of $14,000, and in making the transfer the former, with the consent of his grantor, Frank M. Harris, and the said Dworack, erased his (Gambrill's) name as grantee, and inserted therein the name of

Chas. A. Dworack. In consideration thereof Dworack and his wife assumed a mortgage in the sum of $6,000 and existing against the said San Jacinto property, executed and delivered to the said Gambrill a certain promissory note for the sum of $8,000, secured by a second mortgage on the San Jacinto property, and it is the claim of respondents that said purchasers agreed, as further security for the payment of said promissory note of $8,000, to make an assignment of the said $16,000 note and mortgage made and executed by said Chas. Van B. Wright as aforesaid. The said deed and mortgage covering the San Jacinto property were duly recorded in the said county of Riverside. On or about the 4th day of December, 1918, the Dworacks made and delivered to A. L. Gambrill their certain promissory note in writing for the sum of $600, the payment of which was secured by assignment of said note and mortgage for said $16,000. Said assignment upon its face purports to be—

"for and in consideration of the sum of $600, and other advances mentioned, which may be due second party, also as additional security for the payment of an $8,000 note given to the party of the second part (A. L. Gambrill), the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged."

All of these transactions between Gambrill and the Dworacks were consummated at the same time, and were inseparably connected as one business affair; all of said papers being finally executed and delivered on or about December 9, 1918, at the time they were acknowledged. On or about the 5th day of March, 1919, the Dworacks conveyed said San Jacinto property to one Chas. B. Throop in exchange for an apartment house in the city of Los Angeles. On the 7th day of April, 1919, the Dworacks made and delivered to said Chas. Van B. Wright a deed of correction on the said property, situated in the said city of Madera, conveying by said deed said lots 6 and 7, which had been omitted as aforesaid, and at the same time said Wrights made and delivered to the said Chas. A. Dworack a promissory note in the sum of $16,419 and as security for the payment of the same executed and delivered to said Dworacks a certain mortgage of said real property in the city of Madera. Said last-mentioned note and mortgage has never been delivered or assigned to A. L. Gambrill or to Lena Bauman.

On the 7th day of August, 1919, A. L. Gambrill, by written assignment, in consideration of the sum of $8,000, assigned to Lena Bauman the $8,000 note secured by said second mortgage executed by the Dworacks, and also the said $16,000 note and mortgage executed by said Wright to Chas. A. Dworack, and assigned as aforesaid to said A. L. Gambrill. The assignee, Lena Bauman, joined, as party plaintiff, her assignor, A. L. Gambrill, in the action to reform the mortgage so held by her, and for the cancellation of said mortgage held by the Dworacks, for the sum of $16,419, upon the said property in Madera, and the judgment was in her favor, from which the appeal has been taken.

We understand that the defense upon which appellants rely principally is set forth in their answer and cross-complaint as follows:

"That they did then and there deliver said $16,000 note and mortgage to said A. L. Gambrill. That said A. L. Gambrill did thereupon present and ask said defendants to sign a certain blank form of assignment of mortgage, then and there stating to said defendants that it was merely a matter of form and in the usual course of business, and that when said money was repaid that all of said papers would be delivered to them. That defendants are informed and verily believe, and so state the fact to be, that between the 4th day of December, 1918, and the 9th day of December, 1918, said plaintiff Gambrill, without the consent or knowledge of said defendants, fraudulently caused to be inserted in said assignment of mortgage the following words and figures: 'Also as additional security for the payment of an $8,000 note given to the party of the second part'—and that thereafter and at some time subsequent to the 20th day of December, 1918, said plaintiff Gambrill caused the following to be inserted in said assignment of mortgage, without the knowledge or consent of said defendants: 'The 23d day of November, 1918, and recorded on the 20th day of December, 1918, in Book 29 of Mortgages, at page 328.' That at the same time said plaintiff Gambrill caused the date to be inserted in said assignment of mortgages as the 6th day of December, 1918."

[1] Indeed, while the trial was in progress, counsel for appellants said:

"The real issue in this case, boiled right down: Was this $600 note secured? Was the mortgage of $16,000 given to Gambrill as security for the note of $600, or for $600 with the additional security of this $8,000?"

After some discussion the court said:

"The whole thing is whether or not there was any flim-flam on the 4th or 9th day of December with that assignment; were those words 'additional security' inserted in there or not?"

Counsel for respondents thereupon stated:

"Yes; that is the only question and we are perfectly satisfied, 'as additional security for the payment of an $8,000 note,' if that is the understanding."

With that the cause proceeded upon said theory as to the only issue in the case and the court's finding upon conflicting evidence in reference to it was in favor of plaintiffs. That said finding is sufficiently supported cannot be gainsaid. It will answer the purpose to quote from the testimony, first, of A. L. Gambrill, and, second, of R. G. Cornell, the notary, as follows:

"Q. Were the words 'also as additional security for the payment of $8,000 note given to' in this instrument at the time it was signed by Chas. A. Dworack and Adelia Dworack? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you prepare this instrument? A. Yes, sir."

"Q. Do you recall another entry in the book (the notarial book) on December 9, 1918, 'Charles A. Dworack to A. L. Gambrill, assignment of mortgage, consideration of $600, December 6, 1918, special remarks of $16,000, mortgage, etc., also security of $600 and $8,000, legal fees fifty cents'? Was that written by you in this book at that time, Mr. Cornell? A. It was. Q. I will ask you if the next entry, December 9, 1918, 'Charles A. Dworack to A. L. Gambrill of mortgage $8,000, November 23, 1918, San Jacinto property building, legal fees $1.00,' if you wrote that in there also? A. I did. Q. At that time? A. I did. * * *

"The Court: Where did you get your data from that you inserted in your notarial record? A. I got it from these papers. Q. You got it at that time? A. Yes."

There is other evidence in support of the finding, but the foregoing is ample.

[2] Appellants in their brief herein also attack the validity of the $8,000 note and the assignment of the $16,000 note and mortgage on the ground of the want of consideration between the original parties. As to this, it would be sufficient to say that Lena Bauman was a purchaser for value, without notice of any infirmity, before maturity, of said note and its collateral security, and under the familiar rule such defense would not be available against her. Moreover, the evidence is sufficient to negative the contention of appellants that the original transactions were void.

[3] The point made as to the $8,000 note and mortgage is that the title to the San Jacinto property had not been conveyed to Charles A. Dworack by reason of the irregularity in changing the deed as we have before stated. But the rule is well settled that a mortgagor is estopped to assert that he had no title at the time of executing the mortgage or that there is an outstanding title in a third person. Stewart v. Powers, 98 Cal. 514, 33 Pac. 486; 21 Corpus Juris, p. 1068, No. 27, 2.

[4] Besides, the method pursued in substituting Dworack as grantee for Gambrill was by consent of all parties interested, including the grantor, and none of them would be permitted to urge the invalidity of the transaction against one of the others, who had thereby been induced to change his position to his disadvantage. It would be clearly a case for the principle of equitable estoppel. Section 3543, Civ. Code; Bigelow on Estoppel (4th Ed.) 445; Scott v. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 26 Pac. 898; Dolbeer v. Livingston, 100 Cal. 617, 35 Pac. 328.

It is also the contention of respondents, citing Stiles v. Probst, 69 Ill. 382, Abbott v. Ab- bot, 189 Ill. 488, 59 N. E. 953, 82 Am. St. Rep. 470, 2 Corpus Juris, § 113, p. 1238, and Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 294, that if another grantee is substituted in a deed after delivery, with consent of all the parties, and again delivered after the change, the deed will vest the title in the substituted grantee; but we deem it unnecessary to consider the soundness of this position.

In reference to the consideration for the assignment of the $16,000 note and mortgage, it is only necessary to recall that the execution of the various instruments constituted virtually one transaction and created the necessary reciprocal rights and obligations. Besides, Mr. Gambrill testified that the Dworacks agreed that they would give him—

"a second mortgage on the purchase of the San Jacinto property, and put this $16,000 mortgage up as additional security, if I would let them have $600 to move down there with."

It is a fair inference that the assignment was made in pursuance of this agreement. We deem no further comment advisable.

The judgment is affirmed.

BRUSH v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (Civ. 3859.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 11, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 7, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error §668—No extrinsic evidence may be received on appeal.

The record on appeal, properly certified, is conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein, and no extrinsic evidence may be received to supplement or contradict it.

2. Courts §116(3)—Court has inherent power to correct its records, so as to cure clerical misprisions.

Any error or defect in a record, occurring through acts of omission or commission of the clerk in entering of record the judgment or proceedings of the court, may be corrected at any time by the court on its own motion, or on the motion of an interested party.

3. Appeal and error §933(1)—Presumption in favor of correction of court records by order of judge.

Where the record shows a minute entry, "Defendant's motion for a new trial is granted," and a later entry that the grounds on which the order was made were inadvertently omitted from the first entry, and the order was corrected to read "that defendant's motion was granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict," the appellate court will presume that the clerk through a clerical misprision failed to state the grounds in the first entry, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 657, and that the court directed the entry of the second order to correct the first entry, in the absence of evidence to the contrary in the record.

4. New trial ⚡71—Court may grant new trial on ground of insufficient evidence, though evidence is conflicting.

Where the trial judge is satisfied that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, he may and should grant a new trial, though there be a substantial conflict in the testimony, and though on the same conflict an appellate court would be bound by the verdict.

5. New trial ⚡72—Court may grant new trial on ground of contributory negligence of plaintiff.

The trial court has the same discretionary power to grant a new trial, on the ground that the preponderance of the evidence shows plaintiff to be guilty of contributory negligence, that it has with respect to any other issue of fact.

6. Appeal and error ⚡999(3)—Province of appellate court is to pass on questions of law.

It is the province of the appellate court to pass on questions of law, and not questions of fact, and hence that court may not set aside a verdict on the ground of plaintiff's contributory negligence, unless from the undisputed facts it can see that the plaintiff has not exercised such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Harrison Brush against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Verdict for plaintiff. From an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Order affirmed.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and W. R. Millar, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order granting a new trial in an action for damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff through the negligence of defendant. The answer pleads contributory negligence. A verdict for $15,500 in favor of plaintiff was returned by the jury, and judgment was entered accordingly. Thereafter defendant gave notice of its intention to move for a new trial on the ground, among others, that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. In due time defendant presented its motion; the motion was granted and a new trial ordered; and plaintiff now appeals from the order.

Respondent, claiming that the record shows that the new trial was ordered on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, in that it appears from the preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, contends that the order must be affirmed, unless it shall be made to appear that the lower court, in granting the new trial, committed a manifest abuse of its discretion. The record on appeal contains copies of two minute entries of the order granting a new trial, made, respectively, on March 18, 1921, and March 28, 1921. The first, that of March 18, 1921, reads:

"Defendant's motion for a new trial is granted."

The second, dated March 28, 1921, is as follows:

"It appearing that in the minute entry of the order granting a new trial on the 18th day of March, 1921, the statement of the grounds on which said order was made was inadvertently omitted, and for the purpose of correcting said inadvertent omission, said order is hereby amended and corrected, nunc pro tunc, as of March 18, 1921, to read as follows: Defendant's motion for a new trial is hereby granted, on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, in that it appears from the preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence."

Appellant, contending that the second minute entry was unauthorized and that the first is the only existing valid record of the order granting a new trial, claims that, because the first minute entry does not specify that the new trial is granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, it must be presumed here that insufficiency of the evidence was not the ground on which the order was based, citing section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure whereby it is provided that—

"When a new trial is granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, the order shall so specify; otherwise, on appeal from such order, it will be presumed that the order was not based upon that ground."

[1] Both sides have filed in this court affidavits wherein the affiants purport to set forth some of the circumstances under which the two minute entries were made. These affidavits may not be considered by us. They are not a part of the record on appeal. This court must be governed by the record on appeal, duly authenticated in the mode prescribed by law.

That record, properly certified, is conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein, and no extrinsic evidence may be received to supplement or contradict it. Boston v. Haynes, 31 Cal. 107; Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489, 521; Hanna v. De Garmo, 140 Cal. 172, 174, 73 Pac. 830.

[2] The record on appeal discloses no lack of authority in the trial court to direct the making of the second minute entry. That court has the inherent power to correct its records so as to cure clerical mis-prisions. Any error or defect in a record occurring through acts of omission or commission of the clerk in entering of record the judgment or proceedings of the court may be corrected at any time by the court on its own motion, or on motion of an interested party.

"Every court of record," says our Supreme Court in Kaufman v. Shain, 111 Cal. 19, 43 Pac. 394, 52 Am. St. Rep. 139, "has the inherent right and power to cause its acts and proceedings to be correctly set forth in its records. The clerk is but an instrument and assistant of the court, whose duty it is to make a correct memorial of its orders and directions; and whenever it is properly brought to the knowledge of the court that the record made by the clerk does not correctly show the order or direction which was in fact made by the court at the time it was given, the authority of the court to cause its records to be corrected in accordance with the facts is undoubted [citing authorities]. In the exercise of this power the court is not, however, authorized to do more than to make its records correspond to the actual facts, and cannot, under the form of an amendment of its records, correct a judicial error, or make of record an order or judgment that was never in fact given. * * * The court is not precluded from correcting the entry merely because the 'record' does not show that it is itself incorrect. The rule at common law, that the record can be amended only when there is something in the record to amend by, was applied when it was sought to amend a judgment at a term of the court subsequent to that in which it had been signed and enrolled, but it has no application to the amendment of matters that do not form a part of the judgment roll or 'record.' Until the entry of the judgment the record was in the breast of the court. Afterward it was in the roll. It was only the 'record' thus made up which imported absolute verity. * * * Mere entries in the minutes of the court are not, properly speaking, matters of record. Weed v. Weed, 25 Conn. 344. They become so only by being incorporated into bills of exception, and thus made a part of the judgment roll. * * * This power of a court to amend its records so that they may correspond with the fact, and correctly express what was done by the court, may be exercised at any time."

[3] Appellant's claim that the lower court exceeded its authority in entering the nunc pro tunc order of March 28, 1921, is based upon the assumption that the omission from the original minute entry of any statement that the new trial was granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence was a judicial and not a clerical error; that is, it is gratuitously assumed by appellant that, when the trial judge announced that a new trial would be granted, who made no mention of the ground upon which it was ordered, and that therefore the failure of the first minute entry to specify that the new trial was granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict was not a mistake of the clerk but an error of the judge.

Aside from the two minute entries, there is nothing whatever in the record on appeal to show any of the circumstances under which either entry was made. There is nothing in the record on appeal to show that, in ordering the new trial, the trial judge did not specifically direct the clerk to specify in his minute entry of the order that it was made on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. This being the condition of the record, we must presume that the trial judge did direct the clerk to specify in the original minute order that the new trial was granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, or that he in some way communicated to the clerk the fact that insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict was the ground upon which the order was made. We must presume that, though clerical misprision, the clerk failed to make the entry as directed, or to make it in conformity with the judge's announcement, and that it was for that reason that the court, in the exercise of its inherent power to cause its acts to be correctly recorded, directed the entry of the second order. An appellate court never indulges in presumption to defeat an order or a judgment. On the contrary, every intendment is in favor of the validity and regularity of the order or judgment appealed from. The burden of overcoming this presumption is upon the appellant, and where the record is silent it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done. Niles v. Gonzalez, 155 Cal. 359, 362, 100 Pac. 1080. Thus, in Hamilton v. Seitz, 25 Pa. 226, 64 Am. Dec. 694, the court, addressing itself to the regularity of an amendment made by the court below to its proceedings, used this language:

"We are bound to presume that the amendment permitted in the numbers of the lots sold was founded upon satisfactory evidence that a mistake was made in that part of the description of the levy, and that the true numbers of the lots, really levied upon and sold were 3 and 4 instead of 2 and 3."

What we have said is a sufficient reply to appellant's claim that the second minute entry was made without notice to him. Where there is nothing in the record to amend it by, there may be some question as to a judge's right to resort to his recollection, and, ex mero motu, direct the clerk to correct the entry of an order or judgment. But assuming, without deciding, that notice was essential in this case, the record on this appeal does not show that notice was not given. To uphold the validity of the order, we must indulge every presumption not controverted by the record. The Supreme Court of Nebraska, in Brownlee v. Davidson, 28 Neb. 785, 45 N. W. 51, held that, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, it will be presumed, on appeal, that notice was duly served on the opposite party of an application to correct a defect in the entry of the judgment, occurring through the clerk's mistake or neglect.

Our conclusion is that, upon this appeal, we must treat the second minute entry as a correct record of the order as originally announced by the trial judge, and since that entry specifically states that the order is granted "on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, in that it appears from the preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence," the order must be affirmed unless we can say that in granting the new trial the court abused its discretion.

[4] Upon the issue of contributory negligence there was some conflict in the testimony. But, while an appellate court will not review a verdict where the evidence shows a substantial conflict, the trial court is guided by very different considerations. If the trial judge, notwithstanding a conflict in the testimony, is satisfied that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, he may, indeed he should, grant a new trial, although upon the same conflict an appellate court would be bound by the verdict. And even though there be no conflict in the testimony, the probative force and effect of the evidence is ultimately for the determination of the trial judge upon the hearing of a motion for a new trial. Meimberg v. Jordan, 29 Cal. App. 762, 157 Pac. 1005, 1007. The judgment of the trial judge is not based upon the cold record which comes to an appellate court. He hears the evidence, and has ample opportunity to observe the demeanor and manner of the witnesses, and to judge their credibility. If, therefore he is dissatisfied with the verdict, and is of the opinion that it clearly is against the weight of the evidence, he may set it aside and grant a new trial, even though there be substantial evidence to support the verdict. He—"is in a position to determine between the apparent and the real, to detect the fallacy of specious testimony which may have misled the jury, but which his wider experience enables him to readily comprehend. * * * It is for these and other reasons which might be mentioned that a wide discretion is accorded to trial courts in the disposition of motions for new trials." Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. 178, 38 Pac. 715.

Though the parties are entitled to the judgment of the jury in the first instance, they are, upon a motion for a new trial, equally entitled to the independent judgment of the judge as to whether such verdict is supported by the evidence. Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 102, 78 Pac. 337.

[5] If we rightly understood appellant's position, his claim is that the principles just announced by us are not applicable where contributory negligence is the issue. In support of that contention we are referred to Schneider v. Market Street Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 Pac. 734. The claim is wholly fallacious. Without doubt, the trial court has the same discretionary power to grant a new trial upon the ground that the preponderance of the evidence shows the plaintiff in a negligence case to be himself guilty of contributory negligence that it has with respect to any other issue of fact. Our Supreme Court has given frequent recognition to the power. Thus, in Weisser v. Southern Pacific Railway Co., 148 Cal. 426, 83 Pac. 439, 7 Ann. Cas. 636, it was held that, notwithstanding there may be some conflict in the testimony upon the issue of contributory negligence, it is the duty of the trial judge to grant a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, if he is convinced that the preponderance thereof shows the plaintiff to have been guilty of contributory negligence; and the trial judge's action in that regard will not be disturbed by the appellate court, unless it appears that there has been a manifest abuse of the discretion confided to him.

[6] The cases cited by appellant are in entire harmony with these views. In Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., supra, the trial court had denied defendant's motion for a new trial. In that case the Supreme Court held that, to justify an appellate court in disturbing the verdict, it must affirmatively appear to that court, as a matter of law, from the undisputed facts, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. This is so because it is the province of an appellate court to pass on questions of law, not questions of fact; and that court, therefore, may not set aside a verdict on the ground of the plaintiff's contributory negligence unless, from the undisputed facts, it can see that the plaintiff has not exercised such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger. But, as we have seen, the trial judge possesses a much wider power. He cannot rest upon a conflict in the evidence, but must weigh and consider the evidence introduced by both sides and determine for himself the just conclusion to be drawn therefrom. Green v. Soule, supra.

It would subvert no useful purpose to state at length the facts of the case as they are shown by the record. After carefully reading the evidence touching the question of contributory negligence, we are convinced that fair and impartial men might reasonably differ in their deductions from the evidence, and we therefore cannot say that there is basis for the claim that the trial judge abused the discretion which the law has wisely vested in him.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

GOLD v. PHELAN et ux. (Civ. 3909.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 5, 1922. Rehearing Denied Aug. 1, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1922.)

1. Vendor and purchaser — 191—Right of purchaser to immediate possession must be expressed, or inferred from subsisting legal agreement or surrounding circumstances.

The intention of the parties that the purchaser shall have the right to immediate possession must be expressed, or be plainly inferable from some term of a subsisting legal agreement or the surrounding circumstances.

2. Brokers — 96—Real estate broker cannot execute binding agreement, or accept deposit from purchaser.

The authority of a real estate broker is only to produce a purchaser who is willing, able, and ready to contract on the terms prescribed, and the broker has no authority to execute any agreement binding on either of the parties, nor has he the right to accept a deposit from the purchaser, and when the purchaser pays money into his hands, the broker holds it as agent of the purchaser, and any misappropriation thereof is at the loss of the purchaser.

3. Brokers — 94—Authority to do acts other than assigned will not be inferred.

Authority of a real estate broker to do acts other than those assigned to him will not be inferred, though the seller has used such terms as "for sale" or "to sell" in employing the broker.

4. Brokers — 96—Vendor not bound by unauthorized acts of broker in selling property and collecting deposit.

Where plaintiff vendor authorized a real estate agent merely to sell her property, and the agent, without knowledge of plaintiff, sold the property to defendants, and collected a deposit, plaintiff was not bound by the acts of the broker, nor did she confirm any act of the broker by later signing a contract to sell the property to defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Action by Bessie Gold against Grover C. Phelan and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, of Pasadena, for appellants.

Hocker & Austin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This is a summary proceeding, brought to obtain possession of a house and premises which plaintiff alleged she was the owner of, and which she alleged defendants forcibly detained in the manner described in section 1160, Code of Civil Procedure. By the judgment possession of the property was directed to be delivered to plaintiff, and it was provided that the defendants pay damages in the sum of $224.14, with costs. From that judgment the defendants have appealed.

The main contention urged on this appeal is that the findings of the court are not sustained by the evidence. It appears from the testimony set forth in the record that early in the month of April, 1921, Ted Elliot was a real estate broker doing business in the city of Pasadena. There were several salesmen attached to his office. One of these, Randall, was known to the plaintiff as a customer in her husband's store. Plaintiff was the owner of a house and lot. The house was furnished and rented to a tenant. There was a mortgage incumbrance against the property of $1,200. Plaintiff testified that she told Randall, about two months before the making of the alleged sale hereinafter referred to, to "sell the property"; that the price was $3,500, and that the conditions were that at least $1,000 in cash should be paid by the purchaser, and that the remaining amount ($1,300) might be paid in installments of $30 per month, the purchaser to assume the mortgage indebtedness of $1,200. She testified that about the 12th of April a man named Holway, who was another salesman attached to the Elliot office, came to her place and said: "Don't you know, Mr. Randall, he sold your house." Plaintiff accompanied Holway to Elliot's office, where she met the two defendants and Ted Elliot. Elliot's office had already accepted checks from the proposed purchasers (defendants) in the amount of $1,000. At this meeting of the parties an alleged contract of sale was drawn up. This writing was awkwardly phrased and quite indefinite in many of its statements. For the purposes of this decision it may be treated as sufficiently expressing the intent of the parties and binding terms. Plaintiff and the defendants attached their signatures to the document as approving its contents, although the plaintiff testified that she could not read it, as she did not know how to read. It may be assumed, however, that she was made to understand the contents of the agreement, in so far as an intelligent person might be able to construe the contract. The preliminary portion of the agreement was as follows:

"We, the undersigned, as agents, have this date received from Grover C. Phelan and Emma H. Phelan the sum of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars, lawful money of the United States, being a deposit and part payment on account of a bargain and sale made from Bessie Gold, hereinafter known as the seller, to G. C. Phelan and E. H. Phelan, hereinafter known as the buyer, of a certain lot, tract, or parcel of land lying, situate, and being in the city of Pasadena county of Los Angeles, state of California, bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit: No. 245 Penn. St., Pasadena, California."

After setting forth the terms, which included the statement "$1,000 cash," the agreement proceeded to recite the following:

"Seller agrees to give a good title to the hereinafter described property or no sale. Taxes for the current years to be paid by buyer. Buyer agrees to pay all assessments levied subsequent to date hereof. The deposit received this date will be deposited in escrow to the credit of said seller. We, the undersigned, demand the Ted Elliot Co. of Pasadena to act as escrow agents, and the buyer and seller agree to give said Ted Elliot Co. of Pasadena, their written escrow instructions within three (3) days from date hereof. Seller agrees to pay Ted Elliot Co. 3 per cent. of purchase price dollars commission. If the remaining payments be not made according to this agreement and contract, the above-mentioned deposit will be forfeited, without recourse. If the title proves defective, or in case this contract is not fulfilled by the seller, said deposit to be returned."

Plaintiff, immediately after signing the contract, deposited with Elliot some papers, presumably a certificate of title and possibly a deed (as to which the record does not show clearly). Elliot collected the $1,000 paid by the defendants, by depositing checks given by them, to his account, and within a few days thereafter absconded and embezzled this money. Plaintiff was immediately advised by Randall to place her papers in escrow elsewhere, but after taking legal advice she took the documents away from the Elliot office and retained them in her own custody, where they thereafter remained. The defendants had timely notice both of the fact that Elliot had embezzled the $1,000 and of the fact that plaintiff had taken away the papers, which she had deposited in pursuance of the escrow agreement. The contract of sale contained another term which has not been quoted hereinbefore. That term, referring to the payment of the remainder of the purchase price amounting to $1,300, provided that the "buyer gives a trust deed mortgage to ($1,300) to Bessie Gold payable at $30 or more per months interest at 7% included and $1,200 mortgage." Being fully advised of all these matters, and without offering to make any payment whatsoever to the plaintiff, or to execute a mortgage or trust deed, the defendants went to the house which they proposed to purchase of the plaintiff, and, finding that the tenants had moved out, they entered through a rear door and took possession. The furniture of plaintiff, with which the house was supplied, they stacked in one room, and several months later caused it to be transported to a warehouse.

Whatever the authority of Elliot as agent may be said to have been, that authority was plainly revoked when, after the embezzlement of the money occurred, plaintiff withdrew her papers from the office of the escrow holder. After Elliot left, for a period of about a month, the attachés continued to maintain the office, paying the rent out of their own pockets; but it is plain enough that the business conducted by them was not the business of Ted Elliot. However, with full notice of the conditions which have been referred to, these defendants, after taking possession of plaintiff's house, delivered to Holway several checks for $30 each, which they claimed were in payment of the installments as they became due on the purchase price of the property. Two of these checks were offered to the plaintiff, who refused to accept them. Upon learning that the defendants had, without her consent, moved into the house, plaintiff made demand for possession of the house and premises, which demand was refused. Defendants continued to occupy the house, and this action was brought in September, 1921. The rental value was shown to be about $50 or $60 per month.

[1] No question is made as to the damages awarded being of a proper amount, assuming the right of the plaintiff to recover in the action. The appeal of defendants rests wholly upon the claim that a vendee, under an agreement of sale affecting real property, is given the right to take possession on the execution of the agreement. A number of authorities are cited as supporting this contention. These decisions proceed upon two assumptions, both of which must be present in order that the conclusion announced shall be sustained: (1) That a subsisting legal agreement to sell and purchase has been made; (2) that the intent of the parties that the buyer shall have the right to immediate possession shall be expressed or be plainly inferable from some term of the contract or the surrounding circumstances shown in evidence. In this case the plaintiff denied that she consented to give the defendants possession pending the conclusion of the sale, or that that matter was the subject of conversation between them. The alleged contract of sale contains no language indicating that possession was to be delivered to the buyer in advance of the performance of all of the acts necessary to complete the escrow.

[2,3] There is another reason which is conclusive against any right in the defendants to have possession of the property. The $1,000 which was agreed to be paid as the initial payment never passed into the hands of the plaintiff, nor into the hands of her agent. The authority of a real estate broker is only to produce a purchaser who is willing to contract with the seller upon the terms prescribed. Such a broker has no authority to execute any agreement binding either of the parties to the transaction, nor has he the right to accept money offered by the purchaser to conclude the sale. And when the purchaser pays money into the hands of the broker in such a case, the broker holds it as the agent of the purchaser, and not the seller, and any misappropriation thereof would necessarily be at the loss of the former and not the latter. Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) vol. 1, §§ 797, 814. And authority to do acts other than have been assigned to the broker will not be inferred, even though the seller has used such terms as "for sale" or "to sell" in employing the agent. Jones v. Howard, 234 Ill. 404, 84 N. E. 1041; Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616, 18 Pac. 758; Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 617; Grant v. Ede, 85 Cal. 418, 24 Pac. 890, 20 Am. St. Rep. 237; Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 Pac. 53.

[4] Applying the settled rule announced by these decisions to the facts in this case, it must at once be concluded that up to the time that the plaintiff signed the contract of sale, which was also an escrow agreement, she had not become bound by any act of Elliot or his employees in accepting a deposit on account of the purchase price of her property. Neither did she, by the making of the contract of sale, confirm any such act. She became bound only to the extent and in the manner which that agreement described, and as its effect might be limited by the acts of performance then and thereafter made by the vendees. It could not be successfully contended that, upon the signing of the combined contract and escrow agreement, plaintiff would have had the right to demand and receive from Elliot the $1,000 then on deposit. The transaction had not been completed. It was necessary for a deed to be made by the plaintiff, and apparently that title should be examined before the purchase price was paid. The $1,000 then was held by the escrow holder for the benefit of, and as the agent of, the purchasers. On the general subject of the duty of escrow holders see 10 R. C. L. p. 636, par. 17. A prerequisite to the right of the vendees to insist that plaintiff complete the transaction and make a deed in their favor was that the $1,000 should first be paid to plaintiff or her agent, or be left undisturbed in escrow. The payment of that amount of money or the existence of the deposit was essential to the keeping alive of the agreement to convey. At least, such payment should have been made or tendered within a reasonable time after the execution of the contract. The escrow holder embezzled the vendees' money, and the vendees never replaced the initial payment in the hands of any holder, nor tendered it to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's acts were such as to announce her repudiation of the agreement, and, under all the facts, would seem to have the effect of putting to an end any obligation on her part to convey the property. Under these conclusions, the acts of the defendants in taking possession of the property of the plaintiff were the acts of strangers, without right and without justification in law.

The judgment is affirmed.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal prosecuted from a judgment in favor of the respondents and against appellants in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by said Cora A. Murphy, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendants. The action was tried by a jury who rendered a verdict in favor of the respondents for the sum of $7,500. The accident which resulted in the injury to Mrs. Murphy occurred on the 12th day of June, 1918. At the time in question the appellants were common carriers of persons for hire between Yosemite Valley and El Portal. During the month of June, 1918, a certain insurance company was entertaining its various representatives, numbering some 300 or 400 persons, coming to California from various parts of the United States. A part of the entertainment of this body of persons included a trip to the Yosemite Valley. When the party was ready to leave the valley, the appellants provided an automobile or bus, in which Mrs. Murphy was a passenger. The road from Yosemite Valley down the canyon is very narrow and in some places rather steep. At a certain point in the canyon, where the road is but little wider than the width of the vehicles that travel over it, the driver of the bus in question ran it off the grade, causing it to overturn and injure a number of the passengers, Mrs. Murphy among them.

It is alleged in the complaint that the appellants did not exercise due care in handling the auto bus, and that it was equipped with defective steering apparatus. The evidence tends to show that the vehicle was an old truck changed into an auto bus, having seats running transversely across its body from side to side. The bus carried about 22 passengers on the day in question. It is, of course, conceded that the respondents made out a prima facie case when they showed the fact that Mrs. Murphy was carried as a passenger and that the injury resulted from the accident. The appellants seek to meet and overcome this showing by evidence tending to show that the bus was in good order and was properly handled, and that, in fact, the accident occurred through a failure of the roadway to sustain the heavy weight of the bus. The evidence shows that from a foot to 2½ feet of the outer edge of the roadway caved away at the point at which the bus went down. The respondents insist that the car was driven off the grade. The appellants claim that the embankment gave way under the rear wheels of the bus, causing the vehicle to go backward off the grade.

[1] The principal point made by the appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury. This point is not well taken. Whatever may be said of the showing by the appellants in this behalf, it is quite certain that there is an abundance of evidence in the record to sustain the verdict of the jury. They had the witnesses and the appellants before them, and had a very much better opportunity than an appellate court to determine their credibility.

[2] Another point made by the appellants is that the counsel for the respondents were guilty of prejudicial misconduct in persistently calling to the attention of the jury the assumed fact that the appellants were protected by insurance. It is possible that in a very gross case a court would be compelled to set aside a verdict, where it appeared that the matter was brought to the attention of the jury in an effort to prejudice it in rendering its verdict. However, there is no question but that a litigant is entitled to a fair and unprejudiced jury. A litigant has the right to ask a juror on his examination whether or not he is a stockholder in, or otherwise interested in, an insurance company which is interested in the outcome of an action. If this were not the rule, it is manifest that a plaintiff might be compelled to accept a juror who was a stockholder in a company who had rendered itself liable for such damages as might be awarded the plaintiff. Whether the acts of the attorney for the respondents, taken in connection with the charge of the court to disregard them, amounted to error, it appears that the error was harmless. During the examination of Mrs. Murphy she was asked who arranged the exposure of her foot for the photograph thereof. In reply it was stated, without objection, that this was done by the physician for the insurance company. We think this cured any error. It does not appear from the record that the attorney for the respondents had any ulterior or sinister motives in propounding his questions to the jury.

The next point made by the appellants is that the court erred in instructing the jury as to the burden of proof. The court fully, fairly, and completely instructed the jury that the burden of proof rested upon the respondents. There is no intimation in the instructions, so far as we can find, that this burden ever shifted. The instructions to which our attention is directed do not charge the jury that the burden of proof, to exonerate themselves by a preponderance of evidence, rests upon the appellants. Steele v. Pacific Electric Railway, 168 Cal. 375, 143 Pac. 718.

[3] There remains but one further point to be noticed in the case, and that is the instruction of the court with reference to nine of the jurors agreeing upon a verdict. With reference to this point it is sufficient to say that the jurors in this case were unanimous in their verdict in favor of the respondents. Therefore any error that may have been committed with reference to the nine jurors and their right to agree upon a verdict was immaterial. We do not wish to be understood as intimating that the instruction complained of is erroneous as an abstract principle. We leave the point undecided.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Petition for writ of mandate by W. L. Newby against G. W. Bacon, County Recorder of Alameda County. From a judgment directing the issuance of the writ, respondent appeals. Affirmed.

Ezra W. Decoto, Dist. Atty., and Donald McClure, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for appellant.

W. L. Newby, of Oakland, in pro. per.

TYLER, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment directing the issuance of a writ of mandate. The case is presented upon the judgment roll alone. It appears from the petition for the writ that respondent Newby was, in September, 1921, appointed by Hon. William D. Stephens, Governor of the state of California, to act as a notary public in and for the county of Alameda; that pursuant to such appointment, and in accordance with the law, he took his oath of office before the county clerk of Alameda county and executed his official bond, which was approved by Hon. J. S. Koford, a judge of the superior court of said county. Thereafter, and subsequent to such approval, Newby tendered the bond to the county recorder, appellant herein, together with the requisite filing fee, and with the request that the same be recorded. This request was refused. Upon such refusal the petitioner instituted this proceeding, and prayed that a writ of mandate issue, commanding appellant to forthwith file and enter of record said bond, or appear and show cause why the same should not be filed. Appellant demurred to the petition. The matter came on for hearing, and a peremptory writ issued directing appellant to forthwith file the bond for record. This appeal is from such judgment.

[1] In support of the judgment it is contended that the recorder is a purely ministerial officer, and as such it is his duty to record every instrument presented to him for that purpose, when accompanied by the proper filing fee. Appellant, on the other hand, seeks to justify his refusal to comply with the order upon the ground that the statute contemplates that the bond should have been approved by the judicial power of the county, and that such requirement is not met with by the act of a single judge, there being more than one in Alameda county. We see no force in appellant's contention. Section 799 of the Political Code, as originally promulgated by the Legislature in 1872, provided that:

"Each notary must execute an official bond in the sum of five thousand dollars, which bond must be approved by the county judge of his county."

At that time there was only one judge in each county, who was known as the county judge. Upon this condition being changed, the section was amended in 1880 by the interpolation of the words "judge of the superior court" in the place and stead of "county judge," as it originally stood. Upon the amendment of the statute the Legislature did not see fit to change the language to read "judges," as in the case of the approval of the bonds of county officers. Section 4022, Pol. Code.

[2] Under the present Constitution, whenever an act is to be performed by a judge of the superior court, and such judge is present at the place designated for the transaction of judicial business, and there assumes to transact such business, his acts may be construed as the acts of the court of which he is a judge. Von Schmidt v. Widber, 99 Cal. 511, 34 Pac. 109; Carter v. Lothian, 133 Cal. 451, 65 Pac. 962. Then, again, the Legislature often uses the words "court" and "judge" without discrimination, and such words will be construed as synonymous whenever it is necessary to carry into effect the obvious intent of the Legislature. Sartin v. Snell, 87 Kan. 485, 125 Pac. 47, 49, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 384; Commonwealth v. Mathues, 210 Pa. 372, 59 Atl. 961. Whether the term "court" is used as synonymously or interchangeably with "judge," and whether the act is to be performed by one or the other, is generally to be determined by the character of the act, rather than by such designation. Brewster v. Ludekins, 19 Cal. 162; Von Schmidt v. Widber, supra.

Here the manifest purpose of the approval of such bonds is that there shall be some means by which those interested may be assured that the bond tendered is sufficient in form and amount, and that it is so executed as to meet the test contemplated in the requirement, and this is accomplished by the act of a single judge as efficiently as if it were approved by all of the judges of the county. Considering the conclusion we have reached, it is unnecessary to discuss the powers and duties of the officer in question.

From what we have said, it follows that the judgment should be and it is hereby affirmed.

YARBROUGH v. ROSENBERG et al.
(Civ. 3912.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 5, 1922.)

Evidence —442(1)—Demurrer that written memorandum was too indefinite held properly overruled, since complete contract could be shown by parol.

A complaint alleging that defendants executed a written memorandum, "Rosenberg Co. * * * agree, for certain information regarding a 340 K. W. D. C. generator, to pay you the sum of $800.00 if the set is bought for $5,500.00, and to pay you the sum of $1,000.00 if the set is purchased for less than $5,000.00," was not demurrable on the ground that the contract did not contain the consideration to be rendered by plaintiff, in that the words "certain information" were too indefinite to describe what the service to be rendered by plaintiff was, for, as the writing was a mere memorandum, showing on its face that it did not express the whole contract, the full terms agreed on might be shown by parol.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by C. G. Yarbrough against Barnett Rosenberg and others, doing business as Rosenberg & Co. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hibbard & Kleindienst, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Turnbull, Heffron & Kelley, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff was awarded judgment in the sum of $800 upon an alleged contract made with the defendants. Defendants have appealed from that judgment, and here present the judgment roll, insisting that the complaint of plaintiff fails to state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action, and that their demurrer interposed thereto should have been sustained.

In paragraph III of his complaint plaintiff alleged that on the 20th of December, 1920, defendants executed a "memorandum" in writing wherein and whereby the terms of said agreement were set forth; said instrument being in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"Dec. 20, 1920. Mr. C. G. Yarbrough, 2019 Bay St., Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Sir: Rosenberg Co., 336 E. 3rd St., agree, for certain information regarding a 340 K. W. D. C. generator, to pay you the sum of $800.00 if the set is bought for $5,500.00, and to pay you the sum of $1,000.00 if the set is purchased for less than $5,000.00. Yours truly, Rosenberg & Co., by F. P. Arrousez."

It is further alleged that in consideration of said agreement plaintiff furnished to the defendants the information referred to in said memorandum—

"to wit, information where and when a certain 340 K. W. D. C. generator might be purchased. That the said information so furnished by plaintiff to the defendants was the same information and all of the information referred to in said memorandum aforesaid, and was all of the information required to be furnished and asked for by the defendants."

It was further alleged that defendants did purchase the generator for a sum less than $5,000, and that they had refused plaintiff's demand to pay for the service rendered.

Appellants insist that the written memorandum must be taken as representing the contract made between the parties, and that it is unenforceable because the consideration to be rendered by the plaintiff is not therein stated. The words "certain information," it is contended, are too indefinite to describe what the service to be rendered by the plaintiff was. The case of Talmadge v. Arrowhead R. Co., 101 Cal. 367, 35 Pac. 1000, and other decisions are cited to this point. The written memorandum (signed only by defendants) does not purport to represent fully the terms of the agreement, except that it does express the amounts to be paid by defendants in the different contingencies. The more complete terms of the contract are shown by the further allegations of the complaint, to which reference has been made. The case presented is like that considered in Kreuzberger v. Wingfield, 96 Cal. 251, 31 Pac. 109, where the court referred to a writing as a mere memorandum made by one of the parties, and held that it was competent for the opposite party to make oral proof of negotiations and conversations, and in that connection it was said:

"The rule is, of course, a familiar and salutary one that, when a contract has been reduced to writing, parol evidence is not admissible for the purpose of cutting down or adding to its terms. But, in order for this rule to have any application, the writing must be one which, by legal construction, shows upon its face that it was intended to express the whole contract between the parties. Naumberg v. Young, 44

N. J. Law, 338, 43 Am. Rep. 380; Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 327."

The demurrer was properly overruled. The judgment is affirmed.

DONAGHUE v. HAYDEN et ux. (Civ. 2451.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 3, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error — 1001(1)—Conclusion of jury cannot be disturbed, if enough evidence in record to sustain verdict.

Where there is enough evidence in the record to sustain the verdict, the conclusion of the jury cannot be disturbed.

2. Highways — 176—Attempt to drive car past another while motorcycle is approaching in opposite direction held gross negligence.

Attempt to drive a car past another while a motorcycle is approaching from the opposite direction constitutes gross negligence, and renders the driver liable for resulting damages.

3. Master and servant — 301(1)—Husband's negligent driving of wife's automobile held chargeable to her.

Evidence that a wife was the owner of a fruit farm and owned an automobile, which husband drove with her at the time of an accident, that he made his home on the farm and worked thereon without wages, and that on the day of the accident he was on his way to town to procure tobacco for himself and feed for pigeons belonging to a boy on the farm, held to sustain a verdict against her for injury caused by his negligence.

4. Evidence — 215(5), 265(2)—Witnesses — 379(4), 397—Voluntary return to county assessor, showing auto to be worth $50, held admissible as admission and in impeachment, but not conclusive.

In an action for injuries to plaintiff's car, caused by defendant, a voluntary return by plaintiff to the county assessor, showing his automobile to be worth $50, was admissible as an admission against interest, and as impeaching evidence, but was not conclusive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action by John Donaghue against George W. Hayden and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. L. Webber, of Napa, for appellants.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for respondent.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. [1] Action for damages growing out of the collision of two automobiles and a motorcycle. It appears that the respondent was traveling in his car from Napa City toward Carneros, when appellant Hayden, in another car, overtook him and attempted to pass on the left. At that moment a motorcycle coming down the road met them head on and collided with appellants' car. Appellant Hayden, in an effort to avoid the motorcycle, pulled over too far toward the right and engaged the left wheel of respondent's auto, overturning it and throwing it from the highway. The impact injured the respondent and his car. The jury found in favor of the respondent, and assessed his damages at the sum of $850. The judgment runs against both appellants. They appeal on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. However, it cannot be questioned that there is enough evidence in the record to sustain the verdict, and this fact, under a well-established rule, precludes this court from disturbing the conclusion of the jury.

[2] Even the testimony of appellant Hayden shows that he was attempting to pass the respondent at a moment when another vehicle was approaching. This was a clear violation of the law. It constituted gross negligence, and it rendered the driver liable. Conceding that there is any testimony from which the jury might have found that the respondent contributed to the accident, the jury had a right to reject it, and they evidently did so.

[3] The appellants insist that Mrs. Hayden is not liable. She was the owner of a fruit farm, and was running it in her own name. She owned the automobile, the stock, and all other ranch property used with the farm. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hayden testify that he went to town that day to procure tobacco for himself and feed for the pigeons. They testify that the pigeons belong to the boy, and that he keeps them on the farm. It is shown that appellant Hayden attends to marketing the pigeons, and that they yield about $75 per month. Appellant Hayden receives no wages from his wife. He merely lives at the farm as his home and works for her. Early in the history of the case, and evidently before he had appreciated the import of his admissions, he testified, in giving a deposition, that he went to town to procure family groceries. On the trial, however, he testified that he did not go on any business for Mrs. Hayden. But, from all the circumstances, including the care of the pigeons, the jury easily drew the inference that the car was being driven in Mrs. Hayden's interests. If he was making his home on the farm, and worked thereon, and received no wages, it is no harsh inference to say that it was her concern that he received a proper supply of tobacco. The verdict against her must be upheld.

[4] None of the instructions to which appellants object present any points open to serious debate. The same is true as to the evidence of values. The respondent subscribed a voluntary return to the county assessor, showing that the car owned by him was worth only $50. The appellants believe that the court should have instructed the jury that this voluntary return conclusively established, as against the respondent, a value of but $50. It was voluntarily made, and it constituted an admission against interest. As such, the court received it in evidence; also it was evidence by way of impeachment and was doubtless so treated by the jury. But, at most, it was not conclusive, and the court correctly instructed the jury thereon.

There are no other points in the case that demand notice.

The respondent moves the court to assess damages for a frivolous appeal. While it is possible that the appeal presents no serious questions, we are not prepared to say that it is frivolous. It was evidently prosecuted in the utmost good faith.

The judgment is affirmed.

BREYFOGLE v. TIGHE et al. (Civ. 2447.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 23, 1922. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1922.)

1. Fixtures ⇐35(2) — Evidence supported finding that signboard was not to become part of realty.

In an action against several defendants for conversion of a combined fence and signboard erected on plaintiff's land, evidence held to support finding that the fence and signboard were erected with right of removal, and did not become part of realty.

2. Trial ⇐396(1)—Findings on material issues need not follow pleadings.

Findings of the court on material issues need not follow the pleadings; but if, taken together, they are such that the court can say the ultimate facts result therefrom, they are sufficient.

3. Trial ⇐404(1) — Findings liberally construed in support of judgment.

Findings are to be given a liberal construction in support of the judgment.

4. Fixtures ⇐1—Test as to whether personal property attached to land becomes part of realty stated.

In determining whether personal property attached to land becomes a part of the realty, there are three general tests: First, annexation; second, adaptation or application to the use or purpose to which that part of the realty to which it is connected is appropriated; and, third, intention.

5. Fixtures ⇐4—Matters from which intention to annex personal property to land is inferred.

The test of intention to annex personal property to land is to be inferred from the nature of the article affixed, the relation and situation of the party making the annexation, the structure and mode of annexation, and the purpose for which it has been made.

6. Fixtures ⇐21—Transferee of interest in land held not to be innocent purchaser without knowledge as to circumstances of signboard's erection.

Where plaintiff and defendant, as joint owners of land, permitted the erection of a combined fence and signboard, with right of removal, and defendant exchanged his interest in the land for plaintiff's interest in the corporation which erected the sign, the fact of defendant's conveyance of his interest to plaintiff did not affect the right of removal of the board; plaintiff not being in the position of an innocent purchaser, without knowledge of the circumstances under which the structure was erected.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by W. R. Breyfogle against W. C. Tighe and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Harry I. Maxim and J. J. Coghlan, both of Madera, for appellant.

Fee & Ring, of Madera, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the defendants—

"unlawfully and with force broke into and entered upon the plaintiff's land and premises (lot 2 in block 40 of the city of Madera) * * * and took down and removed therefrom a certain combined fence and signboard then and there standing on, being attached to, and a part of said real property from said land, and converted said fence and signboard to their own use, to the damage of said plaintiff in the sum of $250, the value of said combined fence and signboard removed as aforesaid, and to the further damage to said real property in the amount of $75."

The answer in effect admits the entry and removal of the property but denies that such entry and removal were unlawful. Defendant Tighe alleges:

"That Tighe-Breyfogle Company is now and at all times in the amended complaint mentioned it has been a corporation * * * carrying on and conducting a general mercantile business, * * * and down to about the 1st day of March, 1919, plaintiff and defendant W. C. Tighe were stockholders, officers, and directors of said corporation, and during all of said times down to about the 26th day of March, 1919, said plaintiff and said defendant Tighe were the joint owners of the said lot 2 in block 40 aforesaid. * * * That * * * said Tighe-Breyfogle Company, for the purpose of advertising its goods, wares, and merchandise, caused to be erected" the signboard "which was thereafter used exclusively for said purpose by said corporation down to the time of the removal thereof." That about March 28, 1919, the corporation acquired from plaintiff all of the capital stock in the corporation then owned by him and that in consideration thereof the defendant Tighe conveyed his interest in said lot 2 to the plaintiff. "That at the time said deed of conveyance was delivered to said plaintiff by the said Tighe it was understood and agreed between the said parties that said corporation should have the right to maintain said signboard upon the said property aforesaid, to wit, lot 2 in block 40, so long as the same was mutually agreeable between the parties, or until said plaintiff desired to make use of said property for building purposes"; the corporation to pay plaintiff a monthly rental for the right "to maintain said signboard upon said lot of land aforesaid."

[1] The court found in accordance with the denials and averments of the answer, and further that the signboard was erected "with the express assent and consent of plaintiff herein and W. C. Tighe, the owners of said lot 2 in said block 40." While the evidence is conflicting, it amply supports the findings. The signboard was of galvanized iron, 48 feet in length, and, according to the various estimates of the witnesses, 8 to 12 feet in height. It was placed along the edge of the lot, which had no building upon it. It served the purpose of a fence, as well as that of a signboard. The plaintiff testified that it was erected primarily as a fence, but made higher than otherwise would have been necessary in order that it might be used as a signboard. The defendant Tighe testified that the structure was erected for use as a signboard, and not with the intention of making it a part of the realty; that he and plaintiff both consented to its being placed there by the corporation; that Tighe was at all times president and general manager of the corporation; that at the time he conveyed his interest in the lot to plaintiff the latter said "that the sign could stay there until he wanted to use the lot"; that a few weeks before the signboard was removed the plaintiff notified the corporation "that, if the sign wasn't removed in 30 days, it was Mr. Breyfogle's sign then." The signboard was not removed within the 30 days specified, but was taken away shortly after the expiration thereof. It was removed under the direction of defendant Tighe, acting in his capacity as president and general manager of the corporation, by the other defendants, who were employees of the corporation.

[2] Appellant contends that the answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. "It may be conceded that the answer is not a model of good pleading; but the plaintiff did not demur thereto, and the case was tried upon the theory that an issue was raised as to whether or not the signboard had become a part of the realty. For like reasons objection is made to the sufficiency of the findings. The findings follow the pleadings, and it is further found that the signboard was erected upon the lot with the "express assent and consent" of both the plaintiff and Tighe. Among the conclusions of law is found the following:

"That plaintiff Breyfogle is not the owner of said combined fence and signboard and has no interest therein."

The court did not expressly find that the signboard had not become a part of the realty. "It is not necessary that the findings of the court on material issues shall follow the pleadings. If the findings, taken together, are such that the court can say the ultimate facts necessarily result therefrom, they are sufficient." Tower v. Wilson (Cal. App.) 188 Pac. 87.

[3] Findings are to be given a liberal construction in support of the judgment. Price v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 169 Cal. 800, 147 Pac. 1175. Giving the findings in this case a liberal construction, it necessarily results therefrom that the signboard did not become a part of the realty upon which it was placed but retained its character of personal property.

[4, 5] In determining whether personal property attached to land becomes a part of the realty, there are—

"three general tests which may be applied: * * * First, annexation to the realty, either actual or constructive; second, adaptation or application to the use or purpose to which that part of the realty to which it is connected is appropriated; and, third, intention to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold." 11 R. C. L. 1059.

"The test of intention is to be given a broad and comprehensive signification. It does not merely imply the secret action of the mind of the owner of the property, nor need it be expressed in words; but it is to be inferred from the nature of the article affixed, the relation and situation of the party making the annexation, the structure and mode of annexation, and the purpose or use for which the annexation has been made, which, obviously, suggests that the other tests are really part of this comprehensive test of intention, and that they derive their chief value as conspicuous evidence of such intention." 11 R. C. L. 1062.

Applying these tests to the facts of the instant case, it is apparent that only the first supports appellant's contention. The signboard was annexed to the realty, but it was not adapted or applied to any use or purpose to which the realty was appropriated, nor, manifestly, was it the intention to make the signboard a permanent accession to the freehold. The corporation placed the signboard on the lot under license from the owners thereof, a license revocable by them at will. It would be highly unreasonable to conclude that the corporation intended it to become a permanent accession to the freehold when it was within the power of the owners of the lot to revoke the license immediately after the completion of the structure.

"Generally a building erected on the land of another by his consent or license does not become a part of the realty, but remains the property of the person annexing it, and may be removed by him." 11 R. C. L. 1083.

"He who has affixed improvements to land under a license from the owner is generally held to have a right to remove them within a reasonable time after the termination of the license. Bronson on Fixtures, § 106; 19 Cyc. 1056. An agreement for such right of removal is implied from the circumstances." Watterson v. Cruse, 179 Cal. 379, 382, 176 Pac. 870, 871.

[6] The fact of the conveyance by Tighe of his interest in the lot to appellant did not affect the corporation's right of removal; appellant not being in the position of an innocent purchaser, without knowledge of the circumstances under which the structure was erected.

It is claimed that the court erroneously admitted evidence of the intention and purpose with which the signboard was placed upon the lot. The contention is without merit, and no useful purpose would be subserved by a discussion of the matter.

The judgment is affirmed.

GARRETTE et al. v. GRANGERS' BUSINESS ASS'N. (Civ. 4198.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 30, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 28, 1922.)

1. Warehousemen — 34(9)—Negligence of warehousemen, storing wheat, held for the jury.

In an action against a warehouseman for loss of wheat, negligence of defendant warehouseman in not exercising proper care and inspection held for the jury, in view of the evidence.

2. Appeal and error — 1001(1)—Diligence or care required of warehouseman held a jury question, not reviewable.

In actions involving the negligence of a warehouseman, what constitutes ordinary diligence or care is a fact to be determined by the jury, where there is substantial evidence on which to submit such issue, and it becomes a question of law for the court on appeal only in the absence of such evidence.

3. Warehousemen — 34(10)—Instruction on burden of proof of negligence held not erroneous.

In an action against a warehouseman for the loss of wheat, an instruction that plaintiff must establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence, and, if the evidence is equally balanced, the verdict must be for defendant, held not erroneous, in view of the other instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by J. F. Garrette and others, doing business under the name of Garrette & Agnew, against the Grangers' Business Association. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Mastick & Partridge and Brooks Cox, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice pro tem. The defendant, Grangers' Business Association, a corporation, was the owner of and operated a warehouse on the shores of the Carquinez Straits, at Port Costa, Cal. On September 15, 1919, plaintiffs deposited in said warehouse for indefinite storage a quantity of wheat. During the evening of that day a section of the wharf or dock upon which the warehouse was built collapsed, precipitating part of plaintiffs' wheat into the water. Plaintiffs have sued defendant on its contract as a public warehouseman for the value of the lost wheat. The action was tried by the court sitting with a jury; the issue of fact being whether or not defendant was negligent, as a warehouseman, in the care of said wheat. The verdict was for the defendant, and from the judgment entered on said verdict plaintiffs have appealed.

Two grounds are urged for a reversal of the judgment, namely, insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, and erroneous instructions given to the jury on the question of burden of proof. The wharf or dock upon which said warehouse rested was constructed of wooden piling, and, from what may be gleaned from the testimony in the record, extended for a distance of 1,000 feet along the shore line and was 180 feet wide, the side of which projected for some distance over the water, so as to give access to vessels loading and unloading grain. The cause of the accident was due to teredo boring into the piling and so weakening it that this particular section collapsed.

The claim of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict is based upon the assertion, first, that the evidence shows that the defendant unnecessarily placed the wheat in the most dangerous part of the warehouse; and, secondly, that the evidence shows that no adequate inspection was made for teredo after it was known that the warehouse supports were infected.

[1] We are of the opinion that neither of these points are available to appellants on appeal, for the reason that they relate to the precise questions of fact which were submitted to and passed upon by the jury. The main issue before the jury was the one of the negligence of the defendant. On that issue there was a conflict of proof, and the verdict of the jury in favor of the defendant was equivalent to a finding that the defendant, as a warehouseman, exercised due care in the storage of said wheat and was free from negligence. The wheat was admittedly destroyed while it was in defendant's possession as a warehouseman, and it therefore became necessary for defendant to prove that, as a warehouseman, it had exercised such care in safeguarding plaintiffs' property as a reasonable and careful owner of similar goods would exercise. This it sought to do by offering proof as to the precautions it had taken.

The evidence shows that for several years previous to the accident it had maintained quite an extensive system of inspection; that every year it employed competent and experienced engineers to inspect the wharf and make necessary repairs; that for five years it had continuously employed a man to inspect the piling, and that he spent about one-half of his time underneath the wharf; that the teredo was a new enemy to the wharves in that vicinity; that they had never before been seen or known to exist in those parts until within a few weeks prior to the accident; that the wharf in question, and others in that locality, were built in fresh water, in which the teredo does not live, but that the drought in 1919 lowered the fresh water in the rivers, so that the salt water from the bay extended farther inland and carried the teredo with it; that in the middle of August, 1919, it was discovered by defendant that the teredo was attacking the piles, but that they were not present in dangerous numbers and were attacking only the piles in the deepest water, which was some distance from the point where plaintiffs' grain was placed. The evidence further shows that as soon as it was discovered that the piles in the deep water were being infected, defendant gave instructions to its engineers to use the necessary means to protect the wharf and make it safe. The owners of other wharves in that locality took the same precautions, but, nevertheless, several other wharves collapsed, following the accident to defendant's, all of which tended to show that the sudden attack of teredo was something that could not have been reasonably anticipated under the circumstances.

[2] Appellants contended, before the jury, as here, that certain means of inspection other than and in addition to those adopted by defendant should have been, but were not, employed by defendant in the inspection of said piles, and evidence was offered by plaintiffs to that effect. But the jury, to whom such evidence was properly addressed, decided, in rendering its verdict in defendant's favor, that defendant was not negligent in failing to employ such additional means of inspection, and that to have required defendant to have done so would have been to exact of defendant a higher and greater degree of care than the law demanded under the circumstances.

In actions involving the negligence of a warehouseman, the usual rule applies that what constitutes ordinary diligence or care in a given case is always a fact to be determined by the jury, in view of surrounding circumstances, where there is substantial evidence upon which to submit such an issue. It is only in the absence of such evidence that it becomes a question of law to be determined by the court. 27 Rul. Case Law, p. 1004. In Runkle v. Southern Pacific Milling Co., 184 Cal. 715, 195 Pac. 398, 16 A. L. R. 275, it was said by the Supreme Court, in effect, that it was idle to discuss, upon appeal to that court, the weight of evidence upon which the judgment rested, and that it was only when the facts of a given case are not in any event or in any view of the case susceptible to the inference deduced therefrom that the question of negligence becomes one for the sole consideration of the court rather than one of fact for the determination of the jury. Under the rules, and for the reasons above stated, we are not at liberty, we think, to interfere with the finding of the jury.

[3] The first instruction given to the jury, following certain preliminary remarks by the court, was the following:

"In all civil cases, what the law calls the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff. In other words, in all cases, in order to entitle himself to a verdict, the plaintiff must establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence. Putting that as correctly as I can, * * * you will proceed to consider this matter, and you will ask yourselves whether the plaintiff has established his case by a preponderance of the evidence, and, if you believe him to have done so, the verdict will be in his or its favor. If, after a full consideration, you find it equally balanced, as it were—no preponderance one way or the other, just as persuasive in behalf of the plaintiff as in behalf of the defendant—it would in that case be your duty to return a verdict in favor of defendant, as, of course, even more would it be your duty to do so if, after a full consideration of all the evidence heard here, you find that it preponderates in favor of defendant. * * *

Later the court gave the following instruction:

"You are instructed that the plaintiffs have established a prima facie case, if they have established that they delivered the wheat to the defendant and that the defendant failed to return it. The burden is then upon the defendant to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the loss of the wheat occurred without any negligence on the part of said defendant."

And still later, and in conclusion, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"* * * You will retire, and bear in mind the instructions just given you, keeping in mind more especially and particularly—not that any one instruction is to be more regarded than any other, but keeping in mind more particularly, however—all that I have said to you, and all that you have heard counsel say, bearing upon the question here, as to whether, prior to receiving the wheat, which admittedly was destroyed by the giving way of the wharf, the defendant used reasonable care and caution in protecting it against destruction. If he did, as already stated, the verdict in this case ought to be in favor of him, the defendant. If, on the other hand, you find, from a preponderance of the evidence heard in this case, that the defendant did not exercise so high a degree of care in the protection of the grain, and that its destruction was due to failure upon its part so to do, your verdict will be in favor of the plaintiff. You are to consider, as bearing upon this question of reasonable care, or lack of it, all the evidence heard here. * * *"

Appellants now contend that the court erred in giving the first instruction to the jury relating to the burden of proof, for the reason, as appellants claim, that all of the essential elements necessary for plaintiffs to prove in order to establish a prima facie case were stipulated to and admitted by the defendant, and consequently left no existing issue to which such an instruction might have been directed. Appellants argue that, although later the jury was correctly instructed as to the burden of proof on the issue of defendant's negligence, still, at the end of the charge, the court gave another instruction, which had the effect of nullifying the correct one. In support of their contention appellants cite the cases of Howard v. Worthington (Cal. App.) 195 Pac. 709, and Noce v. United Railroads (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 819.

After examining these instructions as a whole, and considering all of them in the light of the evidence, we are of the opinion that whatever conflict there may have been, if any, was not of such a serious character as to mislead the jury, and consequently does not require a reversal of the judgment. It cannot be denied but that the first instruction given, if applicable, correctly stated the law, and it must be also conceded that its application was proper in this case, if there was any material issue at all left open to proof by plaintiffs which was not covered by the stipulation of the defendant.

In this respect it appears from the record that counsel for plaintiffs deemed it necessary for plaintiffs to prove the nature of the contract pursuant to which the delivery of the wheat was made, for the reason that defendant, while admitting the fact of delivery and value of the grain, had taken the position that the warehouse receipt constituted the contract by which the liability of defendant was fixed, and that, since there had been no receipt delivered for the grain which was lost, there was no contract between the parties. For the purpose of proving such contract, plaintiffs offered as a witness the president of the defendant company, and examined him concerning the nature and character of the receipts usually issued by the defendant company, and some of those receipts were thereupon offered and received in evidence, and read to the jury over the objection of the defendant. Next called as a witness was one of the plaintiffs, by whom it was sought to identify certain weighmaster's certificates, which it was claimed covered the deliveries of part of the wheat in question. While this latter evidence was being given the following proceedings occurred:

"Mr. Partridge (interrupting): I don't want any misunderstanding about it.

"The Court: I don't think there is any. We can clarify it right now. You will admit, and practically have already admitted, I believe, that some of these receipts refer to some of the wheat which was not destroyed, which was on the wharf at the time certain other delivered wheat—

"Mr. Williams (interrupting): I don't know whether it was on the wharf, if your honor please.

"Mr. Partridge: I will prove it.

"The Court: Very well, go on and prove it. * * *

"Mr. Partridge: Now, if your honor please, I will offer in evidence this certificate.

"Mr. Williams: To which we urge the same objection, that it is already covered by an admission.

"The Court: Overruled. I don't think that it is. I thought so up to a moment ago."

Two certificates were thereupon offered and received in evidence, and read to the jury, over the objection of defendant. It would therefore seem obvious, we think, that there were two disputed issues connected with plaintiffs' case, upon which the parties had not agreed, and which the court and counsel for plaintiffs apparently did not consider covered by the stipulation, and therefore that it became necessary for plaintiffs to offer proof on those two points before a prima facie case could be established. That being so, it would follow that the first instruction given upon the question of burden of proof was directly applicable to the facts.

If it be conceded, however, as claimed by appellants, that all essential elements of plaintiffs' case were covered by stipulation and that said instruction was therefore not applicable, we still believe that the error could not have misled the jury, in view of the correct instruction which followed. There the jury was plainly and positively instructed that the burden of proof was upon the de-defendant to establish by a preponderance of evidence that it was free from negligence. The situation here, we believe, is similar to the one presented in Alloggi v. Southern Pacific Co., 37 Cal. App. 72, 173 Pac. 1117, and in our opinion should be controlled by the same reasoning.

We do not consider that the last instruction given by the court conflicted with the others, or that it was, indeed, erroneous. The court had already, by the second instruction, given the jury the correct rule, to the effect that the burden was upon defendant to show that it was free from negligence. That defense, then, having become an issue, was to be determined by the same rule as any other affirmative defense, namely, by a preponderance of the evidence. And the effect of the instruction complained of, as we understand it, was merely to tell the jury that, if the jury found that the evidence preponderated against such negligence, its verdict should be for the defendant; but, on the other hand, if it found that it preponderated in favor of such negligence, its verdict should be for the plaintiffs. The instruction complained of, as we read it, made no reference to the question of burden of proof.

Finding no substantial error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

GAINER v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 4207.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 5, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1922.)

1. Carriers ⇐348(14) — Instruction on last clear chance held not warranted by the evidence.

In an action by a passenger on a street car, where plaintiff, an aged woman, walked to the front exit before the car had stopped, and was warned by the motorman to wait until the car stopped, an instruction on the doctrine of the last clear chance held improper, as not supported by evidence showing that the motorman knew, or should have known, that plaintiff would attempt to alight while the car was in motion, especially where the motorman's attention was occupied with the operation of the car.

2. Negligence ⇐83 — Doctrine of "last clear chance" defined.

To make a defendant liable, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of plaintiff, it must appear that the defendant was not only aware of the danger in time to have avoided the injury, but must have known that plaintiff was oblivious of his danger and unable to avoid it, and further that the defendant failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Last Clear Chance.]

3. Trial ⇐191(9)—Instruction held not objectionable, as assuming facts in issue.

An instruction that it was the duty of the motorman and conductor to make sure, by looking to see, that plaintiff had alighted from the steps of the car, and if the jury find that either or both of them neglected to perform such duty, and that as a consequence of such failure plaintiff was injured, etc., verdict should be for plaintiff, was not erroneous, as assuming that the car had come to a stop and was again started before plaintiff had alighted, especially where other instructions clearly submitted such issue to the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Margaret A. Gainer against the United Railroads of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Wm. M. Abbott, Kingsley Cannon, and Cyril Appel, all of San Francisco (Ivores R. Dains, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

John H. Crabbe, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant, United Railroads of San Francisco, a corporation, from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff, Margaret A. Gainer, whereby plaintiff was awarded the sum of $5,000 damages for personal injuries received by her while alighting from a street car operated by the defendant company. Insufficiency of the evidence and erroneous instructions are the grounds upon which the appeal is taken.

The accident occurred about 8 o'clock in the evening of February 6, 1917, at the corner of Mission and Oliver streets. The car on which the accident occurred was one of the so-called suburban type; the front and rear entrances (or exits, as the case may be) on the right side being allowed to remain open, so that passengers might enter or leave the car at will without operating gates. On the left side, however, the gates were closed. Plaintiff, who at the time of the accident was 65 years of age, had been riding in the inclosed part of the car, and as it neared her stopping place she went to the front platform and requested the motorman to stop the car at Oliver street. The motorman proceeded to check the speed of the car, and, as he was bringing it to a gradual stop, plaintiff approached the steps at the front right exit.

What actually occurred thereafter is in dispute.

Plaintiff claims that, after the car came to a complete standstill, she stepped down upon the steps of the car, and was about to step to the ground, when the car started with a jerk and threw her to the ground, severely injuring her; that the car moved 3 or 4 feet, and then stopped again. She was then given assistance. Defendant claims that plaintiff attempted to alight from the car while the same was in motion, and was thereby thrown to the ground and injured. The main issue before the jury seemed to be whether or not the car was moving at the time plaintiff attempted to alight therefrom. In that state of the record the trial court gave to the jury certain instructions submitting an issue on the doctrine of the last clear chance. They were as follows:

"I instruct you that, if you find that the defendant's motorman saw the plaintiff in a position where she was in danger of falling off the car, and if you further find that the motorman realized such danger, and, by exercising ordinary care under the then existing circumstances, could have avoided injuring the plaintiff, but failed to do so, then your verdict must be for the plaintiff, Margaret A. Gainer;" and "I instruct you that one having knowledge of the dangerous situation of another, and having a clear opportunity, by the exercise of proper care, to avoid injuring another, must do so, notwithstanding the latter has placed himself in such situation of danger by his own negligence. If, therefore, you should find from the evidence, that the defendant's motorman saw the situation in which plaintiff was before the accident and appreciated the danger she was in, and had the opportunity, by the exercise of proper care, to avoid injuring the plaintiff, and failed to exercise such care, or failed to do what reasonable prudence would dictate he should have done to avoid injuring the plaintiff, the defendant is liable, and your verdict must be for the plaintiff, Margaret A. Gainer."

Appellant contends that the evidence was and is an insufficient predicate for the application of the doctrine of the last clear chance. The testimony concerning which that doctrine may be invoked, if at all, was that given by the motorman, Nelson. He testified, while testifying on direct examination as a witness for defendant, that, as the car approached Oliver street, plaintiff came out of the inclosed part of the car, turned to her right and walked over towards the steps; that she put one foot on the first step, and he looked over his shoulder and said, "Wait until the car stops, lady;" that this warning was given when the car was 100 feet from Oliver street. On cross-examination the witness testified as follows:

"Q. You could have reached out and grabbed Mrs. Gainer, and shut off your power with the other hand? A. No; I used my right hand for air and the left hand for the controller. Q. Supposing you let the air go * * * and reached for Mrs. Gainer—you could have pulled her back? A. Yes; I could have pulled her back, but then it would not have been safe. Q. Would not have been safe for who? A. Would not have been safe to check up the car. Q. It would have been safe to let her in that position? A. As long as she was holding onto the bars on each side it would have been safe. The car was running smooth. Q. For 100 feet you were checking up? A. Yes. * * * Q. In other words, it had not impressed you that the lady was in a position of danger and she was not going to step off and you could give your attention to the car? A. Having warned her once, I did not think she would walk off the car before the car stopped. Q. Why did you warn her at all? A. I warned her when I saw her put one foot on the lower step—from the first. Q. You mean on the top step from the platform, the first step from the platform? A. Yes. Q. When she was down in that position, could you have reached her readily with your right hand, if you had seen fit to do so? A. Well, in the way I held my air, I could not. Q. Suppose you had taken your hand off of the air control, could you not have done so? A. Yes; if I had taken my hand off the air control. Q. What would have been the result if you had taken your hand off of the air control? A. Well, I would have gone past Oliver street, and I would not have a chance to stop my car."

[1] In the recent case of Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., 184 Cal. 662, 195 Pac. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117, it was held that in cases of negligence it was prejudicial error to give an instruction upon the subject of the last clear chance, where there was not sufficient evidence to justify submitting such an issue to the jury. In commenting upon that point the court said:

"This instruction may have governed the jury in arriving at a verdict for the plaintiff, and in the absence of evidence to support it, must be held fatally prejudicial. The jury may, under the evidence, have found the decedent guilty of contributory negligence. A verdict for plaintiff, after a finding of such negligence, could not be supported, excepting under the doctrine of the last clear chance."

[2] That doctrine, briefly stated, is that in order to make the defendant liable, notwithstanding contributory negligence of the plaintiff, the defendant must not only be aware of the danger in time to avert it, but must also know or have reason to believe that the plaintiff is oblivious of the danger, and is in a position where he cannot extricate himself from it, and that under such circumstances the defendant fails to exercise ordinary care and prudence to avoid the injury to plaintiff. Read v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 197 Pac. 791; Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., supra; Arnold v. S. F., O. T. Rys., 175 Cal. 1, 164 Pac. 798; Basham v. Southern Pacific Co., 176 Cal. 320, 168 Pac. 359; Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. 369, 190 Pac. 36.

It would therefore seem, in the instant case, that the judgment cannot be sustained unless the evidence established the fact that plaintiff placed herself in a position of danger, unknown to her, from which she could not extricate herself, and that the motorman, after perceiving her perilous position, failed to exercise ordinary care and prudence to avoid injury to her. Of course, in order to give application to the doctrine of the last clear chance, it must be assumed that plaintiff attempted to alight from the car before it came to a standstill.

After an analysis of the evidence, we are of the opinion that the facts proved do not present a case involving the doctrine above mentioned. The actual danger to plaintiff, as we take it, was not in approaching the steps of the car, nor in standing upon them while the car was moving, but in attempting to alight from the car before it had stopped. And there is no evidence to show, we think, that the motorman knew or that he could have had reason to believe, from the mere fact of plaintiff's position in standing on the steps, that she intended to step from the car before it reached a standstill. In this respect it may be stated that it is not at all unusual for passengers riding on streetcars, operated without gates, to approach the exits and stand upon the steps, while the car is being slowed down, so that they may be ready to alight as soon as the car stops. The motorman testified that he admonished plaintiff to wait until the car stopped before she attempted to alight therefrom. If that testimony shall be believed, it would not be reasonable to hold, we think, that the motorman knew, or had reason to believe, that plaintiff would ignore such admonition and persist in stepping from the car before it had stopped, particularly in view of the fact that he further testified, in effect, that he thought such admonition would be heeded. If, on the contrary, his testimony shall not be accepted as truthful, and we assume that no such admonition was given, then, as above stated, it could hardly be said that he knew or could have reasonably believed, from the fact of plaintiff's position in standing upon the steps, that she would ignore the natural precautions which she would ordinarily take for her own safety, and step from the car while it was in motion.

Moreover, under the circumstances as here shown, we are not prepared to say that merely because a passenger approaches the exit of the car and stands upon the steps, while the car is approaching a stop, that it would be prudent for a motorman, after warning said passenger not to alight until the car had stopped, to leave his post, allow his car to run uncontrolled, in possible violation of the rights of other passengers and the public using the street in the pathway of the car, in order to prevent such passenger from stepping from the car before it had stopped. For the reasons above stated we are constrained to hold that there is not sufficient evidence to show that the motorman did know, or have reason to believe, that plaintiff was in imminent danger of being injured. Consequently the doctrine of the last clear chance did not apply.

The case of Bisinger v. Sacramento Lodge (Cal. Sup.) 203 Pac. 768, cited and relied upon by respondent, does not, we think, apply to the facts of this case. In that case, the application of the doctrine of the last clear chance was neither discussed nor decided. The case was decided upon the theory, as we understand it, that as a matter of law, the only negligence which proximately caused the accident was that of the defendant and that the act of the plaintiff, which appellant claimed constituted contributory negligence, was not the cause of the injury.

[3] The final contention of appellant is that the court, in giving instruction No. XI to the jury, "erroneously assumed that the car in question had come to a stop and was again started." Said instruction was as follows:

"I charge you that it was the duty of the defendant's motorman and conductor on the car to make sure by looking to see that plaintiff had alighted from the steps of the said car before they started the car, and if you find that either, or both, of them neglected to perform such duty, and that, as a consequence of such failure the plaintiff was injured without fault on her part, then your verdict must be for the plaintiff, Margaret A. Gainer."

While this instruction may be open to some criticism, a review of the same in the light of the other instructions given would indicate that the language used did not presume to predetermine the issue in this case. The clear purport of the instruction, we think, was to make clear the duty of the conductor and motorman under all such situations and then said, "if you find that either or both of them neglected to perform such duty, and that, as a consequence" thereof, the injury resulted, the finding should be for plaintiff. Not only this interpretation safeguarded the rights of appellant, but, as above stated, other instructions given were sufficiently clear to correct any assumption of a pre-determination of this issue. Several instructions were given to the effect that, if it should be the finding that the respondent stepped from the car while the same was in motion, the verdict should be for the defendant. While, as above stated, the instruction complained of may be open to some criticism, still, taking the instructions as a whole, we do not believe that defendant suffered substantial prejudice thereby.

Holding, as we do, that the giving of the instructions upon the doctrine of the last clear chance was prejudicial error, the judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. McCOY. (Cr. 595.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 17, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 14, 1922.)

1. Criminal law §1159(4)—Truth or falsity of testimony of prosecutrix held exclusively for jury and trial court.

In a prosecution for rape, under Pen. Code, § 261, the truth or falsity of testimony of prosecutrix was exclusively for the jury and trial court.

2. Criminal law §1088(17)—Affidavits, not a part of the record, cannot be considered.

An affidavit stating that prosecutrix's testimony was false, not presented in support of any motion to the trial court, other than the request to include it in the transcript, was not properly a part of the record on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Alvin M. McCoy was convicted of rape, and from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

W. H. Hatton, of Modesto, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

The prosecutrix was 37 years old at the time of the alleged offense. She had been married twice, once in Arkansas, and once in New Mexico. Both husbands were dead. She was the mother of six children. The eldest, a son of 20 years, was married and lived in his own home. The other children lived with the prosecutrix. She and the defendant first met at Modesto in the latter part of August, 1920. They were both working in a milk condensary at that time. The prosecutrix testified that early in November the defendant proposed marriage and that she accepted; that the defendant said he desired to keep the marriage secret for business reasons, and it was therefore agreed that the marriage ceremony be performed in Berkeley; that the defendant introduced a man under the name of Williams, whom they authorized in writing to procure a marriage license for them; that on the 15th day of November, after nightfall, she and defendant motored from Modesto to a city, which the defendant said was Berkeley, where they met Williams and two other men in an office, and there went through the form of a marriage ceremony, after which she and the defendant returned to Modesto the same night; that thereafter she and the defendant maintained the relation of husband and wife, under the belief on her part that they were legally married and that the defendant was her husband; and that she was induced to maintain such relation by the artifice of the pretended marriage which she had been induced to enter into by the defendant. A daughter and a daughter-in-law of the prosecutrix testified that the defendant stated to them, during the early part of the year 1921, that he and the prosecutrix had been married, and that he had the marriage license and certificate in his possession.

The defendant denied all of the foregoing testimony, except that as to sexual relations, which he admitted. He testified that the prosecutrix told her children and her daughter-in-law in his presence that he and the prosecutrix were married, and that he did not deny it. He testified, and the prosecutrix denied, that such relations commenced the second day after the parties became acquainted, and continued up to the middle of November, 1920. Both testified that such relations were maintained for several months after November 15th. Several witnesses testified that the defendant gave the prosecutrix checks signed by him and made payable to her as "Minnie McCoy." He denied this, but testified that he signed and gave her checks with the name of the payee left blank, knowing that she would insert the name "Minnie McCoy" as payee. In pursuance, apparently, of the plan to keep the marriage secret, the parties did not live together in the same house until February, 1921, but during that time the prosecutrix frequently spent the early part of the night with the defendant in his room, where they continued their sexual relations. In February the defendant went to live with the prosecutrix in her home with her children. He and the prosecutrix there slept in the same bed and her 3 year old girl slept with them. A few months later, after the prosecutrix had become pregnant, the defendant left her. There is other evidence tending to contradict and impeach the testimony of the prosecutrix, but the credibility and weight thereof was within the exclusive province of the jury and the trial court. Williams and the other men claimed to have been present at the pretended marriage could not be located, and the prosecutrix could not locate the office where the ceremony was performed, saying that she did not know that it was in Berkeley, but that defendant told her that it was in that city; that she had never been in Berkeley before.

The only point made by appellant, based on the record, is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment.

"Rape is an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, * * * where she submits under the belief that the person committing the act is her husband, and this belief is induced by any artifice, pretense, or concealment practiced by the accused, with intent to induce such belief." Pen. Code, § 261.

It is not contended that the facts related by the prosecutrix, if true, would not warrant defendant's conviction under this section, but that her testimony is absolutely false. Citation of authorities is not necessary to show that the truth or falsity of her testimony was exclusively for the determination of the jury and the trial court.

After judgment and notice of appeal, at the time of settlement of the transcript on appeal, counsel for appellant presented to the court the affidavit of the prosecutrix, in which she stated that all of her testimony relative to the pretended marriage was false and untrue, and asked that the affidavit be included in the transcript. The affidavit was not presented in support of any motion addressed to the trial court, other than the request to have the same included in the record on appeal. The affidavit is not properly a part of the record on appeal, and this court has no jurisdiction to consider it. If the facts therein stated are true, the remedy rests with the pardoning power. People v. Mooney, 176 Cal. 105, 167 Pac. 696.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

VANDERVORT v. GODFREY et al.
(Civ. 4233.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 19, 1922. Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 14, 1922.)

1. Husband and wife ⇨131(3)—Real estate deeded to married woman deemed her separate property in absence of evidence to contrary.

Where no evidence was offered to rebut the presumption arising under Civ. Code, § 164, property conveyed to a married woman must be deemed her separate property.

2. Husband and wife ⇨119(1) — Loan by daughter to mother, with which she purchased property in her own name, held her separate property.

Where a married woman, owning as her separate property real estate in the purchase of which she had used money belonging to her daughter by a former marriage, sold the property and purchased other property, taking title in her own name in order to secure the daughter, to whom she then gave a note, the loan from the daughter, if the transaction constituted a loan, was the wife's separate property, in view of Civ. Code, § 167.

3. Husband and wife ⇨268(1)—Obligation as guardian of children by former marriage is a personal obligation.

A married woman's obligation as guardian of minor children by a former marriage for money obtained from their father's estate was a personal and not a community obligation.

4. Husband and wife ⇨118—Property held to come by descent, and hence separate property.

If a married woman, using money belonging to her children by a former marriage, was entitled to retain the share of one of the children on his death, the money came to her by descent, and was her separate property.

5. Husband and wife ⇨248½—Money acquired before coverture not community property.

Money obtained by a married woman before coverture, however obtained, was her separate property, and not community property.

6. Husband and wife ⇨131(3)—Presumption that property conveyed to wife is separate property must be overcome by convincing evidence.

The presumption, under Civ. Code, § 164, that real estate conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing is her separate property, prevails, unless overcome by clear and convincing proof.

7. Husband and wife ⇨249—That husband did not tell wife he was giving her property conveyed to her did not make it community property.

Where a deed was taken in the name of a wife with her husband's express consent, the fact that the husband did not tell her he was giving the property to her did not make it community property, where all the circumstances indicated an intent that the property should be her separate property.

8. Husband and wife ⇨249—Change of purpose after date of conveyance cannot affect character of property.

The character of property as separate or community property must be determined as of the date of the conveyance, and when it was then intended that it should be the wife's separate property, a subsequent change of purpose 10 years later, and when a creditor was on the point of recovering judgment against the wife, could not change its character.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Clara B. Vandervort, as administratrix of J. H. Vandervort, deceased, against Emma L. Godfrey and Frank A. Godfrey, in which the first-named defendant, as administratrix of the second-named defendant, was substituted in his place. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. T. Kendrick and J. H. Ardis, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued in equity as a judgment creditor of the defendant Emma L. Godfrey to set aside a deed made by said defendant to her husband and codefendant herein. Plaintiff had sued the defendant Emma L. Godfrey for damages for tort resulting in the death of her husband. During the course of the trial, and on the day previous to the entry of verdict against her, the said defendant, at the request and suggestion of her counsel, and for the purpose of defeating plaintiff in the collection of the judgment which was then anticipated would be entered against her, deeded all her property over to her husband without any consideration. Plaintiff, claiming that this was a fraud upon her, as the property conveyed was all the separate property of the defendant Emma L. Godfrey, brought this action to have the deed set aside and to impress upon and enforce her lien represented by the judgment. The trial court found that the property was the community property of Emma L. Godfrey and her husband, and entered judgment in their favor.

The facts of the case material to this appeal are that prior to October 15, 1907, the defendant Emma L. Godfrey, who was then a widow, obtained from the estate of her deceased husband the sum of about $4,500. Believing herself entitled thereto as the natural guardian of her two minor children, she thereupon appropriated and used for herself the sum of approximately $1,500 belonging to each of said children. On the 15th of October, 1907, she married the defendant Frank A. Godfrey, and on the 10th day of December immediately following she bought in her own name the so-called Covina ranch, the purchase price of which was paid wholly from her own moneys and the moneys which she had thus appropriated as guardian of her two minor children. The title was taken in the name of the wife; it was subsequently sold, and, on January 11, 1911, with the proceeds thereof, they purchased the Corona property, which is the property in suit. For this property $2,800 was paid as follows: $2,000 by the delivery of a mortgage which ran to the wife alone, and which had been received by her in part payment for the Covina property; $800 paid by check signed by the wife alone, and drawn on her individual account in bank. On January 31st immediately following this transaction the wife gave her own personal note to her daughter, acknowledging an indebtedness of $1,500; the wife adding to the note the following:

"This money belongs to my daughter, Alice Lee Rocker, which was left her from the estate of her father, Joe Rocker, and which I have not settled with her."

Mrs. Godfrey's testimony as to these transactions is as follows:

"One-third of that belonged to my son and one-third to my daughter ($1,500 was received from her first husband's estate). They were minors when that estate was closed, and it went into my hands as their guardian. I never did settle with my son with reference to his share. Thinking that I had a right to, I used that money in the purchase of the Charter Oak or Covina ranch. When that ranch was sold, I took back a $2,000 mortgage; that mortgage was used in the purchase of the Corona property. During all of that time that money was considered by me as being money which I owed to the children. I never had settled with them at all, and then, when I made the Corona deal, I settled with the daughter by giving her a $1,500 note."

The daughter testified that the first time that she discussed with her mother the matter of the money due her from her father's estate was when her mother purchased the Corona property and the note was given to her. The husband testified that this money was borrowed by Mrs. Godfrey from her daughter before he and Mrs. Godfrey were married. No other witnesses were examined. So far as this testimony is concerned, the proof is that the mother appropriated to herself the funds belonging to her two minor children before she married the defendant Godfrey; that without any arrangement with either of her two children she used a portion of this money (how much does not appear) for the purchase of the Covina property, and thereafter sold this property and from the proceeds thereof, and not otherwise, purchased the property in suit; that thereafter she executed a note to her daughter, evidencing her own personal indebtedness of $1,500, but, according to her own testimony made no settlement with her son, who was deceased some time prior to the trial of the action.

[1-4] So far as the Covina property is concerned, it appears that the title was taken in the name of the wife, and that when it was sold she took in part payment therefor a mortgage of $2,000 in her own name. As to the Covina property, no evidence of any nature was offered to rebut the presumption arising from section 164 of the Civil Code that property conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing is her separate property. We must conclude, therefore, that the Covina property was the separate property of the wife. When she used the proceeds of this sale in the purchase of the Corona property, and took a deed thereto in her own name with the consent of her husband, the same presumption arose as to the title to the Corona property. To rebut this presumption the respondent relies upon the claim that the property was purchased by money borrowed by the wife during coverture; but, as we have seen, if any money was borrowed in the sense that a loan was made from the daughter, it was obtained upon the sole credit of the wife and not upon the credit of the community. As guardian of her two minor children the wife's obligations for the money obtained from their father's estate was a personal obligation. If the minor son's share was legally retained by her after his death, it was money coming to her by descent and hence her separate property. As to the $1,500 obtained from her daughter, it appears without any conflict that the deed and mortgage on the property were taken in the wife's name alone, for the purpose, it is said, of securing the daughter for her loan of $1,500. Now, this can be so only upon the theory that the property was then intended to be the separate property of the wife, and that the obligation to repay her daughter was her individual obligation, and not binding upon the community. The property of the community is not liable for the contracts of the wife made after marriage, unless secured by a pledge or mortgage thereon executed by the husband. Section 167, Civ. Code. If, therefore, this property had been taken by the parties as community property, it would not have been liable for the obligation of the wife to pay to her daughter. To avoid this result, and to secure the daughter for her loan, the parties deliberately and intentionally made the property the separate property of the wife. The evidence is thus clear that the loan, if it can be called such, whereby Mrs. Godfrey obtained the money from her daughter, was made upon the mother's individual credit. The loan, therefore, became the separate property of the wife. Flournoy v. Flournoy, 86 Cal. 286, 293, 24 Pac. 1012, 21 Am. St. Rep. 39; Dyment v. Nelson, 166 Cal. 38, 40, 134 Pac. 988; Farmers' Exch. Nat. Bank v. Drew (Cal. App.) 192 Pac. 105, 106; Moulton v. Moulton, 182 Cal. 185, 189, 187 Pac. 421.

[5] This relates only to the $1,500 obtained by Mrs. Godfrey from her daughter. As to the rest of the consideration paid for the property in suit, the case is clear. If the money of the minor son was used in its purchase, it was money obtained before coverture by Mrs. Godfrey, and did not under any line of reasoning become community property. Lenninger v. Lenninger, 167 Cal. 297, 305, 139 Pac. 679. In the latter case the claim was made that the wife had before her marriage entered into a business partnership with the man who subsequently became her husband; that out of said partnership she had unlawfully misappropriated funds to her own use, which after the marriage she had employed in the purchase of a piece of property. Some time thereafter, upon the dissolution of the marriage, the husband claimed that this property was a part of the community; but the Supreme Court held that, no matter how the wife had acquired the money before marriage, it was her separate property.

[6-8] Furthermore, the presumption declared in section 164 of the Civil Code, arising from the written instrument, controls, unless overcome by clear and convincing proof. Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 646, 649, 77 Pac. 657. The evidence in this case is that the deed to the property in suit was taken in the name of the wife with the express consent of the husband. The only evidence offered to rebut the presumption that it was her separate property was the testimony of Mr. Godfrey to the effect that he did not tell his wife that he was giving the property to her. This may be true, and still the parties may have intended that the property should be the separate property of the wife, and all the circumstances of the case indicate that this was their intention. The property was really purchased from moneys which the wife had in hand, and the husband in fact had nothing to give. For a period of more than 10 years the deeds, the mortgages, and the bank account were all carried in the wife's name with the husband's consent. The wife had no thought of deeding the property to her husband until advised to do so by her counsel, to avoid the verdict in the action for tort. The husband had no thought that the property was anything but the separate property of the wife until counsel advised him that, because the purchase price had been borrowed after his marriage, the property belonged to the community. Thus, some 10 years after the transaction, the husband, upon advice of counsel, changed his intention as to the wife's interest in the property. The character of the property must be determined as of the date of the conveyance. If at that time the parties intended that it should be the wife's separate property, no subsequent change of purpose is material. See, generally, Miller v. Brode, 186 Cal. 409, 199 Pac. 531.

VICE et al. v. MORRIS. (Civ. 4202.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 3, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1922.)

- 1. Appeal and error ⇨193(9)—Point that complaint fails to state cause of action may be raised for first time on appeal.

Where the complaint as finally amended wholly fails to state a cause of action, this point may be raised for the first time on appeal.

- 2. Deeds ⇨188—Complaint held to sufficiently allege lack of mental capacity.

A complaint in an action by a widow to set aside a deed made by her deceased husband, alleging that at the time of the execution of this deed grantor was possessed of insane delusions that his wife was trying to poison him and get possession of his property, and if he left his property to his minor son his widow would get it and it would be improperly managed, was sufficient, though it was not alleged that grantor was entirely without understanding.

- 3. Appeal and error ⇨1001(1)—Verdict supported by substantial evidence not disturbed.

Where the verdict finds any substantial support in the evidence, the judgment based thereon will not be disturbed.

- 4. Deeds ⇨211(1)—Evidence held to support verdict of lack of mental capacity.

In an action to set aside a deed on the theory of lack of mental capacity of grantor, evidence held to support a verdict setting aside the deed.

- 5. Deeds ⇨68(1½)—To avoid, grantor need not be entirely without understanding.

To avoid a deed on the ground of insanity, the grantor need not be entirely without understanding.

- 6. Cancellation of instruments ⇨51—Request for instruction on grantor's lack of mental capacity properly refused.

In an action to set aside a deed on the theory of grantor's lack of mental capacity, defendant's requested instruction that "prejudices, dislikes, antipathies, however ill founded, or however strongly entertained, cannot be claimed as insane delusions, nor is every delusion an insane delusion," held properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; E. J. Butler, Judge.

Action by Gladys Vice, as administratrix, etc., substituted for Grace L. Clifford, deceased, and another, against Sadie L. Morris. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. C. Cowgill, of Sonoma, and Percy King, Jr., of Napa, for appellant.

Wallace Rutherford, of Napa, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice pro tem. George B. Clifford executed two deeds, dated August 24, 1918, and November 7, 1918, respectively, purporting to convey to the defendant, Sadie L. Morris, certain real property situate in Napa county. Clifford died on June 22, 1919. This action was commenced by his surviving wife, individually and in the capacities of guardian of her son and executrix of Clifford's will, to set aside those deeds, upon the ground of the insanity of Clifford. The action was tried by the court sitting with a jury. A general verdict was rendered for the plaintiffs, and judgment entered accordingly. The defendant, Sadie L. Morris, has appealed.

Clifford, the grantor, and Grace L. Clifford, the plaintiff, were married on May 17, 1912, and there was born to them one child, Gerald B. Clifford, who, at the time of his father's death, was five years of age. Clifford and his wife lived unhappily, having separated on some five different occasions. Finally, on April 2, 1919, Mrs. Clifford, as the result of a divorce proceeding commenced by her, was granted an interlocutory judgment of divorce from Clifford, upon the ground of extreme cruelty, and was awarded the custody of the child.

Three grounds are urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment, namely, that the amended complaint is fatally defective, insufficiency of the evidence to prove that Clifford was insane, and error in the instructions to the jury.

[1] Appellant claims that the amended complaint fails to state a cause of action, because it contains no allegation that the grantor, at the time of the execution of the deeds, was "entirely without understanding." It should be stated, however, that appellant did not demur to the complaint, and, so far as the bill of exceptions discloses, did not make any objection whatever to the admissibility of any part of the proof upon that or any other ground. It may therefore be assumed that the case was tried by the defendant upon the theory that the amended complaint was good. However, as stated by appellant, if the amended complaint wholly fails to state a cause of action, this point may be raised, even for the first time, on appeal, and we have therefore proceeded to examine the points made by appellant against the sufficiency of the amended complaint.

[2] It is alleged that for two years prior to Clifford's death he was "physically unwell and mentally incompetent; that during all of said time he brooded over his physical condition, and was possessed of many delusions." Among the delusions alleged are that his wife was untrue to him; that she was endeavoring to acquire his property and deprive him thereof; that in the event of his death his son would not be taken care of by his wife, and that if he left his property to his son it would be improperly managed; that his wife and her family were endeavoring to poison him, in order to acquire his property. It is further alleged that, "while acting under said insane delusions hereinabove mentioned and while so mentally incompetent," etc., said deeds were executed. The above allegations, we believe, are sufficient in law to create an issue of insanity, and also to sustain the judgment as rendered, if those allegations have found support in the evidence. In the Estate of Redfield, 116 Cal. 637, 48 Pac. 794, it is said:

"It is commonly held that, aside from those cases of dementia where the patient has not mental power to form any conceptions, whether true or false, of the relations of things, the true test of insanity is mental delusion; that, if a person persistently believes supposed facts which have no real existence, and against all evidence and probability conducts himself upon the assumption of their existence, he is as to that belief under a morbid delusion, and delusion in that sense is insanity."

While in the Redfield Case, supra, the delusions alleged and proved were held to be insufficient to invalidate the will, because they related to subjects foreign to the testamentary act, yet it may be taken as the law of that case that, if insane delusions do relate to the persons or objects affected by the testamentary act, or if they relate to the kindred or property of the testator, or to the disposition of his property, they may be held sufficient to invalidate the testamentary act. Here the amended complaint, in effect, alleges that the deeds in question were the product of insane delusions, and it is obvious, we think, from the nature and character of the delusions alleged, relating as they do to the family and property of the grantor, that, if proved, they had a direct bearing upon the very matters and things concerning which the grantor, in the disposal of his property, should have had a sane and rational mind.

Under such circumstances, it was not essential, in our opinion, that there should have been a direct allegation that the grantor was "entirely without understanding." We do not consider any of the cases cited and relied upon by appellant (More v. Calkins, 85 Cal. 177, 24 Pac. 729, Castro v. St. Geil, 110 Cal. 292, 42 Pac. 804, 52 Am. St. Rep. 84; Jacks v. Estee, 139 Cal. 509, 73 Pac. 247; and McNeese v. McNeese, 37 Cal. App. Dec. 452¹) in point for the reason that in none of them was the question of delusory insanity involved. The distinction drawn between the two classes of cases is made apparent in Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 377.

[3] The evidence on the issue of insanity

admittedly presents a conflict, and therefore, if the verdict of the jury finds any substantial support in the evidence, the judgment based thereon will not be reversed. Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 630, 178 Pac. 510.

[4] The proof offered by plaintiffs on the question of insanity extended beyond the limits of the particular delusions alleged in the complaint and tended to show general insanity. It appears from the testimony of Mrs. Clifford that Clifford's mind began to fail at the time of the birth of the child, and from that time on he seemed to grow gradually more excited and irrational. She related many incidents which occurred during their married life, which, it is claimed, tended to show insanity. In this she was corroborated by the testimony of her mother and sister. Some of those incidents were as follows: During the infancy of their child, it became necessary to have a minor operation performed upon it, and Clifford, with no apparent reason, became enraged, went out of doors, cursing the baby because it was born, packed up his things, and went away for a month; if the baby cried, he would rush into the house in a frenzy and charge his wife with attempting to kill it; that when he got angry he would tremble, his face would turn an "ashy" color, and he would pull his hair, grit his teeth, and distort his face; that he quarreled incessantly with his wife about the household affairs, including the care of the baby and its clothes, during which he would violently curse her; that on three different occasions he took a frying pan away from her in which she was frying meat and threw it into the ash can; that he would go for periods of time without speaking to her, and never wanted to see anybody else; that he would accuse her of "doping" his food, and refused to eat it; that he would very often throw away his food; that he would become angry over things which happened many years before, and would throw things from the table into the sink; that he refused to eat food which her mother had sent to her, because he said that it was poisoned, and demanded that she taste it first, and if he did not feel well he would, charge her with having made him sick and trying to get rid of him, for the purpose of trying to get his property; that on various occasions he would become enraged without any reason, and would pace up and down the floor and yell; that he said he would never leave anything to his boy, for the reason that her folks would get it, and that if he did leave property to his son that it would be improperly managed. It was further testified to by other members of the family that he would make all manner of disturbance, so that the baby could not sleep; that he would slam doors, talk as loud as he could, and walk up and down the floor; that he would "throw

A witness named Reeves testified that at times Clifford was irrational and that he (Clifford) believed that his food was being poisoned. The notary public before whom the deeds were acknowledged testified that when Clifford acknowledged the deeds he acted in a very peculiar manner, as if he were laboring under a severe strain and did not know what he was trying to do. Four other witnesses, who were old acquaintances of Clifford, testified as to his irrationality, and in support of their opinions stated, among other things, that they had noticed a marked change in his mental condition; that he seemed to be much bothered in mind; that he failed in his physical and mental condition during the last year of his life. While all of the testimony given in support of plaintiffs' case has not, for the sake of brevity, been narrated, we believe that the foregoing statement of the evidence is sufficient to show that the verdict of the jury is amply supported.

[5] Appellant's final point concerns the instructions to the jury. In this respect it is contended that the instructions given on the question of insanity omitted the element contended for by appellant, namely, that in order "to avoid a deed on the ground of insanity the grantor must be 'entirely without understanding.'" This is substantially the same objection that was urged against the sufficiency of the amended complaint, and which, as we have already pointed out, is without merit. We, therefore, do not deem it necessary to repeat the discussion. We have examined the court's charge to the jury, and, in our opinion, the law was not only correctly stated therein, but the charge was sufficiently comprehensive to cover all of the legal points involved, including the necessary mental qualifications required by law for a person to execute a valid deed or will.

[6] The only other specific complaint made in the appellant's brief about the instructions is that the court refused to give the following instruction proposed by the appellant:

"Prejudices, dislikes, antipathies, however ill-founded, or however strongly entertained, cannot be claimed as insane delusions, nor is every delusion an insane delusion."

This is merely an excerpt from the opinion in Estate of Kendrick, 130 Cal. 360, 62 Pac. 605, and it omits the two sentences following said excerpt, which are essential to its meaning and understanding. In the form proposed the instruction was properly refused.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HOWARD et al. (Cr. 620.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, June 28, 1922.)

1. Larceny — 68(3)—Evidence held sufficient to justify submission to the jury of guilt of garage keeper.

In a prosecution for theft of automobiles, evidence held sufficient to warrant submission to the jury of the guilt of defendant, who operated the garage where the stolen cars were found.

2. Larceny — 64(1)—Finding of stolen goods in possession of one who gives false account as to them is presumptive evidence of guilt.

Where stolen goods are, immediately or soon after being taken, found in possession of a person who gives a false account, or refuses to give any account, of the manner in which he came into possession thereof, such possession is presumptive evidence of guilt.

3. Larceny — 64(1)—Evidence held insufficient to warrant conviction of certain defendants.

In a prosecution for the theft of automobiles, evidence that certain defendants were found in the sleeping quarters over the garage where the stolen cars were found held insufficient to warrant conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

William Howard, Arthur Fields, Walter Corbett, and C. A. Wilkins were convicted of grand larceny, and they appeal. Affirmed as to defendant Corbett, and reversed as to the others.

William Howard, Arthur Fields, Walter Corbett, and C. A. Wilkins, (Frank C. Thomas, of Sacramento, of counsel), for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendants were by information jointly charged, and thereunder tried, for the crime of grand larceny, and were convicted of the crime so charged. They and each of them appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying their motion for a new trial.

The defendants appeared for trial without an attorney, having previously, and at the time of their arraignment upon the charge alleged against them in the information, refused to accept the offer of the court to appoint an attorney or attorneys to conduct their defense, preferring themselves to manage the trial of their case, which they did. The ground upon which they base their claim to a reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and, after a careful reading of the evidence, we have been convinced that the point must be sustained as to three of the defendants.

The property alleged in the information to have been stolen by the defendants was a Willys-Knight touring car automobile, of the value of $1,780, and the property of Dr. J. H. Haile, of the city of Sacramento, in which place the alleged larceny is charged to have been committed. It appears that on the night of the 16th of October, 1921, the car mentioned in the information was stolen and driven away from the garage of Dr. Haile, at 2319 N. street, in said city. The larceny was immediately, upon the discovery of the theft, reported to the police department. A few days later, the car, stripped of nearly every equipment of an automobile, except the engine, was found in a garage in the town of Florin, in the county of Sacramento. It further appears that, near the time at which the Haile car was stolen, an automobile belonging to one A. W. Clifton had been stolen from his garage at Colonial Heights, near the city of Sacramento, and that Clifton had reported the theft to the police. Clifton, on discovering his loss, proceeded to look about the immediate neighborhood for some possible clue which might lead to the discovery of the whereabouts of the car, when he found on and picked up from the street, at a distance of about 200 feet from his garage, a package of written documents, among which were some tax receipts; the latter being for the payment of taxes on the premises at 3030 First avenue, Sacramento, and in the name of "Carl Smedin." All these papers Clifton turned over to the police. The matter of the investigation of the theft was assigned to Police Officer Dill, who immediately proceeded to the premises referred to in the tax receipts. Inquiring first at a nearby corner grocery as to the identity of the owner or occupant of said premises, the officer learned that the said premises had recently been purchased by Carl Smedin, and that the latter was at that moment at or near the grocery store; the groceryman pointing him out to the officer. Smedin and a man named Boutin, then in Smedin's company, were placed under arrest, handcuffed together, and taken to the premises by the officer. Leaving Smedin and his companion, still handcuffed as indicated, on the outside of the house, the officer entered the building, went to the second story thereof, and there found the defendants asleep in one room; Wilkins and Howard lying on the floor, and Fields and Corbett together in a bed. He awoke and placed the four under arrest.

The first or ground floor of the building was used as a garage and the upper story as a sleeping room. On the first floor or the garage part of the building the officer found the Clifton car, and in the second story, in different places therein, found certain missing parts of Dr. Haile's car. These parts consisted of the battery, dashboard, four tires, tubes, rims, carburetor, choke wire, headlights, and a new license plate, the latter bearing the number 589,319, being the number assigned to Haile's car by the state motor vehicle department. All these parts were of a Willys-Knight car, and were sufficiently identified by Dr. Haile and others well acquainted with his car as parts belonging to the automobile stolen from the doctor as above explained. Smedin was not charged with the larceny of the car or any participation therein, but testified for the people, stating that, a short time before the date of the arrest of the defendants, he rented the premises at 3030 First avenue, where the Clifton car and the automobile parts belonging to the car of Dr. Haile were found by the officer, to the defendant Corbett; that the latter stated that he desired to use the lower floor as an auto repair shop and the upper floor as a sleeping apartment. Smedin testified that Corbett said to him, at the time he leased the premises, that he (Corbett) might permit his "partners" to live "up stairs" with him, to which suggestion Smedin replied that that would make no difference to him—that Corbett might allow any person he desired to occupy the sleeping apartment with him. Smedin further stated that he knew nothing about the Clifton car, or the parts taken from the Haile car, or how or by whom they were brought to the garage.

Corbett, the only one of the defendants testifying in the case, declared that he and Smedin, a few days prior to the time that he and the other defendants were arrested, entered into a partnership for the purpose of conducting at the premises in question an auto repair shop; that Smedin was to finance the enterprise, while Corbett, who is an auto repairer by occupation, was to do the mechanical work. He testified that Smedin brought the mechanical equipments taken from the Haile car to the premises at 3030 First avenue in a truck on the Saturday preceding the arrest of the defendants, but that he did not know where or under what circumstances Smedin obtained the parts. On his cross-examination, however, it was shown, and, indeed, Corbett admitted, that at the preliminary hearing of the charge he swore that he had no connection with the premises where he and his codefendants were arrested, that he had never leased said premises, that he was stopping there only temporarily with the consent of Smedin, and most of the time while there was engaged with the latter in carrying on the nefarious business of "bootlegging," and also in seeing how much liquor he could drink. At the trial he admitted that the testimony so given by him at the preliminary examination of the charge was false, but explained that thus he told a falsehood about his connection or want of authoritative connection with the premises, because he was in fear that, if he admitted his true connection therewith, he would be arrested and prosecuted for "bootlegging."

[1] The above involves, substantially, a statement of all the important testimony received at the trial. As to the defendant Corbett, we think the evidence sufficient to make the case one for the jury. The verdict implies that the jury found that he was, as Smedin testified, the lessee of the building in question, and as such had sole possession of it and the contents at and prior to the time at which the parts of the Haile car referred to were found in the upper story thereof.

[2] It is well settled that, while "evidence of the recent unexplained possession of stolen property, standing alone, is not sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty of larceny" (People v. Boxer, 137 Cal. 563, 564, 70 Pac. 671, 672; People v. Nichols, 39 Cal. App. 29, 34, 177 Pac. 861), yet it is equally settled that where goods have been feloniously taken, and they are immediately or soon thereafter found in the possession of a person, who gives a false account, or refuses to give any account, of the manner in which he came into possession thereof, "proof of such possession and guilty conduct is presumptive evidence * * * that he stole the goods," and, we may add, if, as perhaps was true in this case, the goods had been feloniously taken by means of a burglary such proof would also be presumptive evidence that "he made use of the means by which access to them was obtained" (People v. Lang, 142 Cal. 482, 76 Pac. 232; Davis v. People, 1 Park C. R. [N. Y.] 447; Knickerbocker v. People, 57 Barb. [N. Y.] 365; Regina v. Exall, 4 Fost. & F. 923; Walker v. Commonwealth, 28 Grat. [Va.] 969; Methard v. State, 19 Ohio St. 363; Wharton's Criminal Law, § 763 et seq.; People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511, 15 Pac. 102; People v. Smith, 86 Cal. 238, 24 Pac. 988). In the last-named case the court said:

"The evidence of the recent possession of the stolen property, together with the defendant's statement and the circumstances surrounding the transaction, were sufficient to warrant the jury in their verdict" of guilty.

The case made against Corbett comes squarely within the rule stated above.

[3] As to the defendants other than Corbett, we cannot find in the evidence sufficient reason for holding that they were in any measure or sense responsible for or connected with the commission of the crime charged in the information. There is absolutely no proof disclosed by the record that Fields, Howard, and Wilkins, or either of them, took any part in the stealing of the Haile car, or that they had any hand in taking the parts of the stolen car found at the premises in question. All that was shown as to those three defendants was that they were found asleep at the premises in the room in which Corbett was also at the same time found asleep, and in which the mechanical equipments of the Haile car were found. This circumstance may be considered to be sufficient to justify a suspicion that they were mixed up with Corbett in the larceny of the car, but it is obviously wanting in sufficient probative effect to justify their conviction of the crime charged. They were not shown to have any interest in the premises other than as mere guests of Corbett. There is not a particle of evidence, other than the mere circumstance of their presence at the premises where parts of the stolen car were found at the time of the arrest, that they were in a prearranged criminal league with Corbett to steal automobiles or the Haile car. It certainly would involve a proposition quite perilous to the liberty of many decent and law-respecting citizens if it were true that the mere circumstance that a person may be found in the company of a person known to have committed a larceny was to be regarded as legally sufficient to establish his complicity in the commission of such crime. But that circumstance alone is not sufficient to establish guilt, and, as that is all that was shown against the three defendants we are now referring to, it is very clear that nothing approaching a legal case of guilt was made against them.

Accordingly, as to the defendant Corbett, the judgment and the order are affirmed, but, as to the defendants Fields, Howard, and Wilkins, the judgment and the order are reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

PEOPLE v. FONG. (Cr. 621.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 4, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 2, 1922.)

1. Criminal law § 572—Defendant not required to establish alibi beyond reasonable doubt or by preponderance of evidence.

No burden is cast on defendant to establish his alibi beyond a reasonable doubt, or by the preponderance of the evidence, and it is sufficient to demand an acquittal if the jurors have a reasonable doubt whether at the time the offense was committed he was at some other place.

2. Criminal law § 572—Jury not confined to defendant's evidence in passing an alibi.

The jury are not confined to the consideration of the evidence for defendant in determining whether a reasonable doubt exists as to his alibi, but are in duty bound to weigh all the evidence in the case.

3. Criminal law § 1172(6)—Instruction intimating that reasonable doubt as to alibi must arise from defendant's testimony held harmless.

An instruction, intimating that a reasonable doubt as to alibi must arise from defendant's evidence, was harmless, where none of the testimony received on behalf of the people in the slightest degree supported the claim of alibi.

4. Criminal law § 1186(4)—Instruction that it was sufficient to establish alibi by preponderance of evidence, or sufficient to raise reasonable doubt, not reversible error.

Where the court charged that if the evidence to establish an alibi was sufficient to create a reasonable doubt of defendant's presence at the place where the crime was committed, or at some other place where he could not have committed it, the jury should acquit, a further instruction that defendant was not required to prove his defense of alibi beyond a reasonable doubt, but that it was sufficient if he proved it by a preponderance of the evidence or sufficiently proved it to create a reasonable doubt, though it might better have been omitted, was not reversible error in view of its alternative form and the fact that the jury was repeatedly told to acquit if there was any reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting new trials except where there has been a miscarriage of justice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

George Fong was convicted of an offense, and he appeals from the judgment and order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

Joseph M. Raines, of Fairfield, and Thomas J. Horan, of Vallejo, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of committing "an act of sexual intercourse with one Clara Tom, a female person under the age of eighteen years and not the wife of said George Fong," and he has appealed from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends for a reversal for one reason only, and that is that the court misdirected the jury as follows:

"The defendant pleads that he is guilty of the offense charged and then interposes a defense that is known in law as an alibi, that is, that he was not at the place where the crime charged is alleged to have been committed, but at another place, and I instruct you that such a defense is as proper and legitimate if proved as any other, and all the evidence bearing upon that defense should be carefully considered by the jury.

"I further instruct you that if this evidence which is for the purpose of establishing an alibi is sufficient in your minds to create a reasonable doubt whether defendant was present at the place where the crime charged is alleged to have been committed, or at some other place where he could not have committed it, then you should give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and acquit him.

"I instruct you that the defendant is not required to prove his defense of alibi beyond a reasonable doubt to entitle him to an acquittal; it is sufficient if he prove it by a preponderance of evidence or to sufficiently prove it to create a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury as to his presence at the time and place when and where the crime is alleged to have been committed."

[1] Appellant objects only to the italicized portion of the instruction, and manifestly, it should have been omitted. There was, of course, no necessity for saying anything about proof "beyond a reasonable doubt" or "by preponderance of evidence," as no such burden is cast upon the defendant in his efforts to establish an "alibi." The law is well settled—and we need cite no authorities thereon—that it is sufficient to demand an acquittal if the jurors have a reasonable doubt whether the defendant at the time the offense was committed was at some other place where he could not have committed it, but it is to be observed that in this very instruction the trial court very clearly so instructed the jury. The trouble is, of course, that the concluding portion is erroneous and renders the whole instruction somewhat obscure and confusing; but we are satisfied that the error should not be considered prejudicial to defendant and fatal to the judgment.

[2, 3] As far as the intimation that the reasonable doubt as to the alibi must arise from the defendant's evidence is concerned, the error could do no harm. Manifestly, the jury were not confined to the consideration of the evidence for the defendant in determining whether a reasonable doubt existed as to the alibi, but were in duty bound to weigh all the evidence in the case. However, there can be no pretense that any of the testimony received on behalf of the people could in the slightest degree support this claim of appellant; so that if any doubt did exist as to the alibi it would necessarily be the result of the testimony offered by appellant.

[4] But whatever criticism may be justly leveled at said instruction, it at least presents an alternative condition the existence of either of which demanded an acquittal. That is, the jury were instructed to acquit if the defendant established his defense by a preponderance of the evidence or if he created a reasonable doubt as to the alibi. Hence it would follow that if the jury had a reasonable doubt upon the subject the instruction demanded an acquittal. This is the true doctrine and what appellant contends for, and it really matters not that the instruction set forth an additional condition that would also demand an acquittal.

Moreover, if it may be said that the instruction standing alone might be considered uncertain and confusing, when the whole charge to the jury is regarded it seems apparent that there could have been no misunderstanding as to the true doctrine. The jurors were specifically, clearly, and repeatedly instructed that if there existed any reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt it was their duty to acquit him. This was equivalent necessarily to an instruction that if they had a reasonable doubt of the alibi they must acquit, since he could not be guilty if he were at another place when the crime was committed. Among the instructions along this line given by the court was the following:

"I instruct you that the law raises no presumption whatever against the defendant, but, on the contrary, every presumption of the law is in favor of his innocence; and in order to convict him of the crime alleged in the information or any lesser offense which may be included in it, every material fact necessary to constitute such crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt; and if you entertain any reasonable doubt upon any single fact or element necessary to constitute the crime, it is your duty to give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and acquit him.

"A defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal.

"The fact that the defendant has been arrested and charged with an offense, and an information having been filed against him, creates no presumption whatever of his guilt. It is incumbent upon the prosecution not only to overcome the presumption of the defendant's innocence, but also the defendant's guilt must be established by evidence sufficiently conclusive to exclude any reasonable supposition of his innocence. The testimony must establish affirmatively his guilt to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt; and unless the evidence introduced in this case is such that it proves to your entire satisfaction and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty, he is entitled to an acquittal by your verdict."

Again, if we concede that the instruction was erroneous, there is no apparent reason why the case does not call for the application of section 4½, art. 6, of the Constitution. Appellant does not contend that the verdict was unjust or not supported by the evidence, nor is it at all probable that the result would have been different if the criticized instruction had not been given.

Appellant does not, indeed, set out any of the evidence in his brief, but contents himself with a somewhat fragmentary synopsis of the testimony in his behalf on the asserted alibi without even referring to the page of the transcript where the testimony might be found. We have, however, carefully examined the entire record and discovered therein abundant reason for believing that the verdict is just and should not be disturbed.

We are not unmindful of the cases cited by appellant, particularly People v. Morris, 3 Cal. App. 1, 84 Pac. 463, wherein a similar instruction to the one herein was condemned; but we may add that it does not appear that the cause was reversed on that ground, and, besides, it was decided before the adoption of said section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

The judgment and order are affirmed.
